Something of the vicissitudes of the life of Mexico may be gained from a brief glance at a chronology of important events in the country of a hundred revolutions. After the subjugation of the Aztecs by the Spaniards, Spain attempted to rule the country by enslaving the natives and inducing the colonists to marry native women in order that a new race with European blood in it might be established. Various plans of government were tried, and finally the country was named New Spain and made a vice-royalty, 64 viceroys ruling over it between 1535 and 1821. Spain's purpose in retaining the country was chiefly to exploit it without regard for the future of the natives, but the natives were in practically a continuous state of rebellion. In 1808 Napoleon shattered the military power of Spain and incidentally deprived it of the source of its power over the natives of Mexico. The natives then had to decide whether they would follow the usurper, Joseph Bonaparte, the revolutionary junta or the captive king. But a taste for freedom created a desire for more, and in 1810, under the priest, Don Miguel Hidalgo, the creoles rose against what was left of the power above them. Thereafter the principal events were as follows:

1811. Hidalgo was defeated, captured and executed.
1813. His successor, another priest, Morelos, proclaimed the independence of Mexico.
1815. Morelos executed.
1821. After six years of revolution there was a compromise between Iturbide, a creole general against the revolutionists, and Guerrero, the leader of the revolution, and an independent limited monarchy was decided on. The monopolists refused to abide by the terms. The viceroy sent a force against Iturbide. The viceroy was deposed and another was sent who made peace with Iturbide, recognizing Mexican Independence. This viceroy died and the home government repudiated his agreement.
1822. The first Mexican congress met. Santa Anna proclaimed the republic. Iturbido sent a force against him. Iturbide proclaimed a monarchy, with himself emperor.
1823. Iturbide betrayed and deported. He was induced to return and was then shot.
1824. Constitution modeled on that of the United States adopted.
1828. After four more years of revolution, emerged victorious.
1828-33. Spain defeated in an attempt to recapture the country. Guerrero deposed by Bustamante, he by Pedraza, he by Farias and he by Santa Anna.
1824. Santa Anna became dictator.
1836. Constitution of the "seven laws" adopted, establishing a centralized government. Secession of Texas.
1837. Bustamante made president.
1837-41. Revolutions throughout the country finally settled by Santa Anna, who issued a proclamation abolishing the "seven laws." He was made provisional president and Bustamante was expelled.
1843. Santa Anna retired in favor of Nicholas Bravo, who set up a new constitution.
1844. Santa Anna led a mutiny which resulted in his capture and imprisonment.
1846-47. War with the United States.
1848. Santa Anna left the country.
1853. Santa Anna recalled to settle a revolution. Made president for life with title of "most serene highness."
1854. Revolt of Alvarez and Comonfort, in which Porfirio Diaz participated against the government.
1855. New ministry drove Santa Anna from the capital.
1857. The new constitution, which still holds, adopted. Comonfort became dictator and was deposed by Juarez.
1859. Juarez recognized by the United States.
1861-67. Mexico in the hands of the French.
1871. Juarez elected president for the second time and Diaz headed a rebellion.
1872. Juarez died. De Tejada succeeded to presidency.
1876. Rebellion in which Diaz joined. De Tejada driven out.
1877. Diaz became provisional president.
1880. Diaz succeeded by Gonzales.
1884. Diaz again elected.
1888. Constitution amended so that the president could succeed himself and Diaz served nominally as president, but really as dictator until 1910.
1910. Madero uprising.
1911. Diaz resigned under pressure. Madero elected president. Reyes uprising.
1912. Revolt led by Felix Diaz.
1913. Reyes and Diaz, who had been released from prison, led another rebellion. Huerta deserted Madero. Madero killed. Huerta elected provisional president and recognized by Spain, Great Britain and France, but not by the United States. Rise of the constitutionalists against Huerta.
1914. Rise of Villa and Carranza. Continuous rebellion against the dictatorship of Huerta. Huerta refused to salute the American flag. United States marines landed at Vera Cruz. Huerta retired to Spain. Three presidents in as many months.

Since then Carranza has failed to put down the rebellion, although he has been recognized as provisional president by the United States, and at present Mexico is torn between its own rebellion and the demand of the United States that it settle down to peace and work.

SHOP CONVENIENCES.

I am interested in the fellowship work of the Commonwealth Steel company of St. Louis, as described in the April bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Institute. What is being done for the workers in that concern is paying direct returns on the investment as well as being of great indirect benefit to the company and direct benefit to the men.

Their plan is worth careful consideration by employers generally. They found that drinking water was costing them a lot of money in summer time. They found that their bills for ice and labor in connection with the water supply averaged $6,795.28 for two years. The men wasted a lot of time in going after water. Drinking ice water caused some sickness. Every now and then a man was hurt handling the heavy ice boxes. The conditions around the water coolers were not of the best.

The company put in a filter and a refrigerating plant. Water pipes were laid and bubbling fountains were placed every 50 feet in the shop. The water is sent into the pipes at 48 degrees and returns at 53 degrees. No workman at his job is more than 50 feet from a clean, sanitary bubbling fountain supplying safe, good water at just the right temperature.

The entire cost of installation, including enough refrigerators to supply the commissary department, was $11,510.41. The entire cost of operation, including 5 per cent interest on investment, is $1,897.83. The direct saving per year is $4,887.45. This takes no account of saving in time of a man or gain in health, comfort and efficiency for the men.

The company has installed clean, sanitary, comfortable toilets and urinals easily accessible to the men at their work. They appreciate the gain for themselves as well as for the men from having proper toilet facilities easily accessible. Where the toilets are cold or can only be reached by going out into the cold, the loss to the company from constipation, headaches and colds would more than offset the cost of better facilities.

The company has provided lockers and shower baths. After work a man takes his bath and gets into clean clothes for the street.

The report says: "These facilities increase individual efficiency."

This company places great stress on safety work. Safety work reduced its losses in 1915 to less than one-tenth what they were in 1912. In addition to the direct savings there were indirect gains. "Safety work was found to be the right and orderly way of doing things. This made it a constructive aid to shop efficiency and shop economy. Good safety work would pay from this viewpoint alone."

Asbestos and Rubber.

From the India Rubber World.

For the last few years this country has been importing annually from 60,000 to 76,000 tons of asbestos, of a value of from $1,378,000 to $1,378,000 to $1,678,000, and practically all of this came from Canada, about 200 tons being imported from Europe. In no year previous to 1914 has the total domestic output amounted to 8,000 tons, while the average is less than 4,000 tons a year, and in 1913 and 1914 it was less than 1,300 tons. Rubber manufacturers are using steadily increasing quantities of asbestos, chiefly in packings and automobile brake lining. The latter is a narrow asbestos fabric impregnated with rubber and vulcanized. That it is an important product may be inferred from the fact that the 3,000,000 or more automobiles in this country, and the 200,000 trucks, have certainly two, usually four, brake linings. The total length of such lining needed for a single car is about 10 feet. This of itself would make about 32,000,000 feet. When it is considered that such linings wear out in use, and must be renewed, it will be seen how important is this one branch of the asbestos rubber industry. The raw material is also used for clutch lining. About 35 per cent of 1916 models of automobiles have dry disk clutches, and while the amount used for this purpose is small, compared with that used for brakes, still in the aggregate, this is, in itself, an important addition to the business. There are, of course, other uses for asbestos in the rubber trade. All manufacturers of mechanical rubber goods use this material, chiefly in packings.

Rebuilding the Railroads.

From the Washington Times.

It has been said that almost no public work lasts more than a generation without requiring in some fashion to be reconstructed, practically, to be replaced. The Erie canal has been rebuilt once a generation, bigger. There is already talk of making the Panama canal a sea level ditch, even before it is really completed as a lock canal. The railroads are everlastingly in process of rebuilding. Rails of 120 pounds to the yard have replaced those of 60, the big freight car of today would well nigh carry a carload of freight of the first decades of railroading.

Now comes promise of the greatest revolution of all. The convention of Master Mechanics of American Railways expresses the serious view that universal electrification will take place soon.

It would be in the end cheaper, safer, more rapid and efficient. Then why not? If there is a real obstacle, it is, today, the difficulty of financing such a gigantic operation. Billions of capital would be required. It must be raised from private investors, it can only be raised if there is such confidence in the earning power of the roads and in the governmental attitude toward them, as will guarantee stable conditions.

One way to produce this confidence would be to unify and centralize, under the national government, all the instrumentalities of governmental control.

PREPAREDNESS IN SUMMER TRAVEL

Plans for summer travel should be based on the proper apparel with proper facilities for packing. Details for comfort should be the first consideration. A veil insures satisfaction if a sudden automobile trip is thrust upon a guest. A comfortable pair of walking shoes is almost essential to a picnic day, planned suddenly. Shoes for comfort should always be included in packing for the week end or an extended visit.

A waterproof coat, with all outward signs of a motor coat, is a real treasure for the traveler. An umbrella is also designed for sun or rain and may be secured in attractive colors.

Lake visitors need all the equipment for a 4 o'clock dip. Sun hats and sun glasses for the beach prevent many headaches. Summer furs answer their purpose between dances at lake resorts.

A work box, with thread and button for "the stitch in time," is an emergency safeguard.

A few cases for small articles necessary to travel may be made of cretonne or silk. They prevent anxious moments of searching when time is limited.

Stationery, a fountain pen and stamps occupy small space, but may be instrumental in reuniting friends.

San Francisco and the Kindergarten.

Supported by the demands of individual citizens, women's clubs, civic organizations and the daily press, the school authorities of San Francisco have recently recommended the establishment of 20 additional kindergartens. This means that when the estimate they have presented to the proper authorities has been formally approved, approximately 1,000 more children between four and six years old in San Francisco will receive the well rounded training which the kindergarten gives, through its play work, songs, games and stories.

Until recently San Francisco has not been as advanced as most large cities of the United States in providing public education for children under primary school age, having but 11 kindergartens publicly supported. This was the more surprising because it had the most famous of the early kindergarten philanthropies; and for years no other city had so many or such generously provided beneficiences of this kind.

Two factors of universal interest stand out in the action of the San Francisco school board: The passage of a new form of kindergarten legislation in California three years ago, and the thorough canvass of the state, during the past two years, to arouse parents and educators to the opportunities the new law brings.

California now has one of the best kindergarten laws in the country. It says that whenever parents of 25 children of kindergarten age who live within a mile of an elementary school want a kindergarten, the way is open for them to get on simply by petitioning the local educational authorities.

It was not, however, until the law had been brought to the attention of the people through systematic effort, that any marked advantage was reaped from its favorable provisions. A number of agencies contributed to make the law effective. In 1914 a special collaborator of the United States bureau of education, who is also a field secretary of the National Kindergarten association, began cooperating with parents and state and local school officials to bring about the establishment of more classes through her efforts, and the efforts of citizens within and without the schools, the number of girls and boys receiving kindergarten instruction throughout California has practically doubled since this extension work was begun.

Los Angeles, which may be taken as an example, now has 133 kindergartens, as compared with 74 in 1912. Oakland, which had only three kindergartens before this law passed, has 30 at the present time. San Francisco is the most recent instance of a systematic campaign of petitioning resulting in an increase in kindergarten facilities.

The Flight of Youth.

There are gains for all our losses,
There are balms for all our pain:
But where youth, the dream, departs,
It takes something from our hearts,
And it never comes again.

We are stronger, we are better,
Under manhood's sterner reign;
Still we feel that something sweet
Followed youth, with flying feet,
And will never come again.

Something beautiful is vanished,
And we sigh for it in vain:
We behold it everywhere,
On the earth and in the air,
But it never comes again.

INDIANS IN HIGH POSITION

Members of Parker Family Have Proved Themselves Capable in Places of Responsibility.

Foremost among the "red bloods" are the Parkers—father and son. They come of a line of distinguished ancestors, of the Seneca tribe of the Iroquois stock. Frederick E. Parker, the father, is a nephew of Gen. Eli Parker, Grant's military secretary and the co-worker of Lewis H. Morgan. He is a man of fine presence and attainments. A resident of White Plains, N. Y., he has been a patent factor for clean government and social reform in his community. Mr. Parker holds the responsible position of statistician in the department of revenue of the New York Central railroad, having charge of all offices, including more than a thousand agents, between Chicago and New York.

The son, Arthur C. Parker, a brilliant young archeologist, since his appointment to the New York State museum, has practically created a new archeological museum. He is a writer of note, editor general of the American Indian Magazine, a member of the American Ethnological and Sociological societies, the 1916 medalist of Chicago university for Indian research and one of the ten American archeologists appointed to the Pan-American Scientific congress.—Christian Herald.

One Man's Wisdom.

Growells—This morning I ordered the iceman to discontinue his visits, told the butcher to send us a supply of salt pork, left word with the baker to send us bread at least three days old, instructed the mail man to deliver our mail but twice a week.

Mrs. Growells—Why, John, what in the name of all—

Growells—And tomorrow morning I want you to remove all the fly screens from the doors and windows, remove the springs from the bed, put some old brickbats in the mattress and have the water cut off from the bathroom.

Mrs. Growells—What is the matter with you, John Growells, are you crazy?

Growells—Perish the thought, Mrs. Growells, perish the thought! I have never been saner in my life. I am simply fixing things so we can enjoy all the comforts of a month's sojourn in the country without leaving town. See?

Not Without Avail.

"Peter Cooper, stand up."

The raw-boned "poor-white trash," holding his ragged hat in one hand and the tail of his shabby coat in the other, walked slowly up to the stand.

"Yes, judge."

"You are accused of profanity in a public place."

"I guess I did it, judge. Nigger was tryin' to steal ma hoss."

"But you should know better than to take the name of the Lord in vain, Mr. Cooper."

"It warn't in vain, judge. You jes' ought ter have seen that nigger run!"—Case and Comment.

Just the Thing.

"Why not? All women have a fondness for press work."

Compulsory.

Rear Admiral Peary, at a Washington tea, talked about his recent Long Beach flying trip, when he fell 1,200 feet into the water without knowing it.

"I wasn't frightened," he said. "I thought that our swift descent was a piece of fancy flying. I am, in fact, as ignorant of aviation as the little boy was ignorant of history.

"'Describe the Order of the Bath,' his teacher asked this little boy.

"'It's very ancient,' he answered. 'It goes back to the time when they didn't take no baths except by order.'"

Shrewd Purchasing.

Little seven-year-old Fred, who lives in one of Zanesville's suburbs, had been ailing and his mother decided that he needed a dose of castor oil.

Fred was told that if he were to take the castor oil without complaint he would get five cents to spend for candy.

Then his mother sent him to the corner drug store with 15 cents—10 cents for the oil and five cents for candy.

Arriving at the drug store, Fred decided to buy the sweetmeats first, and told the clerk that he wanted a nickel's worth of candy.

"What kind of candy do you want?" asked the clerk.

"Gimme the kind you get the most for a nickel," answered Fred.

The clerk complied, and then Fred said, rather reluctantly:

"Now gimme some castor oil. I want the kind you get the least for a dime."

Unexpected Explanation.

Banks—I had a new experience yesterday, one you might call unaccountable. I ate a hearty dinner, finishing up with a Welsh rabbit, a mince pie and some lobster a la Newburg. Then I went to a place of amusement. I had hardly entered the building before everything swam before me.

Bonks—The Welsh rabbit did it.

Bunks—No, it was the lobster.

Bonks—I think it was the mince pie.

Banks—No, I have a simpler explanation than that. I never felt better in my life. I was at the aquarium.

Insinuation.

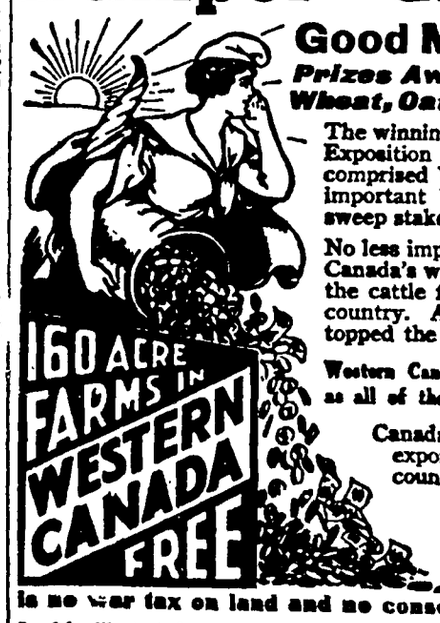
"Don't you know," said Omar, "I once marched in a procession that took seven hours to pass a given point."

"Of course," rejoined Heiny, "the given point was a saloon."

Bumper Grain Crops

Good Markets—High Prices

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses



The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

We have been reading a lot lately about those man eating sharks that suddenly appeared along the Atlantic coast and frightened the bathers from the water. But we note, without surprise, that not a chirp is vouchsafed regarding the two-legged sharks that infest the bathing beaches and devour the young girly who daily fall into their clutches. But, then, the two-legged shark is socially, politically and financially powerful and it would be extremely discourteous and unwise to disturb him in the enjoyment of his "innocent pastime." A shark is a shark, but his status is qualified by the bread.

The Garner Ball tournament which is on this week has been attracting large crowds each day and Klemme has been furnishing her quoto. The games have been very good but they have a bum carnival company for attractions. Get your money quick seems to be the motto of the gang. Rain has interfered with the ball games so that it will be necessary to hold the tournament over until Friday when Elmore and Albert Lea will battle for the championship. The result of the games so far are as follows: Albert Lea 7, Rockwell 3; Bancroft 3, Elmore 2; Elmore 6, Rockwell 5, 11 innings; Albert Lea 5, Bancroft 0. On account of rain it does not look like the tournament association will be able to declare over a 50 per cent dividend this year.

Just as we are theoretically patting ourselves on the back in the fond belief that we have diplomatically sidestepped the dangers of international complications we are suddenly confronted with the possibility of serious trouble with England over her now famous blacklist. First it was Mexico, and after many long months of notes and talks and confabs and the mobilization of troops a silver lining appeared in the clouds and war was deferred at least. Then differences with Germany arose and for a long time we tottered on the brink of deadly strife. That happily was eventually removed and we breathed again. Then Mexico broke out afresh and the National Guard was rushed to the border a hundred thousand strong, where it is sweltering in the sun and dodging the bullets of the snipers accross the Rio Grande. For a time it looked as though war was inevitable. but Carranza needed money and became a "good indian" in order to extract more gold from Wall street. That is the Mexican status today. Peace again seems at least in prospect, until England stepped upon the American toe, and now we are face to face with another crisis, And thus we go on from day to day. One day it is peace, and next it is the imminence of war, while even a few days hence are shrouded in impenatrable mystery. These indeed are the days when the wise man sleeps with both eyes open, lest he lose them before he awakens.

TO BE FINE SHOW OF DAIRY CATTLE

While the beef cattle show at the 1915 Iowa State Fair was beyond question the best ever seen at this or any other state exposition the show of dairy stock was by no means up to the standard of previous years. This falling off in numbers was easily explained and understood by everybody as due to conditions arising from the epidemic of foot and mouth disease that struck the country. In some instances federal quarantine regulations forbade shipping out of the state, and in many others the owners of valuable herds preferred to remain safely at home rather than assume the risk of infection and possible quarantine somewhere en route. Wisconsin in particular has always been a liberal patron of the Iowa Fair, sending the best of her flocks and herds, but for obvious reasons remained at home in 1915.

With the complete eradication of the foot and mouth disease from American soil and the consequent lifting of all quarantine regulations the way is clear for cattle exhibitors this season. They can make the fair circuits with the assurance of being able to return to home paddocks and pastures at the end of the season. Iowa has numerous herds of fine dairy cattle, enough to make a great show unaided a fact demonstrated last year when practically all the exhibits in that department of the fair came from within the state. This year, however, the local fanciers can expect the keenest of competition from numerous herds from other states, for there is nothing to stand in the way of exhibiting at the biggest and best State Fair in the country.

TRACTOR SHOW.

The Iowa farmer is turning an inquiring eye toward the tractor, investigating its merits for farm work. Iowa fields are broad and call for handling on a large scale. With the marked improvement in tractor type the question of horse versus tractor power for the medium size and even the smaller farms is one that calls for careful and unbiased consideration.

The middle west is to have a number of big tractor shows this season, one of which will be in connection with the Iowa State Fair Aug. 23-Sept. 1. All the leading manufacturers will be represented, and it will be an excellent time and place for the farmer of inquiring mind to study and compare the various makes of tractors offered for consideration.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

REMEDIES FOR THROAT TROUBLES.

If any one is troubled with hoarseness at any time, to one quart of boiling water add a teaspoonful of camphor. Inhale this at intervals of about every two or three hours until entirely relieved. If troubled with enlarged tonsils or sore throat or tonsilitis, gargle the throat with one teaspoonful of pure alcohol to one of hot water. I have found these remedies to work relief like magic on many occasions.

After each meal I sprinkle a little chloride of lime in the sink. This immediately removes all stains which so readily appear on a white porclean sink. In about five minutes' time I pour hot water on it and my sink is again as white as snow.

THE KING'S GREAT RECORD

What is the life of a King? Since the registered stock seven passenger eight cylinder King made its recent record breaking Car Owners Service Test on the Sheepshead Bay Motor Speedway and the highways of Long Island there has been speculation as to just what the maximum durability of a King may be. Without a motor stop for 10,850 miles and no adjustment or replacement of any kind, any answer to this question must be purely acedemic.

When the engine of the King eight, which made the remarkable record, was taken down, at the conclusion of the trial, no appreciable wear could be located anywhere. The cylinders showed no perceptible wear, the bearings were perfectly tight, the rear axle unit was just as good as when it left the shop.

No one would of dreamed, it is said, that the mechanism had just travelled almost 11,000 miles with the engine turning up 1,356 r. p. m. The crankshaft had make 27,344,713 revolutions and the wheels had gone around just 6,434,050 times. The total piston travelled amounted to 182,046,400 feet, while the ignition system had supplied 109,378,852 sparks, or 5,424 sparks each minute of the run. The total amount of air consumed by the engine on the long grind was 2,705,622,529 cubic inches, which is enough to give every man, woman and child in the United States several deep lungsfull of ozone. While all this was happening in the mechanism proper, the diaphragm of the Carter fuel feed tank made 27,344,713 impulses.

A piece of mechanism that can give such astonishing service totals as this, under very trying conditions it is maintained might very well go on indefinitely. Not one of the parts showed wear. This should be extremely satisfactory to the manufacturers of the vehicle, for it is a mechanical axiom that a perfect piece of machinery would fail in all its parts at once, like the one horse chaise. On its showing in the fourteen day trial and its form after that strenuous flight was finished, the makers of this remarkable car have every right to claim that six or eight years of running would be almost inevitable for the King eight. Sold by Henry Lau & Son, the King and Oakland dealers.

INNOCENT GIRL WAS ACCUSED

Former Belmond Girl is a Victim of Mistake—Results in Damage Suit

Miss Stoffer, a seventeen year old Alexander girl met with a very unpleasant experience while in Hampton last Friday afternoon. While many people were within hearing, she was stopped and given a severe questioning, all of which came so unexpectedly that she was nearly driven frantic.

Miss Stoffer, who had been visiting at Ackley, arrived here on the noon train, and had some time to spend in Hampton before taking the afternoon train for her home in Alexander. After being around town for a while and getting somewhat tired she went to the womans' rest room in the court house building, and later she visited some of the local stores. During the time she had been in the rest room Mrs. Rasmus Jensen and her daughter Lena, of Coulter, had also been there for a few minutes, and after leaving the building, Miss Jensen could not find her mesh bag, which contained some cash. Upon retiring to the rest room and not being able to locate it the ladies claimed that Miss Stoffer was the only person who could have taken the bag. Mrs. Jensen immediately notified her husband and they called upon Sheriff Schwieger to aid in locating the money. It was found in front of one of the local stores and accused of the theft and a search about her person was made, but not being able to find that Miss Stoffer had the mesh bag and money, Mrs. Jensen made another search of her hand bag and there she found her daughter's mesh bag and in it the money.

Apologies were offered and later the sheriff was given the magnificent sum of $2 to give to Miss Stoffer to help her wounded feelings but by this time a brother of the girl, George F. Stoffer of Alexander, who had been sent for, appeared on the scene, and instead of getting away with a $2 settlement County Attorney J. S. Sharp was employed to bring action for $2,000 damages against Mr. and Mrs. Rasmus Jensen and their daughter, Miss Lena and it is expected that the case will be tried at the coming term of court.

Mr. Jensen resides on a forty acre tract near Coulter, and besides farming the small tract, is engaged in the carpenter work.—Hampton Chronicle.

BLOOM ARRIVES IN CALIFORNIA

We received a short letter from W. R. Bloom, Tuesday, telling us of their safe arrival by auto at Berkeley, California. They made the trip of 3577 miles which took them through ten states in 31 days which is surely a very good record. They did not have a single mishap but Walt states that they encountered all kinds of weather and roads but enjoyed the trip very much. They now are at their home, 2131 Blake street, Berkeley, California, and their many Klemme friends hope that they will enjoy their western home to the full extent.

Twenty Years Of___?

The Times had a birthday last week but we were too busy to give it the proper publicity, and has now rounded out twenty years under private ownership.

We were tempted to say "private management" but, upon second thought, did not say it. As a matter of fact, so many people try to manage the Times that it is really doubtful at times whether it is privately managed, and a wonder at times that it gets any management at all.

In writing the head of this little birthday effusion, we didn't get finished either. It was easy to start with "twenty years of" but what to say next? In the words of the immortal bard, "that's the question."

Some people might suggest "Hell," or "Success," or "Progress," or "Growth," or "Scandal," or "Sensation," or "Lies," or "Hot Air," or "Meaness," or "Opposition," or "Insanity," or "Work," or "Play," or "Foolishness," or a lot of other things that you can find in the dictionary; but none of them quite suits us.

In the twenty years just spoken of the Times has been accused, severally and cumulatively, sixteen million times, and with adjectives, of every month of the social calender.

Sometimes it was the law breaker, sometimes the preacher, sometimes the boozer, sometimes the infidel, sometimes the laboring man, sometimes the capitalist, sometimes the city council, sometimes the farmer, sometimes the town loafer, sometimes the editor, sometimes some other profession or main, sometimes the old girls, sometimes the married girls.

Everyone has taken a "wham" at the dear old Times, which one good soul says never amounted to anything, but she "just can't get along without it for for fear she will miss something."

The principal feature about this whamming business is that only a few people do it at any one time. Its just like the permanently disabled portion of a fighting army. A certain percentage of it is always in the hospital, but will be around in a few weeks again, all right, while others take their places.

The Times was not started to put anyone out of business or to discredit anyone who had a legal or moral right to credit or to boost politicians, churches, societies, organization, business houses, individual or anything else unless they paid us for it, but has never neglected to say a good word for Klemme or the community whenever possible.

The Times just wants to make a living like any other business institution, an idea which, for a long time didn't soak into everyone's head, but which information, at the present writing, is becoming fairly well disseminated.

We want all our readers to feel that the Times is progressive and wishes to improve with age, and we believe that any of the 'old timers' cannot help but agree but what we have tried to keep abreast with the improvements in this neighborhood and grown with the country so to speak. So when you have news items or a piece of work in our line give it to us.

We started out, if we remember correctly, to write a caption for this article. Here's the one that suits us best. TWENTY YEARS OF FUN.

KLEMME, IOWA

Instead of trying to do all his work by daylight in conformance with the newest continental regulation, the progressive American farmer is beginning to have a large part of it done by night. Dynamos are being utilized on some of the great western farms which supply powerful electric light by means of which plowing, cultivating and harvesting can be done in the cool of the night instead of the heat of the day. The dynamo in use can light a large field. A tractor, for instance, is fitted with two powerful lights, one in the front to show the ground to be gone over and one in the rear that shows the furrows already plowed.

Are Anglo-Saxons conceited about their pre-eminence in matters of machinery? A book, "English and American Tool Builders," by Prof. J. W. Roe, of Yale, answers the question thus: "Practically all the creative work in tool building has been done in England and America * * * The French have shown an aptitude for refinements and ingenious novelties * * * The Swiss are clever artisans, but have excelled in personal skill * * * Germany has developed splendid mechanics, but the principal machine tools had taken shape before 1870, when the empire began. The history of English and American tool building, therefore, covers substantially the entire history of the art."

The system of wire dragging for uncharted obstructions to navigation has proved its value at Salem, Mass., where the wire drag has led to the finding of rocks in the entire approach to Salem, some of them in the main ship channel for deep draft vessels. In this channel depts from one to two fathoms less than charted were found, and, in consequence, the channel for deep draft vessels has been narrowed sufficiently to require careful piloting to insure safety. The coast and geodetic survey has temporarily buoyed a safe channel.

In order to collect data for experiments in waterproofing concrete, the United States bureau of standards, in cooperation with manufacturers and with societies, engineers and others interested has addressed a questionnaire to more than 800 architects, engineers, contractors, etc. An important feature connected with the investigation is the project for experimental concrete tanks along the river front of the city of Washington. The District of Columbia government has set aside a piece of ground, and plans have been completed for the construction of the tanks.

For the benefit of the tired business man and the tired business woman, unable to take advantage of Chicago's 22 miles of lake front during the day time, the city has installed along some of the beaches powerful electric searchlight, so that the bathers can see just where and with whom they are swimming. After nightfall, the lights are turned on, throwing their rays in various directions, so that the bathers have plenty of illumination both on the beach and at a generous distance into the lake.

Members of the Chinese Y. M. C. A. at Chengtu, West China, will have a chance soon to learn paper making, if the plans of the industrial department of the association go through without a hitch. A director of that department recently visited the United States and inspected the paper laboratory of the United States bureau of standards. It is planned to put in a plant at the Y M. C. A. large enough to produce paper for the use of the schools and give practical instruction to pupils.

Comb and brush in hand, a Pittsfield, Mass., man sat in front of a mirror and fussed and fumed trying to prevail on a refractory hair to lie down. He resorted to water—then to oil, but all without avail. The hair simply would not behave. Finally he looked a little more closely and discovered that the "hair" was a crack in the plaster behind him.

The production of lead in the United States in 1915 amounted to 550,055 short tons, in comparison with 542,122 tons in the previous year. The value of lead refined in the United States in 1915 amounted to $51,705,000, and in 1914 to $42,286,000.

KENYON FLARES WHEN SENATOR BUMPS IOWA

Goes at Ransdell, of Louisiana, With Pointed Comparisons —Not Pork Progress.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 8.—The Iowa men had her praises sung in the Senate yesterday afternoon by Senator Kenyon. He replied to disparaging remarks about Iowa by Senator Ransdell of Louisiana, who recently, when angered by Kenyon's criticisms of the river and harbor bill, said Senator Kenyon had better look after the development of his own state which was losing population. Senator Kenyon poured on the Senate a flood of statistics showing the tremendous resources and population of Iowa. He compared it with Louisiana in a way to belittle that state.

Senator Kenyon showed Iowa's poultry and eggs were worth more in a year than the annual sugar cane crop of Louisiana and that the Iowa egg crop was worth more than the annual gold output of Alaska.

He showed Iowa farm property was worth over $3,000,000,000, or about 10 times Louisiana's, and made many other comparisons. He showed Iowa was first in corn, oats, value of livestock, poultry, hogs, and horses and in 1913 raised 1-10th of the world's corn crop. Bank figures and others galore were presented in astonishing array for contemplation of Senator Ransdell and the Senate.

"Iowa has prosperity without 'pork,'" declared Senator Kenyon.

TO USE JAIL SENTENCES IN DISCIPLINING AUTOISTS

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 8.—Charles H. Bryant, cashier of the Des Moines Trust company, was sentenced to jail for a day and a half by Judge Carlson for violation of the traffic ordinances. He was arrested last night, charged with having no dimmers on his automobile. Judge Carlson says that since fines have not affected outlaw autoists, jail sentences will be imposed hereafter.

KINGSLEY BARBER SUES FARMER FOR ALIENATION

Kingsley, Ia., Sept. 9.—George L. Arnold, a barber, residing in Kingsley, has brought suit against Joseph Bainbridge, a wealthy farmer living in Elkhorn township, for $10,000, alleging he alienated the affections of his wife. Recently Mrs. Arnold filed a petition in the district court asking for a divorce from George Arnold on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment.

Arnold states that he and Anna M. Ragenberg were married at Rock Rapids on May 14, 1901, that three children were born to them, and they lived happily together for many years. He said that about May 1, 1916, Bainbridge began showing attention and courtesies to Mrs. Arnold, visited at her home in Kingsley, gave her the use of his automobile and that she took trips in his car with him to Sioux City. He says that the defendant wickedly cultivated her affections, gained her confidence and obtained control of her actions and conduct and thereby alienated her affections from the plaintiff and caused him suffering and anguish

FORMER IOWA PROFESSOR SUED FOR BREACH OF PROMISE

Grinnell, Ia., Sept. 9 — Many Grinnell people remember Prof. Charles Ross Dines, dashing, debonair and brilliant, who a few years ago creditably served for a year as instructor in mathematics on the Grinnell college faculty. The many who recall the likable young instructor gasped with surprise when they read the news that on the eve of his wedding Dines had been sued for $30,000 for breach of promise by Miss Edna May Grove, of Omaha, Neb. There was delay, however, in the wedding of Professor Dines and his fiancee, Miss Charlotte Everett, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Henry H. Everett, of Kenilworth.

PETTIT GIVES DETAILS OF HIS "SPIRITUAL" PROMPTINGS

Chicago, Sept. 9.—Details of the "spiritual" promptings which caused him to slay his young wife to "save her soul," are contained in a confession said to have been obtained from J. Maurice Pettit, former Cedar Rapids, Ia., bank cashier in jail here today. The confession was made public by the state's attorney late last night.

In the confession Pettit is quoted as saying that when he was married in the early part of the year he expected to live with his wife on a "spiritual plane," but that his motherinlaw objected to that plan. Although his wife was a "pure woman," the confession continued, he had attacks of jealous fits in one of which he cut the throat of his wife with a razor and left her lying dead while he fled the house.

According to the confession, Pettit sought to kill himself on the farm near Detroit, where he was captured and that he yet hoped to end his life so he could join his bride "spiritually."

MARSHALLTOWN—Burglars made a good haul at Garwin, a small town northeast of this city in Grundy county. The robbers raided L. G. Andrews' jewelry store and secured watches and rings valued at $1,000. The general store of Clarence Beery was also entered and a large quantity of clothing and shoes taken.

SPECIAL RIGHTS DUE TO TELEPHONE LINES

Newly Installed Electric Circuits Cannot Interfere, Says State Board.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 9.—The telephone lines of Iowa won a victory over the electric lines of the state in a decision by the state railroad commission yesterday that telephone companies now operating have priority rights over future electric lines.

The commission makes this ruling in granting a franchise to the Peterson Power & Milling company, of Peterson, to construct a transmission line in Buena Vista county. It provides that the Peterson company may build its line, but that it must pay whatever expense is necessary to rebuild telephone lines along the route of the transmission line, so as to withstand the electrical disturbance.

Under the present type of rural telephone construction, it is said that electric lines put the telephones out of commission completely. Most of the telephone lines now are what are known as grounded systems, having a single wire. To permit service in the vicinity of electric lines, telephone lines must be metallic circuit, requiring two wires. The telephone companies complained it would take $5,000,000 to rebuild their lines into metallic circuit lines.

The railroad commission has decided that the telephone companies need not stand this expense. The board says that if electric lines want franchises they must take care of the telephone lines already operating.

John A. Read, attorney for the Iowa Electric company of Cedar Rapids, yesterday filed applications with the railroad commission for franchises between the following points: Anamosa to Maquoketa; Herndon to Guthrie Center, Menlo, Casey and Adair, Garner to Belmond; Delhi to Oneida; Shellsburg to Reinbeck.

SIOUX COUNTY PIONEERS CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING

Alton, Ia., Sept. 9.—Mr. and Mrs. Nic Koob, of Alton, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary here yesterday. They came to Alton and located on a farm near here in the '70s, being among the very earliest settlers in this vicinity. Mr. Koob is 78 years old, his wife is 75. All of their children and many other relatives were here for the occasion. The children are Frank Koob, of Viscount, Saskatchewan; Barney Koob, of Granville, Mrs. Peter Kramer, of Wilmont, Minn., and Mrs. Peter Konz, of Alton.

Mr. and Mrs. Koob experienced the trials of grasshopper days. Among their experiences they tell of making pans the size of a table, which they would coat with molasses and put out in the garden. In the evening the pans would be brimful of grasshoppers. Mr. Koob also recalls the time when a train was stopped near here and was unable to proceed because of thousands of hoppers on the tracks. At one time he offered his farm, now valued at $250 an acre, to anyone who would pay his fare back to Jackson county, but could find no one to accept the offer.

RAIN AFFECTS PROGRAM AT CORRECTIONVILLE PICNIC

Correctionville, Ia., Sept. 9.—Heavy rains last night resulted in a rearrangement of the plans for the Farmers' institute, which was scheduled for today and tomorrow. Most of the events scheduled for today were postponed until tomorrow.

Tomorrow the day will open with an automobile parade. A picnic dinner will be served at noon. One of the big features will be a colt show. A good farm products exhibition also will be offered.

An athletic program will be rendered in the afternoon. Foot races and other sports, horse and pony races, and baseball make up this program. The Correctionville and Marcus ball teams will play today. Tomorrow the Mapleton team meets the local club.

IOWA CITY PEOPLE ARE POISONED BY CANNED BEANS

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 9.—A score of people were poisoned by ptomaines in canned beans, which they partook of freely at a picnic in the city park in Iowa City, but all are recovering. Among those most severely afflicted were John R. Breese, a member of the city council of Iowa City, his wife and children; Mrs. Loretta Brisbane, of Mason City, Ia., their daughter and her children; Hugh Williams, his wife and four members of their family, and Arlo Fairall, a young motorcyclist who had recently left the hospital, where he had been an inmate since May. Many others were made ill, but none will die.

Charles City, Ia., Sept. 9.—Sam Wald of Cedar township found along the Little Cedar river two large pearls in one shell. The pearls have been estimated by buyers to be worth at least $50 each.

DES MOINES DEPOT RAIDED.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 7.—John L. Hammond, local reformer, today swooped down on the M. & St. L. depot here and landed 41 barrels and five cases of beer as his catch. COMPETENCY QUESTION IN ESTHERVILLE CASE

Alleged That Thomas Maher, Deceased, Was Insane When He Made Will.

Estherville, Ia., Sept. 8.—Is a man of unsound mind who wishes to be crucified in order to gain the kingdom of heaven and is willing to fast for periods of 14 to 30 days in his religious practices?

This question is before the Iowa supreme court in the case involving the estate of Thomas Maher of Estherville. The appeal to the high court was perfected yesterday by the filing of the record.

Maher owned 320 acres of land valued at $115 an acre. He deeded some of this land away shortly before he died. There were 11 heirs. They complained that Maher received only $250 for lands worth many times more, and began action to set aside the deeds, on the ground that Maher was of unsound mind and incapable of managing his property at the time the deals were made. The lower court held that Maher was sane and that the deeds should stand. The heirs appealed.

The heirs claimed that Maher took up religion a few years before he died and that he read the bible and religious books until 2 o'clock in the morning. He claimed he was a "spiritual man" and not of the world, and he asked almost everyone who came to see him to crucify him. He fasted once for 14 days. Another time he went without food for 30 days. However, he did not insist that his family also fast, believing that no one else was spiritual enough, witnesses said.

In his will, Maher gave $1,000 to the Catholic church of Estherville, $100 for the Norwegian Emanuel church of Emmett county; $200 for the St. Mary's academy of Quincy, Ill. The will was made shortly before Maher built a small hut on Mud lake and went there to live. The hut was of logs and was constructed so that it ran into the hillside. Part of the house was a cave.

HIGHWAY COMMISSION AGAINST ROAD-RACES

Says These Events Are Dangerous and Manifest Misuse of Public Highways.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 7.—The state highway commission is continuing its fight against speeding by automobilists on the public highway. In the bulletin just issued it calls on automobile associations to aid in checking reckless driving.

"Automobile associations and tourist road organizations should do everything in their power to stop speeding on the highways," says the commission. "There are sections of the Lincoln highway, the River-to-River road and others which people who use the highways sanely are careful to avoid whenever possible simply because of the reckless driving by speed maniacs. Recently a driver secured wide publicity by reason of the fact that he drove from Des Moines to Panora over the tourist route called the Panora speedway in 60 minutes and was so elated over the advertising that he got that he immediately announced that he would go that record one better and would drive from Guthrie Center to Des Moines in 70 minutes.

"The Iowa farmers are not supplying the bulk of the money to build good roads as demonstration speedways for agents with new model cars. People with legitimate business on the highways, or if there for pleasure only, do not care to take chances on the roads with drivers straining their cars to the utmost limit to make good speed records between any two towns for the purpose of boosting sales of any particular brand of car."

SENATOR CUMMINS IS EXPECTING HIGHER RATES

Washington, D. C., Sept. 7.—Senator Cummins was asked concerning his view of the railroad legislation which would be attempted next session, growing out of the recent trouble between railroads and employes and the forcing of congress to take hurried action to prevent a strike.

He said that the public might expect to have the increase in wages passed on to it several times over.

Moreover, he predicted that in some form there would be legislation for government regulation of wages of railroad employes through the Interstate Commerce commission or otherwise. He pointed out that when that was done organizations of employes would be on the same basis before the commission as commercial organizations.

Senator Cummins will depart Thursday for Iowa and return here soon after election to take part in the investigation of railroads and transportation by a joint subcommittee of congress.

RUSSIANS LAUNCH GREAT OFFENSIVE ON DANUBE FRONT

Heavy Counter Stroke Inaugurated Against Bulgars and Germans In Southern Rumania.

TEUTON ALLIES GAINING

Great Battle Raging From Dobrudja to Coast Where Rumanians Have Suffered Severe Losses.

London, Sept. 9.—The beginning of a great battle in southeastern Rumania where the Russians have taken the offensive against the Bulgarians and Germans, is reported in a Rome dispatch given out by the Wireless Press.

The struggle is now under way on the whole front in Dobrudja between the Danube and the Black sea. Fighting is desperate near Baltjik on the Black sea coast, about 10 miles north of the Bulgarian frontier.

This information, the wireless dispatch says was received in Rome from Petrograd.

An undated official Bulgarian report received here today says that the Bulgarian and German forces which are invading eastern Rumania have captured the fortress of Dobric (Bazardjik) and the seaports of Baltjik, Kavarna and Kali Akra.

The occupation of Orsova by the Rumanians is conceded in the Bulgarian statement.

CLOTHES BLOWN OFF.

London, Sept. 8.—Describing the effects of the British bombardment of the German position at Guillemont, the correspondent of Reuter's telegram company at the British headquarters in France, says:

"The ground east of the village was strewn with German, dead in many cases stark naked, every stitch of clothing having been blasted off. A fair proportion showed no signs of wounds and there is little doubt that the men were killed by the intense concussion. In the dugouts those who escaped all said their nerves were destroyd by the terrific poundings of the British guns.

The correspondent considers it significant the British forces were not bombarded by German field guns which indicates, he says, that the Teutons withdrew their field artillery out of range. Whether this is from apprehension that the guns might fall into British hands or whether it is preliminary to a general withdrawal, the writer adds, can of course be only a matter of speculation.

RUSSIAN AEROS ATTACK.

Election Bill Goes Over.

The session ends without final action Senator Owen's corrupt practices ll, on which debate persisted in the nate yesterday and last night up to e time the revenue bill report was ken up.

As senators and representatives asembled from brief recesses following e arduous night sessions, both houses arked time while waiting the final rmalities of the greatest session of ngress in many respects in history.

In closing addresses, while awaiting e arrival of President Wilson, refernces to the long program of legislave achievement, dominated chiefly by ational defense preparations at a cost more than $600,000,000, were made. emocrats lauded the record of the ssion and commended it to the country, while republicans sought to criticise, alleging waste and extravagance spite of the appropriations for defense.

Appropriations Heavy.

As the gavels were suspended to ound the end of the session, recapitulaons of the nine months' work showed here had been appropriated for the ear 1917 for expenditures of the government more than $1,600,000,000 and hat authorization had been made for ture expenditures which would bring he grand aggregate of appropriations lmost to $2,000,000,000. Administration champions in informal reviews of the ongress answered republican taunts of $2,000,000,000 congress with declaraions that the United States is a "$2,-00,000,000 country."

The Senate began its session at 8 a. n., following an adjournment at 1 a. n. upon passage of the emergency evenue bill. At the outset Senator ames Hamilton Lewis sought to have assed the Spanish war widows' penion bill. Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, announced that such a meaure could not pass for several years f he could prevent it.

Senator Owen then addressed the Senate on his corrupt practices bill.

In withdrawing the bill Senator Owen aid the democratic party had broken ts platform pledges relating to such an ct, but charged that the republican ilibuster was responsible for the dilatory tactics which had prevented a vote.

"I profoundly regret that the leaders f the republican side have taken a osition against this bill," said he. "There is nothing about it that could ot have been adjusted and it ought o be notice to the moral element of the country what it may expect in the coming election."

Salmon Fishers Lose.

Senator Chamberlain, of Oregon, protesting against the action of the revenue conferes in striking from the bill his amendments which would prohibit the admission of Pacific ocean salmon and halibut through a foreign country except in bond from an American port, declared congress had surrendered opportunity to develop American industry.

"Talk about lobby influencing congress," he cried, "what is that when a distinguished gentleman representing Canadian government, Sir Joseph Page, while he may not have besieged congress has been besieging officials of this government to discourage this measure."

Senator Reed, democrat, a member of the lobby committee, said he believed it was high time for the American government to show other nations that it regarded as offensive any attempts to influence legislation in congress.

Senator Lewis, democrat, urged that if anything should be investigated, it should be the recent demands of Japan on China. He declared that they were in retaliation to the attitude of this country toward admission of the Japanese.

Senator Curtis offered another resolution directing the Senate "lobby committee" which has been in existence for several years, and has never reported to investigate the alleged foreign lobby. Senator Chamberlain urged its adoption.

The resolution was adopted after the Senate had disposed of a similar resolution by referring it to a committee. The new resolution adopted provides for a report at the next session of congress.

The homestead grazing bill was passed without record vote. It already had passed the House. It provides for stock raising homesteads, raising the maximum area which may be entered for that purpose from 160 to 640 acres.

Wilson at Capitol.

Soon after 9 o'clock President Wilson went to the capitol to sign bills.

Because of the arrangement for adjournment of congress this morning the president cancelled the cabinet meeting and engagements with senators and representatives.

When the House convened at 8:30 a. m., Speaker Clark, Democratic Leader Kitchin, Republican Leader Mann and a small number of members on both sides were on the floor to watch the wind up. Speaker Clark and Republican Leader Mann exchanged the usual felicitations

Speaker Clark addressed the House and referred to the session of congress as a long, tedious and laborious session "No session of congress in my recollection" he said, stayed in session so many days and worked so many hours.

Clark Philosophizes.

"I am the only man, the speaker went on, amid applause, "I know of who invariably takes up cudgels for congress It is a strange position we are in in this country Nearly every one would like an office, many run for office few get office, and everybody abuses those who do get the office I think that the reason they hop on congress is that it is impersonal and does not hurt any one's feelings in particular Some day I am going to take a whole hour to discuss the relations of the American congress to the American people"

Soon after the president reached the capitol the revenue bill was ready for his signature. The Senate adopted the concurrent resolution for a 10 o'clock adjournment, which already had been passed in the House

President Wilson signed the emergency revenue bill at 9 25 o'clock, in the presence of Senator Simmons, chairman of the finance committee and Representative Rainey of the ways and means committee.

Wilson Holds Reception.

The president held a reception in his room as a line of senators and representatives passed through while he sat at the table signing bills. To Senator Simmons the president expressed gratification over the passage of the revenue bill, and its many legislative features He said, however, that he greatly regretted the failure of the Webb bill to provide for establishment of American collective selling agencies in foreign countries. Senator Simmons also expressed his regret that the measure had failed, but said it would be pressed at the next session.

As the president was about to sign the $20 widows pension bill with Representative Ashbrook, of Onio, its sponsor, by his side, Senator Smith, of Georgia, and Bryan, of Florida, who opposed it vigorously until the last minute, entered the president's room and Mr. Ashbrook asked them to witness the signature. The president smiled as the two senators hurried away

At 9 30 o'clock the Senate appointed Senators Kern and Smoot to notify the president that congress was ready to adjourn unless he had some further recommendation to present. They were joined by Representatives Kitchin, Fitzgerald and Mann, the House committee, and the joint committee waited on the president at 9 35 a. m. The president congratulated the leaders on the opportunity for a "well earned rest" Officially he informed them that he had nothing further to communicate to the congress. When they left the president's room, the chief executive was joined by Secretary Lansing, who chatted with him as he continued to sign bills.

Senator Kern notified the Senate at 9·55 o'clock that the president had nothing further to communicate. Thereupon Senator Nelson, of Minnesota, offered a resolution of thanks to the vice president for his impartial conduct in presiding over the Senate. The resolution was adopted and the vice president thanked the Senate. Thereupon the Senate adjourned sine die at 9 59 o'clock.

Silence Is Golden.

Vice President Marshall in his address to the Senate said

"When I assumed the duties of this office, I thought it would be a terrible thing to keep silent, but the longer I sit here the more I think it is wiser to keep silent. We are about to leave here, some of us 'to point with pride' and others 'to view with alarm,' but I hope when we all have come back we will have forgotten the animosities of the campaign and will remember that we are good friends."

The usual hubbub characterized the closing moments in the House after Representative Fitzgerald, chairman of the appropriations committee, had made a statement regarding appropriations. Mr Fitzgerald said the world was ablaze and extraordinary steps had to be taken in the way of large expenditures for defense.

Representative Gillett, of Massachusetts, said that applying the "democrats' own standard and logic" the session just closed far surpassed in extravagance any predecessor

Quotes Taft's Words

In a speech today defending the Mexican policy of President Wilson Representative Harrison, Mississippi, democrat, read to the House a telegram President Taft sent to the governor of Arizona on April 18, 1911, saying that it was impossible to "foresee or reckon the consequences" of intervention and that "we must use the greatest self restraint to avoid it."

"I approve that sentiment of President Taft," said Mr Harrison.

Representative Denison, of Illinois, republican, interrupted to say that he too, approved that, but that the cases of Taft and Wilson were different, that the former's policy was a temporary one and the latter's a permanent one.

Mr. Harrison insisted that the same conditions confronted both.

Members of the conference committee on the revenue bill today pointed out an important change in the income tax section as finally approved, extending the $4,000 exemption instead of the $3,000, one to heads of families whether married or not, replacing the provision of the old tax law which gave the larger exemption only to "married persons."

For Park in Alaska.

Queen Rewards Loyalty in War On Hated Tango

London, Sept. 8.—The Duchess of Roxburghe, formerly Miss May Ogden Goelet of New York, has been offered the position of mistress of robes to Queen Mary, according to reports in court circles, and incidentally the gossips are discussing how the giddy tango, anathema in the sober lexicon of the British queen, has proved a passport to royal favor in the case of the American duchess.

Not that her grace of Roxburghe

danced the dreadful thing—Oh, no! Quite the contrary. When the "Tango War," which resulted from Queen Mary's denunciation of the dance, had rent British society and when most of the leading women of London's most exclusive set were leagued against their sovereign in defense of the new gyration, the American duchess was one of the few who followed the queen's example, forbade the tango and even closed her doors to those who danced it.

Before this, the gossips whisper, the duchess had made very little progress in royal favor, the queen's well known antipathy toward Americans acting as a barrier. But her loyal stand in what has been called "England's greatest petticoat war" won over the royal lady and the duchess has been in almost constant attendance at court since. The offer of the place as mistress of the robes—a place that many English ladies of illustrious lineage have sought in vain—is declared to be the final seal of royal approval of the ambitious American hostess.

WILSON HAS MADE PLANS FOR PEACE

Dr. Jordan Says He Will Not Act, However, Until After Election — Thinks End Due In Six Months.

Stanford University, Cal., Sept. 9.—The definite plans were outlined at recent conferences between President Wilson and peace advocates for bringing about peace in Europe, was the declaration made today by Chancellor David Starr Jordan, of Stanford university, who has just returned from Washington.

According to Dr. Jordan the conference agreed that any one of three plans will be feasible:

1. A congress of executives of neutral nations might take the lead in bringing the belligerents of Europe together.

2. Congress might appoint representatives to meet with representatives of other neutral countries to act.

3. The United States might act independently.

Dr. Jordan said he was not at liberty to give out the details of the plans as they would be handled by President Wilson himself.

"In my judgment, without relation to the conference with President Wilson," said Dr. Jordan, "the president can do nothing before the coming election, as it would be unwise to undertake a peace movement that would be attacked politically at home.

"It is probable that the president and congress will join in a peace movement which will not come, however, for two or three months, as the entrance of Greece and Rumania into the war has given hope of victory to the allies."

Dr. Jordan said he looked for peace within six months. The movement for peace, he said must come from the United States.

London, Sept. 9.—British troops southwest of Lille, last night raided the German trenches southeast of Ginchy and near Fichebourg L'Avoue, inflicting severe losses on their occupants, says the British official statement issued this afternoon.

The British statement says:

"Beyond the usual artillery and some local bombing fights, there was nothing to report on the Somme front. Two officers and 50 men were brought in as prisoners, yesterday.

"Southeast of Ginchy and near Richebourg L'Avoue we raided the enemy trenches, inflicting severe casualties.

"The enemy shelled Armentieres, northwest of Lille, yesterday evening."

REPORT SEVERE FIGHTING.

Berlin. (via London), Sept. 9.—French and German troops were again engaged in infantry fighting yesterday in the region south of the river Somme in France, says the official statement issued today by the German army headquarters staff. The French were repulsed with great losses with the exception of a point to the west of Berny, where, the statement adds, some portions of trenches remained in the hands of the French.

MEXICANS WILL ASK WITHDRAWAL OF ARMY

Joint Commission Expected to Take Up This Phase of Question First.

New London, Conn., Sept. 9.—At the resumption here today of the conference of the Mexican-American joint commission seeking a permanent settlement of the international difficulties, it was regarded as probable that before this afternoon's deliberations were concluded the Mexican delegates would make a formal request for the withdrawal of General Pershing's punitive expedition from Mexican territory. Papers bearing directly upon this phase of the situation were studied yesterday by the American commissioners.

Ideas relative to the maintenance of order along the border were exchanged today. With Franklin K. Lane, heading the American delegation, presiding, the commissioners engaged in discussion which was expected to result in progress toward a better understanding of the objects in view.

TRACTION STRIKE IS BROKEN, CLAIM

Subway and Elevated Trains Are Running on Schedule In New York—Effect Is Hardly Noted.

New York, Sept. 9.—With subway and elevated trains being operated apparently on normal schedule, traction officials insisted today that New York's strike has been broken. Fifty per cent of the Green cars of the New York railways company's surface system were running, the company announced, and police department reports indicated the walkout was not having a widespread effect.

Union leaders claimed at noon that 3,500 men were on strike on the subway and elevated roads and 4,000 men on the "Green car" system.

Theodore P. Shonts, president of the Interborough, said all men who struck on the Interborough lines could have their positions restored if they resigned from the union by 1 p. m. tomorrow.

LOSE INJUNCTION ON DAKOTA RATES

Three Federal Judges Declare For Express Rates Ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Sept. 8.—In a case involving the entire question of states' rights in fixing railroad and express rates Federal Judges Walter I. Smith, Henry T. Reed and Martin J. Wade, sitting as a special court, today refused the application of South Dakota interests for an injunction against the interstate Commerce commission.

The litigation arose over a conflict between the state laws of South Dakota and the rulings of the commission on express rates within the state of South Dakota.

The court sustains the commission rates, giving a secondary position to state legislatures in the regulation of public service utilities of interstate scope.

WEST INDIES TREATY RATIFIED BY SENATE

Measure to Purchase Islands For Naval Base Now Up to Denmark.

Washington, Sept. 9—The treaty providing for the purchase from Denmark of the Danish West Indies for $25,000,000 was ratified by the Senate last night. There was no roll call and less than half a dozen senators, including Senators Norris, Jones and Clapp voted against it.

Favorable action on the treaty at this session of congress has been strongly urged by the administration, particularly of the influence it might have upon the situation in Denmark, where the lower house of parliament has approved it. A fight is being made for ratification in the upper house.

In Holland sand is plentiful and inexpensive, and is used instead of hay and straw as beds for cows, requiring only a slight raking in the morning to soften and freshen it

CONSIDER DEMANDS OF 25,000 SHOPMEN

Total of 22 Western Roads Involved In Wage Dispute—Means Big Cost.

Chicago, Sept. 9.—Railway executives of 22 western lines have resumed negotiations at Chicago, Kansas City and elsewhere with representatives of 25,000 shopmen who are seeking higher pay and reduced hours.

The shopmen are negotiating with the roads simultaneously, but not collectively. The trades represented include machinists, sheet metal workers, blacksmiths and their helpers.

The demands, according to railway executives are for an increase of 5 cents an hour in wages and for an eight-hour day. The increase and time reduction, according to railway officials would total perhaps $3,000,000 a year. Where the open shop policy obtains, the railways are dealing with the shopmen not as unions but as representatives of the employes.

Among the railroads affected are the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; Colorado & Southern; Colorado Midland; Denver & Rio Grande; Fort Smith & Western; Wabash; Trans-Mississippi Terminal Railway company; Texas Pacific; St. Louis & San Francisco (Frisco Lines); St. Joseph & Grand Island; Missouri, Kansas & Texas; Missouri Pacific & Iron Mountain; International & Great Northern; Kansas City, Mexico & Orient; Kansas City Southern; Kansas City Terminal and The Missouri & North Arkansas.

CORN CROP UNDER EARLY ESTIMATES

Most of It Now Safe From Frost—Drought Damage Severe—Tobacco to Set High Record.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 8.—Hot and dry weather during August caused a loss of 67,000,000 bushels in the prospective production of corn, 43,000,000 bushels in spring wheat crop, 43,000,000 bushels in oats and 46,000,000 bushels in potatoes. Tobacco production prospects increased 27,000,000 pounds.

In Oklahoma and Kansas much of the crop has been cut for ensilage and fodder. Reduction of the corn crop in northwestern Arkansas, southwestern Missouri and other states has been caused by unfavorable weather. Much of the principal corn area of the country has failed to receive sufficient rainfall at the most critical periods of its growth. Frost caused slight damage in extreme northern Minnesota.

In North Dakota corn will be mostly out of danger from frost by September 12 and in some localities of South Dakota it already is beyond danger of frost damage, but in other parts of that state four or five days yet are needed. The earliest corn is well dented in Iowa and is now safe from frost, but 50 per cent of that state's crop will need until September 28. The first killing frost in Iowa averages September 25 in the northwest to October 5 in the extreme southeast. Corn is ripening in southern states and is being harvested in Georgia and Oklahoma.

Harvesting of spring wheat, oats and barley continues along the northern border of the country, as well as the Rocky Mountain states. Threshing is well under way under favorable conditions in the central and well into the northern districts. In Oregon spring wheat yields are better than were expected, but the grain is somewhat shriveled in Montana.

Cotton picking and ginning are active in all southern cotton states, even as far west as southwestern Arizona.

Tobacco harvest and curing are becoming general in the states where the crop is grown. This year's production establishes a record.

Harvesting, drying and shipping of fruits is active in Pacific coast states, and canneries are running full force.

Forecasts of production, which may be larger or smaller than indicated, as conditions affecting the crops are better or worse, follow:

	Forecast
	September.	August.
Winter wheat	455,000,000	455,000,000
Spring wheat	136,000,000	129,000,000
All wheat	611,000,000	654,000,000
Corn	2,710,000,000	2,777,000,000
Oats	1,031,000,000	1,274,000,000
Rye	41,900,000	41,900,000
Potatoes (white)	318,000,000	364,000,000
Flax	14,900,000	14,100,000
Hay (tons)	86,200,000	84,600,000
Cotton (bales)	11,800,000	12,000,000
Apples (barrels)	67,700,000	71,000,000

Production figures for wheat, corn and hay are preliminary estimates.

Comparison of the September with the August production forecast indicates the changes in prospects caused by weather and other conditions during the month of August.

Other details of the report follow:

Spring Wheat—Condition, 48.5 per cent of a normal, compared with 63.4 last month, 94.6 last year and 77.5 the 10-year average. Indicated acre yield, 8.8 bushels, compared with 18.3 last year and 12.5 the 1910-14 average.

FINNEGAN'S PHILOSOPHY BALAAM.

"Well do I mind the story," said Finnegan. "Balaam was a highbrow that knowed less than his Jackass. He took an office to curse the people. The Jackass saved them. 'Tis all in Number Twinty-two. Och, hone! 'Tis different these times. The Jackass knew better till Balaam tamed him.

"'Lave me ride ye,' says Balaam, 'an' I'll make ye the biggest Ass in the wurld.'

"'Great,' says the Ass; 'what d'ye feed?'

"'Pork,' says Balaam.

"'Me savior,' says the Ass.

"So Balaam mounts. But soon the Jack balks.

"'Phwat is it?' says Balaam.

"'Snakes,' says the Ass; 'I't looks like the jawbone uv me mother.'

"'G'wan,' says Balaam, hittin' the Ass a clip, 'tis me furren' policy,' he says.

"'Phwat's ut for?' axes the Ass.

"'I't definds the nashun,' says Balaam.

"'How?' says the Ass.

"'Faith;' says Balaam, 'ut takes a bigger Ass than you to know that. Lave it to Brine,' says Balaam to the Ass; an' the Jack walks on meditatin'.

"'Hee, haw,' says the Ass, balkin' an' kickin'.

"'What now?' says Balaam

"'Divil a Jackass ever seen the like,' says the Ass. 'I't could be a frog,' says he, 'for ut stands up in front and sits down behind; an' 'tis mos'ly mouth says the Ass. 'I't has white feathers,' says the Jack, 'wid yaller streaks that changes he says 'to Very Crocy Red or Niagary Blue an now they're Crysall Yaller again,' says he. 'Hivins, have I been drinkin'?' screems the Ass to Balaam.

"'Saints be praised' says Balaam 'Me Watchful Waitin can still change its mind' he says. 'G'wan, where glory waits,' he says. 'G'wan, in the service uv Mankind,' says Balaam to the Ass touching him up. An' the Ass shuffles ahead, wavin' his ears in admiration

"'Hee haw! Hee-haw!' says the Jack rearin' up wid his eyes bulgin'

"'Phwat's grippin' ye now?' says Balaam impishunt like

"'I dunno says the Ass 'I't looks like the Flyin' Dutchman with a Socialist Crew he says

"'Tis me ship Bill' says Balaam 'Side step to the right' he says

"'Wah hee' Wah-hee' Wah hee' says the Jack, shyin' so he near threw his rider

"'I'll learn ye to shy at me Naval Bill' says Balaam [illegible] the baste so he cud scarce stand

"'Ye can't pass ut widout wearin Republican clothes, says the Jack in a coarse whisper.

"'Ye Ass,' says Balaam 'Don't ye know that anny clothes is better nor nakedness? G'wan' says Balaam, in tones uv thunder So the poor baste lopes off, limpin' wid pain

"I've not time to tell ye all the adventures they had but they kep' on over rough roads, now an then crossin' a ditch or a wooden plank which made even Balaam protest. Ivery tin the Jack [illegible] he got short rations an' a wallop. So when the journey was near over, the poor baste was all in, and far too proud to fight. Any Jack-Ass can be that when he's licked.

"Wan stormy night, the Jack blooms into a harmony like a Dimverat Tariff Hymn played on a gaspipe wid the feet.

"'Phwat ails ye now?' calls Balaam, clubbin' him wid both hands

"'Nivver did I pass the like,' yells the Ass, sweating and thremblin'. 'I't says ut's an eight hour law. Oh, phwat is ut?' screams the Ass to Balaam, feebly waggin' his ears.

"'I dinno phwat ut is meself,' says Balaam, 'but I know phwat ut's got,' Balaam says.

"'Phwat?' axes the poor Ass.

"'Five hundther thousand votes,' says Balaam, wid a pious air. 'G'wan, ye big Ass, an' dount ye argue wid an Idaylist,' says Balaam to the Ass.

"'We can't pass ut in the dark,' pleads the Ass. 'Lave us wait for light,' moans the Ass, weepin'.

"'Nix,' says Balaam. 'There's a hot time comin' an' the votes'll spile. Do ye thurst for sixteen more years in the wilderness? Giddap,' says he, 'purgin' y'er heart,' says Balaam, 'iv iviry thought that's selfish,' says Balaam, 'or personal,' chants Balaam to the poor Ass ticklin' the Jack's slats wid a couplin' pin.

"By this time the Ass was so wore out wid his ardyous labors, that he knew no more than Balaam himself. So, wid one despairin' cry, he dropped his ears, as he an' his master stumbled forward into the dark."

Congress, representing 100,000,000 people, is not particularly dignified in passing a law at the crack of the railroad brotherhoods' whip.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

"Where A Dollar Does It's Duty"
MASON CITY, IOWA

HARDING WET

We wi[ll] have to give it up, Mr. Harding i[s] wet. In a recent address he said churches should put swimming pools in their basements instead of steeples on the roofs. There is something utterly inept in steeples and bellrys. They are a costly and useless inheritance from the old of long since outgrown. Great ste[e]ples on churches with unfinish[ed] b[e]lfries are an indictment of practi[ca]l piety and of vanity. There ma[y] have been a time when there was [an] excuse for the bellry and the bel[l] but that time has passed. In this day [and] when every home has a clock and [e]very member of the family has a watch in the pocket or on the wris[t] here is the pardon for the churches appropriating thousands of dollars for expensive steeples and unnecess[ary] bells? Everybody knows the [va]lue of church services. There is no [in]formation in the ringing of church [bells], and only too often they shock the [ne]rves and disturb and distress the sic[k]. Under modern conditions the ste[e]ple and the bell are not only superf[luous] but an indictable misuse of mone[y] contributed to sacred cause. Mr. Hard[ing] has well expressed it. Let have more in the basement and le[ss] the roof. In the beginning in h[u]manity's childhood, the steeple was [u]sed to point to heaven, but we [h]ave come to withdraw our gaze [from] the skies to find heaven and to re[al]ize we are to build it here and now [in] men in character and righteo[us]ness. The steeple points in the w[rong] direction. The place to get busy [is] on earth, among men, helping, [do]ing, ministering. The kingdom of [he]aven is not in the sky. "The kin[g]dom of heaven is within you." If steeple is to be persisted in it s[hou]ld be turned the other end up.—[Ma]Grove Eagle.

DO IT BEFO[RE] WINTER

Paint up you[r] house, repair the leaks in the [roof] put the eaves troughs in proper [con]dition, and make any other rep[airs] necessary. It is your castle, the [one] where yer happiest moments a[re] spent, and winter of pleasure will assured if you attend to these [thi]ngs now. Your wife wants you to it, whether she tells you so or, no[t] clean out your well and see that [the] sanitary condition. The he[alth] of your family should be your [first] consideration. And then, too, it [saves] doctors bills.

Perhaps you [can't] walk about around the house leading to the front gate, or to barn, or elsewhere. Build it. [Men] should not be compelled to [wa]ste minutes scraping mud off of their feet every time they [go] out of doors, [and] it is an uncomfortable job in cold winter months.

Inspect your [roof]s and make necessary repairs. [It's] more pleasant to do it now than [to] freeze your fingers in the dead of winter. You know it from experience.

Don't forget your [ba]rn. If there are any holes in [the] sides of your barn, repair them. A shivering animal does not [do] much of its owner, and neither [do] most people.

Get your neighbors together and look over the [local] school. The young people do not understand so well the necessity of proper ventilation and other sanitary measures. But they like comfort and plenty of fresh air. You did yourself, not so long ago.

Get busy on the [job]. The need it, and you need the [exercise] better ones. Just how would you like to be a horse, and strain every muscle in the endeavor to pull a load [over] a lot of sticky mud the long [and] wearisome road to town and back? [You] didn't like it would you? Neither [does] the horse.

Go after the town officials [to] have that hole in the walk [fixed] instead of walking around it [every] time you pass along the street. They can't see it of their own accord. It is time they had it pointed out to them. Do it yourself.

HOW THEY STO[OD]

The Des Moines Re[gis]ter and Leader has the task of [explaining] what is best for the interests of Iowa and in denouncing the candidacy of W. L. Harding for governor declares his nomination was brought about by a combination of [forces], all of them working against the interests of the state." Harding carried eighty-seven of the ninety-nine counties of Iowa in the primary proposed and fostered by the Register and Leader. In the other counties he carried [only] by a vote 1219 as against 753 cast for other candidates. The vote in the county was cast largely by [Republicans] and the same thing is true throughout the state. The farmers [of Iowa] elect Harding governor of Iowa by majorities never given a candidate that office. Does the Register and Leader mean to say the farmers are "working against the best interests of the state?"—Charlton Herald.

VALUABLE KEEPSAKE

Mrs. J. W. Morse last week received a visit from an aunt, Mrs. Edward Gould of Minneapolis who formerly lived at Goldfield. She has in her possession a valuable curio which is a copy of a newspaper one hundred and sixty-seven years old. It is a copy of the Ulster County Gazette, published at Kingston, New York, on January 4, 1800. The paper is dressed in mourning for Washington, who died about that time and contains the message of Adams, then President, in relation to the observance of the funeral. The foreign news is meager and is some three months old, being printed under an October date line. The paper contains the notices of ten different sheriff's sales which would indicate that the people of that county were in straightened circumstances at that time. A man also advertises for sale a saw mill and a negro wench, the latter probably being his his most valuable personal asset. There are many curious notices and statements in the paper indicating the marvelous growth and progress of this country in a century of time. The paper is in a remarkable state of preservation considering its age and is indeed a valuable keepsake.—Belmond Herald-Press.

Now that the strike is off, the next we hear of will no doubt be another boost in freight rates. That will mean more boosts in the retail price of everything, for it is not the roads or the dealers that pay the freight it is the consumer. If the manufacturer ads five per cent to his prices, the wholesaler will tack on another ten or perhaps more, and there is no telling how much more will be set [aside] from the public before it reaches the consumer. If it was simply an increase of the one five percent [all] along the line it would not be [a] burden. But it is not. Every [one] who handles it wants to stick a little extra blood from the turnip, until by the time it reaches your home business office the original [cost] has multiplied many fold. How do you feel to be a goat anyway?

If some live merchant will spend an hour or two some evening with his store lights drawn and his all a handsome and attractive window display something unique and out of the ordinary, and then advertise it in this paper we venture the prediction that at least half of the people in this community will be around to see it, and many of them will buy just because they happen to be there. Advertising will get the people to a store that is worth going to, but the merchant and his own goods must do the selling. Step up, [gentlemen]. What merchant in this town wants the people to beat a path to his store?

Do you want to see this town grow? Do you want to see more money in circulation here? Do you want more of that money yourself? Then stop kicking and get out and push. If you see a defect, help remedy it instead of complaining. Do something yourself instead of leaving everything for others to do. This town is and always will be just what we ourselves make it, just as the live wire communities are what their own live wires make them. You can't cultivate corn with a dead horse, and you can't make a live town by simply telling others what they ought to do.

It may be true that the ways of women are past understanding, but the same is equally true of men. To prove this statement, go out and spend a day on the street. Watch every man as the women go by. Many of them will ogle and stare and blink if inches of hosiery is in sight. They do if the woman is not of their own family. But if she is, they will make desperate efforts to engage the attention of other men until the "sights" are no longer to be seen. It depends, you see, upon whose pig you have by the ear. That's the man of it, and most men are just men.

WHEN FOES MEET IN AIR

German Lieutenant Tells of Engagement in Which French Aviators Lost Their Lives.

"One afternoon a French flyer appeared," says a German lieutenant. "It circled over Douaumont and then rose high above the clouds. For a long time it seemed to be just hanging in the air. And then—from our side there arose a buzzing, a fierce, sharp buzzing, and it made straight like a bee line for the little French flyer. It went through the clouds and disappeared. Nothing could be seen. The clouds covered all. Five minutes of suspense passed, and then a shot, and after that a roaring. We waited breathlessly, and then two little black spots were seen breaking through the clouds. Tiny little spots, and these spots were the two French aviators. They grew bigger as they fell. A moment after the men came the flaming machine. It came down roaring and crashing. Its wings were yet on fire, and the red, white and blue of the tricolors looked like a revolving American barber pole. Everything crashed to the earth, a hopeless, mangled mass. Again a spot broke through the clouds. It came swift and straight, without any spectacular showing. It was Boelke returning home."

Gratitude.

"I say, the visitor told the police sergeant, "my neighbor had all his chickens stolen last night."

"How many?"

"Oh, I don't know!"

"You want to make a report of these chickens being stolen?"

"No; I'll let him do that."

"Well" (impatiently) "what do you want?"

"Why, I just wanted to ask you, if the police catch that chicken-thief, to give him my thanks!"

"What do you care for the insinuations of such a man?" said Ray Longstreth, her voice now deep and rich with feeling. "After a moment's thought no one will be influenced by them. Do not worry, Floyd. Tell papa not to worry. Surely after all these years he can't be injured in reputation by—by an adventurer."

"Yes, he can be injured," replied Floyd, quickly. "The frontier is a queer place. There are many bitter men here—men who have failed at ranching. And your father has been wonderfully successful. The ranger has dropped poison, and it'll spread."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Strangers rode into Fairdale; and other hard-looking customers, new to Duane if not to Fairdale, helped to create a charged and waiting atmosphere. The saloons did unusual business and were never closed. Respectable citizens of the town were awakened in the early dawn by rowdies carousing in the streets.

Duane kept pretty close under cover during the day. He did not entertain the opinion that the first time he walked down street he would be a target for guns. Things seldom happened that way, and when they did happen so, it was more accident than design. But at night he was not idle. He met Laramie, Morton, Zimmer, and others of like character, a secret club had been formed, and all the members were ready for action. Duane spent hours at night watching the house where Floyd Lawson stayed when he was not up at Longstreth's. At night he was visited, or at least the house was, by strange men who were swift, stealthy, mysterious—all that kindly disposed friends or neighbors would not have been. Duane had not been able to recognize any of these night visitors; and he did not think the time was ripe for a bold holding-up of one of them. Nevertheless, he was sure such an event would discover Lawson, or some one in that house to be in touch with crooked men.

Laramie was right. Not 24 hours after his last talk with Duane, in which he advised quick action, he was found behind the little bar of his restaurant with a bullet hole in his breast, dead. No one could be found who had heard a shot. It had been deliberate murder, for upon the bar had been left a piece of paper rudely scrawled with a pencil. "All friends of rangers look for the same."

This roused Duane. His first move, however, was to bury Laramie. None of Laramie's neighbors evinced any interest in the dead man or the unfortunate family he had left. Duane saw that these neighbors were held in check by fear. Mrs. Laramie was ill; the shock of her husband's death was hard on her, and she had been left almost destitute with five children. Duane rented a small adobe house on the outskirts of town and moved the family into it. Then he played the part of provider and nurse and friend.

After several days Duane went boldly into town and showed that he meant business. It was his opinion that there were men in Fairdale secretly glad of a ranger's presence. What he intended to do was food for great speculation. A company of militia could not have had the effect upon the wild element of Fairdale that Duane's presence had. It got out that he was a gunman lightning swift on the draw. It was death to face him. He had killed 30 men—wildest rumor of all. It was actually said of him he had the gun skill of Buck Duane or of Poggin.

At first there had not only been great conjecture among the vicious element, but also a very decided checking of all kinds of action calculated to be conspicuous to a keen eyed ranger. At the tables, at the bars and lounging places Duane heard the remarks: "Who's thet ranger after? What'll he do fust off? Is he waitin' fer somebody? Who's goin' to draw on him fust—an' go to hell? Jest about how soon will he be found somewheres full of lead?"

When it came out somewhere that Duane was openly cultivating the honest stay at home citizens to array them in time against the other element, then Fairdale showed its wolf teeth. Several times Duane was shot at in the dark and once slightly injured. Rumor had it that Poggin, the gunman, was coming to meet him. But the lawless element did not rise up in a mass to slay Duane on sight. It was not so much that the enemies of the law awaited his next move, but just a slowness peculiar to the frontier. The ranger was in their midst. He was interesting, if formidable. He would have been welcomed at card tables, at the bars, to play and drink with the men who knew they were under suspicion. There was a rude kind of good humor even in their open hostility.

Besides, one ranger or a company of rangers could not have held the undivided attention of these men from their games and drinks and quarrels except by some decided move. Excitement, greed, appetite were rife in them. Duane marked, however, a striking exception to the usual run of strangers he had been in the habit of seeing. Snecker had gone or was under cover. Again Duane caught a vague rumor of the coming of Poggin, yet he never seemed to arrive. Moreover, the goings-on among the habitues of the resorts and the cowboys who came in to drink and gamble were unusually mild in comparison with former conduct. This lull, however, did not deceive Duane. It could not last. The wonder was that it had lasted so long.

Duane went often to see Mrs. Laramie and her children. One afternoon while he was there he saw Miss Longstreth and Ruth ride up to the door. They carried a basket. Evidently they had heard of Mrs. Laramie's trouble. Duane felt strangely glad but he went into an adjoining room rather than meet them.

"Mrs. Laramie, I've come to see you," said Miss Longstreth cheerfully.

The little room was not very light, there being only one window and the door, but Duane could see plainly enough. Mrs. Laramie lay, hollow cheeked and haggard, on a bed. Once she had evidently been a woman of some comeliness. The ravages of trouble and grief were there to read in her worn face; it had not, however, any of the hard and bitter lines that had characterized her husband's.

Duane wondered, considering that Longstreth had ruined Laramie, how Mrs. Laramie was going to regard the daughter of an enemy.

"So you're Granger Lonstreth's girl?" queried the woman, with her bright, black eyes fixed on her visitor.

"Yes," replied Miss Longstreth, simply. "This is my cousin, Ruth Herbert. We've come to nurse you, take care of the children, help you in any way you'll let us."

There was a long silence.

"Well, you look a little like Longstreth," finally said Mrs. Laramie, "but you're not at all like him. You must take after your mother. Miss Longstreth, I don't know if I can—if I ought accept anything from you. Your father ruined my husband."

"Yes, I know," replied the girl, sadly. "That's all the more reason you should let me help you. Pray don't refuse. It will—mean so much to me."

If this poor, stricken woman had any resentment it speedily melted in the warmth and sweetness of Miss Longstreth's manner. Duane's idea was that the impression of Ray Longstret's beauty was always swiftly succeeded by that of her generosity and nobility. At any rate, she had started well with Mrs. Laramie, and no sooner had she begun to talk to the children than both they and the mother were won. The opening of that big basket was an event. Poor, starved little beggars! Duane's feelings seemed too easily roused. Hard indeed would it have gone with Jim Laramie's slayer if he could have laid eyes on him then. However, Miss Longstreth and Ruth, after the nature of tender and practical girls, did not appear to take the sad situation to heart. The havoc was wrought in that household. The needs now were cheerfulness, kindness, help action—and these girls furnished with a spirit that did Duane good.

"Mrs. Laramie, who dressed this baby?" presently asked Miss Longstreth. Duane peeped in to see a dilapidated youngster on her knee. That sight, if any other was needed, completed his full and splendid estimate of Ray Longstreth and wrought strangely upon his heart.

"The ranger," replied Mrs. Laramie.

"The ranger! exclaimed Miss Longstreth.

"Yes, he's taken care of us all since—since—" Mrs. Laramie choked.

"Oh! So you've had no help but his," replied Miss Longstreth, hastily. "No women. Too bad! I'll send some one, Mrs. Laramie, and I'll come myself."

"It'll be good of you," went on the older woman. "You see, Jim had few friends—that is, right in town. And they've been afraid to help us—afraid they'd get what poor Jim—"

"That's awful!" burst out Miss Longstreth, passionately. "A brave lot of friends! Mrs. Laramie, don't you worry any more. We'll take care of you. Here, Ruth, help me. Whatever is the matter with baby's dress?"

Manifestly Miss Longstreth had some difficulty in subduing her emotion.

"Why, it's on hind side before," declared Ruth. "I guess Mr. Ranger hasn't dressed many babies."

"He did the best he could," said Mrs. Laramie. "Lord only knows what would have become of us!"

"Then he is—is something more than a ranger?" queried Miss Longstreth, with a little break in her voice.

"He's more than I can tell," replied Mrs. Laramie. "He buried Jim. He paid our debts. He fetched us here. He bought food for us. He cooked for us and fed us. He washed and dressed the baby. He sat with me the first two nights after Jim's death when I thought I'd die myself. He's so kind, so gentle, so patient. He has kept me up just by being near. Sometimes I'd wake from from a doze, an', seeing him there, I'd know how false were all these tales Jim heard about him and believed at first. Why, he plays with the children just—just like any good man might. When he has the baby up I just can't believe he's a bloody gunman, as they say. He's good, but he isn't happy. He has such sad eyes. He looks far off sometimes when the children climb 'round him. They love him. His life is sad. Nobody need tell me—he sees the good in things. Once he said somebody had to be a ranger. Well, I say, 'Thank God for a ranger like him!'"

Duane did not want to hear more, so he walked into the room.

"It was thoughtful of you," Duane said. "Womankind are needed here. I could do so little. Mrs. Laramie, you look better already. I'm glad. And here's baby, all clean and white. Baby, what a time I had trying to puzzle out the way your clothes went on! Well, Mrs. Laramie, didn't I tell you—friends would come? So will the brighter side."

"Yes, I've more faith than I had," replied Mrs. Laramie. "Granger Longstreth's daughter has come to me. There for a while after Jim's death I thought I'd sink. We have nothing. How could I ever take care of my little ones? But I am gaining courage to—"

"Mrs. Laramie, do not distress yourself any more," said Miss Longstreth. "I shall see you are well cared for. I promise you."

"Miss Longstreth, that's fine!" exclaimed Duane. "It's what I'd have—expected of you."

It must have been sweet praise to her, for the whiteness of her face burned out in a beautiful blush.

"And it's good of you, too, Miss Herbert, to come," added Duane. "Let me thank you both. I'm glad I have you girls as allies in part of my lonely task here. More than glad for the sake of this good woman and the little ones. But both of you be careful about coming here alone. There's risk. And now I'll be going. Goodbye, Mrs. Laramie. I'll drop in again tonight. Goodbye."

"Mr. Ranger, wait!" called Miss Longstreth, as he went out. She was white and wonderful. She stepped out of the door close to him.

"I have wronged you!" she said, impulsively.

"Miss Longstreth! How can you say that?" he returned.

"I believed what my father and Floyd Lawson said about you. Now I see—I wronged you."

"You make me very glad. But, Miss Longstreth, please don't speak of wronging me. I have been a—a gunman; I am a ranger—and much said of me is true. My duty is hard on others—sometimes on those who are innocent, alas! But God knows that duty is hard, too, on me."

"I did wrong you. If you entered my home again I would think it an honor. I—"

"Please—please don't, Miss Longstreth," interrupted Duane.

"But, sir, my conscience flays me," she went on. There was no other sound like her voice. "Will you take my hand? Will you forgive me?"

She gave it royally, while the other was there pressing at her breast. Duane took the proffered hand; he did not know what else to do.

Then it seemed to dawn upon him that there was more behind this white, sweet, noble intensity of her than just the making amends for a fancied or real wrong. Duane thought the man did not live on earth who could have resisted her then.

"I honor you for your goodness to this unfortunate woman," she said, and now her speech came swiftly. "When she was all alone and helpless you were her friend. It was the deed of a man. But Mrs. Laramie isn't the only unfortunate woman in the world. I, too, am unfortunate. Ah, how I may soon need a friend! Will you be my friend? I'm so alone. I'm terribly worried. I fear—I fear— Oh, surely I'll need a friend soon—soon. Oh, I'm afraid of what you'll find out sooner or later. I want to help you. Let us save life if not honor. Must I stand alone—all alone? Will you—will you be—" Her voice failed.

It seemed to Duane that she must have discovered what he had begun to suspect—that her father and Lawson were not the honest ranchers they pretended to be. Perhaps she knew more. Her appeal to Duane shook him deeply. He wanted to help her more than he had ever wanted anything. And with the meaning of the tumultuous sweetness she stirred in him there came realization of a dangerous situation.

"I must be true to my duty," he said, hoarsely.

"If you knew me you'd know I could never ask you to be false to it."

"Well, then—I'll do anything for you."

"Oh, thank you! I'm ashamed that I believed my cousin Floyd. He lied—he lied. I'm all in the dark, strangely distressed. My father wants me to go back home. Floyd is trying to keep me here. They've quarreled. Oh, I know something dreadful will happen. I know I'll need you if—if—Will you help me?"

"Yes," replied Duane, and his look brought the blood to her face.

CHAPTER XIX.

After supper Duane stole out for his usual evening's spying. The night was was dark, without starlight, and a stiff wind rustled the leaves. Duane bent his steps toward Longstreth's ranch house. He had so much to think about that he never knew where the time went. This night when he reached the edge of the shrubbery he heard Lawson's well known footsteps and saw Longstreth's door open, flashing a broad bar of light in the darkness. Lawson crossed the threshold, the door closed, and all was dark again outside. Not a ray of light escaped from the window.

Little doubt there was that his talk with Longstreth would be interesting to Duane. He tiptoed to the door and listened, but could hear only a murmur of voices. Besides, that position was too risky. He went round the corner of the house.

This side of the big adobe house was of much older construction than the back and larger part. There was a narrow passage between the houses, leading from the outside through to the patio.

This passage now afforded Duane an opportunity, and he decided to avail himself of it in spite of the very great danger. Crawling on very stealthily, he got under the shrubbery to the entrance of the passage. In the blackness a faint streak of light showed the location of a crack in the wall. He had to slip in sidewise. It was a tight squeeze, but he entered without the slightest noise. As he progressed the passage grew a very little wider in that direction, and that fact gave rise to the thought that in case of a necessary and hurried exit he would do best by working toward the patio. It seemed a good deal of time was consumed in reaching a vantage point. When he did get there the crack he had marked was a foot over his head. There was nothing to do but find toe holes in the crumbling walls, and by bracing knees on one side, back against the other, hold himself up. Once with his eye there he did not care what risk he ran. Longstreth appeared disturbed, he sat stroking his mustache, his brow was clouded. Lawson's face seemed darker, more sullen, yet lighted by some indomitable resolve.

"We'll settle both deals tonight," Lawson was saying. "That's what I came for."

"But suppose I don't choose to talk here?" protested Longstreth, impatiently. "I never before made my house a place to—"

"We've waited long enough. This place is as good as any. You've lost your nerve since that ranger hit the town. First now, will you give Ray to me?"

"Floyd, you talk like a spoiled boy. Give Ray to you! Why, she's a woman, and I'm finding out that she's got a mind of her own. I told you I was willing for her to marry you. I tried to persuade her. But Ray hasn't any use for you now. She liked you at first. But now she doesn't. So what can I do?"

"You can make her marry me," replied Lawson.

"Make that girl do what she doesn't want to? It couldn't be done even if I tried. And I don't believe I'll try. I haven't the highest opinion of you as a prospective soninlaw, Floyd. But if Ray loved you I would consent. We'd all go away together before this damned miserable business is out. Then she'd never know. And maybe you might be more like you used to be fore the west ruined you. But as matters stand, you fight your own game with her. And I'll tell you now you'll lose."

"What 'd you want to let her come out here for?" demanded Lawson, hotly. "It was a dead mistake. I've lost my head over her. I'll have her or die. Don't you think if she was my wife I'd soon pull myself together? Since she came we've none of us been right. And the gang has put up a holler. No, Longstreth, we've got to settle thing tonight."

"Well, we can settle what Ray's concerned in, right now," replied Longstreth, rising. "Come on; we'll ask her. See where you stand."

They went out, leaving the door open. Duane dropped down to rest himself and to wait. He would have liked to hear Miss Longstreth's answer. But he could guess what it would be. Lawson appeared to be all Duane had thought him, and he believed he was going to find out presently that he was worse.

The men seemed to be absent a good while, though that feeling might have been occasioned by Duane's thrilling interest and anxiety. Finally he heard heavy steps. Lawson came in alone. He was leaden-faced, humiliated. Then something abject in him gave place to rage. He strode the room; he cursed. Then Longstreth returned, now appreciably calmer. Duane could not but decide that he felt relief at the evident rejection of Lawson's proposal.

"Don't fuss about it, Floyd," he said. "You see I can't help it. We're pretty wild out here, but I can't rope my daughter and give her to you as would an unruly steer."

"Longstreth, I can make her marry me," declared Lawson, thickly.

"How?"

"You know the hold I got on you—the deal that made you boss of this rustler gang?"

"It isn't likely I'd forget," replied Longstreth, grimly.

"I can go to Ray, tell her that, make her believe. I'd tell it broadcast—tell this ranger—unless she'd marry me."

Lawson spoke breathlessly, with haggard face and shadowed eyes. He had no shame. He was simply in the grip of passion.

Longstreth gazed with dark, controlled fury at this relative. In that look Duane saw a strong, unscrupulous man fallen into evil ways, but still a man. It betrayed Lawson to be the wild and passionate weakling. Duane seemed to see also how during all the years of association this strong man had upheld the weak one. But that time had gone for ever, both in intent on Longstreth's part and in possibility. Lawson, like the great majority of evil and unrestrained men on the border, had reached a point where influence was futile. Reason had degenerated. He saw only himself.

"But, Floyd, Ray's the one person on earth who must never know. I'm a rustler, a thief, a red handed ruler of the worst gang on the border," replied Longstreth, impressively.

Floyd bowed his head at that, as if the significance had just occurred to him. But he was not long at a loss.

"She's going to find it out sooner or later. I tell you she knows now there's something wrong out here. She's got eyes. Mark what I say."

"Ray has changed, I know. But she hasn't any idea yet that her daddy's a boss rustler. Ray's concerned about what she calls my duty as mayor. Also I think she's not satisfied with my explanations in regard to certain property."

Lawson halted in his restless walk and leaned against the stone mantelpiece. He had his hands in his pockets. He squared himself as if this was his last stand. He looked desperate, but on the moment showed an absence of his usual nervous excitement.

"Longstreth, that may well be true," he said. "No doubt all you say is true. But it doesn't help me. I want the girl. If I don't get her—I reckon we'll all go to hell!"

He might have meant anything, probably meant the worst. He certainly had something more in mind. Longstreth gave a slight start, barely perceptible, like the switch of an awakening tiger. He sat there, head down, stroking his mustache. Almost Duane saw his thought. He had long experience in reading men under stress of such emotion. He had no means to vindicate his judgment, but his conviction was that Longstreth right then and there decided that the thing to do was to kill Lawson. For Duane's part he wondered that Longstreth had not come to such a conclusion before. Not improbably the advent of his daughter had put Longstreth in conflict with himself.

Suddenly he threw off a somber cast of countenance, and he began to talk. He talked swiftly, persuasively, yet Duane imagined he was talking to smooth Lawson's passion for the moment. Lawson no more caught the fateful significance of a line crossed, a limit reached, a decree decided than if he had not been present. He was obsessed with himself. How, Duane wondered, had a man of his mind ever lived so long and gone so far among the exacting conditions of the southwest? The answer was, perhaps, that Longstreth had guided him, upheld him, protected him. The coming of Ray Longstreth had been the entering wedge of dissension.

"You're too impatient," concluded Longstreth. "You'll ruin any chance of happiness if you rush Ray. She might be won. If you told her who am she'd hate you forever. She might marry you to save me, but she'd hate you. That isn't the way. Wait. Play for time. Be different with her. Get out your drinking. She despises that. Let's plan to sell out here—stock, ranch, property—and leave the country. Then you'd have a show with her."

"I told you we've got to stand," growled Lawson. "The gang won't stand for our going. It can't be done unless you want to sacrifice everything."

"You mean double cross them? Go without their knowing? Leave them here to face whatever comes?"

"I mean just that."

"I'm bad enough, but not that bad," returned Longstreth. "If I can get the gang to let me off, I'll do it and face the music. All the same, Lawson, did it ever strike you that most of the deals the last few years have been yours?"

"Yes. If I hadn't rung them in there wouldn't have been any. You've had cold feet, and especially since this ranger has been here."

"Well, call it cold feet if you like. But I call it sense. We reached our limit long ago. We began rustling a few cattle—at a time. Rustling was laughed at. But as greed grew so did our boldness. Then came the gang, the regular trips, one thing and another till, before we knew it—before I knew it—we had deadly deals, holdups and murders on our record. Then we had to go on. It's too late to turn back!"

"I reckon we've all that. None of the gang wants to quit. They are set, I think, and I think, we can't be touched in condition, then pare and We may be blamed, but nothing can be proved. We're too—"

"There's where you're dead wrong," rejoined Longstreth emphatically. "Long ago imagined that once long ago, was bull headed. Who would ever connect Granger Longstreth with a rustler gang? I've changed my mind. I've begun to think, reasoned lately. Things. We're cattle, and we're all in a last. It's the natural life, even for, and when it reaches the for conditions grow better. Then wise deal for us would be to drop slowly until they are clear and equally and leave country, us."

"But you and I have all the all the gain," protested Lawson.

"I'll split mine."

"I won't—that's not the least that," Lawson, instantly.

Longstreth's wide his hand if it was useless to convince man. Talking not increased calmness, and now showed than impatience, a dull glint deep in his eyes.

"Your stock, property a long time, lots of gain this ranger."

"Bah!" croaked The ranger was a match to powder, can't I told you dead soon—time—same as is?"

"Yes, you mentioned the—the sition," Longstreth, ally. "I is, too, just how desired end was to be brought ill lay him out."

"The Longstreth, He laughed contemptuously, "Floyd, be a fool. You on the for 10 years packed and you've used been when their have been present in all this ranger. You to see him Neither has way to get rid to draw on he's going to do

More Preserves.

"Don't you make some pears!" asked Marie as came in to tell of her success put up India pickles, which had her of the day before. "Now I should love them," said Marjorie. "Tell me how to do. Select pears of good size and condition, then pare and For every pound allow pound of sugar, and for every pint of fruit one pint of vinegar, an ounce of whole cloves, ounce of whole cinnamon and of green ginger cut in slices. Put all the spices in a bag of cheesecloth and sew or tie the top. Drop the bag in the vinegar and when it reaches the boiling point drop in the pears. Then cook slowly until they are clear and tender. "Put fruit and sirup together in stone jar. Lay the bag of spices on top, cover and tie a muslin cloth over the whole. Store in a cool place.

"Watermelon rind preserves are nice. Cut the green and red from the rind of a melon and cut the white in any shape you choose. Take the juice of two lemons and the rind, cut into small pieces. Cook the latter with a piece of white ginger until both are tender.

"Take the weight of the fruit in sugar and water enough to dissolve it. When the syrup has cooked until it ropes, add the lemon juice and the fruit. Cook until clear.

Keep Iodine in the House.

From the Kansas City Times.

Every family should keep a bottle of tincture of iodine in its medicine chest. Then if any member gets a cut or scratch, a prompt painting of the wound with iodine will prevent infection and further trouble. Iodine is the best antiseptic for such purposes.

Physicians have told of the serious results of the former pugilist, Jeffries, has had from a cut hand. The cut was so slight that he paid no attention to it, but the place became infected and complications set in. Almost everybody knows of similar instances. A person may scratch hand a dozen times with no ill effects and the next time with no apparent cause may get a badly swollen arm.

The safe thing to do whenever the skin is broken is to wash the place with water and then paint it with iodine. If the wound is small it needs no other attention. If it is a severe cut the place should be protected by a sterile dressing—a piece of cotton from the drug store, or a piece that has been sterilized by boiling water. The treatment is some bother, but it is worth while to head off any possible trouble.

TO hold "its place in the sun," the avowed purpose of a great nation in conflict, to hold "its place in the sun," is the object ever present in business in the great fight for industrial and commercial supremacy.

To be able to hold "its place in the sun," is the supreme test of an asphalt roof. It is the sun, not rain or snow, that plays havoc with a roof. If it can resist the drying out process of the sun, which is going on upon it, day after day, the rain or snow will not affect it except to wash it clean and keep it sanitary.

Certain-teed

takes "its place in the sun" and holds it longer than other similar roofing, because it is made of the very best quality roofing thoroughly saturated with the correct blend of asphalts, and coated with a blend of harder asphalts. This outer coating keeps the inner saturation soft, and prevents the drying process so destructive to the ordinary roof.

The blend of asphalts used by the General is the result of long experience, produces a roofing more pliable than those which have less saturation, and which therefore, harder and drier.

At each of the General's big mills, expert chemists are constantly employed to refine, test and blend the asphalts used; to experiment for possible improvements. The constant endeavor is to make the best roofing still better.

The quality of CERTAIN-TEED is such that it is guaranteed for 5, 10 or 15 years according to thickness (1, 2 or 3 ply). Experience proves that it lasts longer. Behind this guarantee is the responsibility of the world's largest manufacturer of roofings and building papers.

When Hogan Telephoned.

Hogan, the elder, was doing useful work in the stables, since most of the younger men in the nearby little market town had enlisted.

One day he was sent by his employer to telephone to a dealer for various loads of hay, straw and oats. After many struggles with that terrible instrument which is supposed to save time, he got into communication with the dealers at last.

"I say, we're waitin' fer that last order for hay, straw and oats. We want it at once. Hay, straw and oats."

Back came the answer:

"Very good. But who's it for?"

"Arr, now. Would ye try to be funny with an ould man what's doing his bit? It's fer the horses av coorse."—London Mail.

Resources of Rumania.

The National Geographic Society of Washington.

Washington, D. C.—The weight Rumania can throw into the scales of war in behalf of the entente allies is suggested in the following war geography bulletin issued today by the National Geographic Society on the resources of this, the largest of the Balkan nations:

"With a field army of 290,000 men, thoroughly trained and fully equipped, and with a reserve force of at least 200,000 additional fighting men, Rumania's late entrance upon the great battlefield of Europe will inevitably have great weight. But of equal or perhaps even greater importance to the allies will be the fact that with this country's declaration of war against the central powers her highways and her railway systems can be used in moving an unlimited number of Russian soldiers to the northern frontier of Bulgaria and the southeastern gateways into Hungary.

"In the present struggle it has been easier on many occasions to secure men for the firing line than to control the facilities for transporting them and to find the necessary food for them after their arrival in the trenches. Rumania possesses the means to solve in part both these problems.

"With an area about equal to that of the state of Arkansas, but with a population nearly five times as great, Rumania is essentially an agricultural country, producing vastly more wheat in 1915 than Bulgaria, Serbia, Greece and Montenegro combined. Its crop last year (89,000,000 bushels) equalled the joint production of our two fertile wheat states, Minnesota and Iowa. The yield of barley, corn, oats and rye is also large, and during the two years of war the country has waxed rich playing the role of an Egyptian Joseph to starving brother nations—the well paying central powers.

"Before the war the value of Rumania's grain exports exceeded $100,000,000 annually, and second in the list of her international sales was petroleum, valued at nearly $8,000,000 a year. Her forests, too, are a source of revenue, for the well-wooded slopes of the Carpathians, which form the western boundary between Rumania and Hungary, yield excellent oak, beech, pine and fir, the exports being valued at $5,000,000.

"Rumania is famous for its salt mines and could supply all Europe with this commodity for hundreds of years. In some mines the beds are from 600 to 750 feet thick and at Sarat there is a salt mountain whose sides are quarried with electric machines which cut out blocks each a cubic yard in size, while the fragments are scooped up in steam shovels.

"The precedent of her success in choosing the right moment to join in the Balkan imbroglio of 1913 would seem to have had considerable influence in prompting Rumania's waiting policy in the present instance. This country remained aloof in the first Balkan war (1912). During the second war, when Bulgaria, Serbia and Greece were fighting over the spoils which had been wrested from the Turks in the previous struggle, Rumania again remained an interested bystander until the closing days of the conflict; then she threw her weight with Greece and Serbia in time to demand as her reward the valuable strip of Bulgarian territory lying north and east of a line drawn between Turtukai and Baltchik, in the Dobrudja region, between the Danube and the Black sea. This prize added some 2,900 square miles to her area.

"If, as is reported, Russia has promised the big Balkan state the important province of Bessarabia, which adjoins it on the northeast, 17,000 square miles will be added to Rumanian domains, together with 2,500,000 kindred people. In addition to this tempting spoil of diplomacy, it is highly probable that the Rumanians will expect Bukowina as their share of the 'parings' in the event the central powers are defeated, for this Austrian crown land was a part of the Rumanian province of Moldavia up to 1777 at which time it was appropriated by the larger nation. Rumanians still comprise a large percentage of Bukowina's population.

"The Rumanian war budget for the fiscal year ending just prior to the outbreak of the war was $26,000,000. The infantry of the standing army is equipped with Mannlicher magazine rifle (five cartridges) named after the Austrian inventor and much used in both Austria and Germany. The horse and field batteries are armed with Krupp quick firing 75 millimetre guns.

"In the transportation of Russian troops as well as in handling her own forces to the Austro-Hungarian and Bulgarian borders Rumania's 2,300-mile railway system, nearly 46 per cent of which is state owned, will play an extremely important role, as will also that great water highway, the Danube, which flows out of Austria-Hungary at the Kazan Pass and in its eastward course to the Black sea forms the navigable southern boundary of Rumania for nearly 350 miles. The 1,886,000 miles of national roads criss-crossing the country would also greatly facilitate the despatch of troops."

SOME PITHY SAYINGS OF GREAT COMMANDERS

From the Boston Transcript.

It is still an open question by what epigrams the present war will be remembered, or rather, what epigrams will be associated with the story of this war, since there will be no fear but that the war will be remembered on its own account, entirely apart from anything that may be said by any of its protagonists.

Almost every war has produced one or more memorable sayings. Some of them may be, indeed certainly are, apocryphal. Most of them, including some of the very best, are as certainly authentic. Napier may not have announced his conquest of Scinde in the laconic and punning message, "Peccavi!" but Caesar did report 'Veni, vidi, vici." Wellington may not have cried "Up, guards, and at them!" but Nelson certainly did display the signal "England expects every man to do his duty!" Cambronne did not say "The guard dies, but never surrenders!" but MacMahon did say, "Here I am, and here I stay!" There are those who question whether Latour d'Auvergne's name was habitually responded to at roll call with 'Dead on the field of honor'" though presumption as well as sentiment incline us to believe the story true. But "Old Put" did say at Bunker Hill, "Wait till you see the whites of their eyes'" and Paul Jones did say at Flamborough Head, "I have not yet begun to fight'"

Indeed, many of the most notable sayings of this kind are matters of record, beyond dispute. Lawrence's "Don't give up the ship!" is not to be challenged, and, of course, Perry's "We have met the enemy and they are ours" is entirely authentic. There is no reason to question "A little more grape, Captain Bragg!" Grant's "Unconditional surrender," "I propose to move immediately upon your works," and "I propose to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer," were matters of manuscript record, as were also his chivalric "Officers to retain their side arms" at Appomattox, and his "Let us have peace" after the end of the great struggle. The brief war with Spain produced several sayings worthy of all remembrance, and entirely authentic. Among them were Captain Phillip's "Don't cheer, boys, those poor devils are dying!" and Dewey's "You may fire when you are ready, Gridley!" So, too, was Dewey's grim and effective message to Admiral Von Diedrichs, "Tell your admiral that if he wants a fight he can have it right now!" So, too, was "Joe" Wheeler's superb lapse of memory into reminiscence of one of his lightning charges in the civil war, when, leading men of the north as well as of the south against the Spanish foe, he yelled again the confederate war cry of his youth, "Give the Yankees hell, boys!"

But what has the present war produced? So far as we know, nothing upon the field of battle. There the big mortars have done the talking, and poisonous gases have stifled human speech. Two utterances, however, stand out distinct, indisputable and unforgettable; though the world might be glad not to remember them. They are "A scrap of paper," and "Too proud to fight!" But they were words of diplomats and not of warriors.

Hope In the Paralysis Cases.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

With the various laboratories of the country working on the problem of the cause and the prevention of infantile paralysis, it is inevitable that the isolation of the germ and the specific method of its transmission will be ascertained in time and a flood of light thrown on what now seems such a profound mystery. At the same time the use of the several serums that have been developed from the blood of those who have had the disease, or from animals that have acquired an immunity through the use of the attenuated virus, may prove of the highest practical value even during the present epidemic. With these possibilities in sight it is to be hoped that the experiments now under way in the laboratories of the state department of health will lead to a discovery of such universal importance as will put the affliction in the list of the known preventable diseases whose cause and cure are well understood, as in the case of typhoid or diphtheria.

Until the laboratories have announced their positive findings, however, the authorities will be forced to rely on the usual quarantine for the protection of the community and on the usual methods for discovery of the afflicted. Consequently there seems to be a prevailing opinion among scientific men that flies are the transmitter of infection that the city householder against ought to the home tion of the milk with certificates from the dairymen who produce the milk supply of Philadelphia is a good move. Flies in an infected farm house might easily pollute the milk, which in turn would directly or through the agency of other flies, again infect individuals to whom the milk was served. Moreover, since the famous European specialist, Professor Netter, of Paris, advocates that the streets "be watered frequently and profusely" in cities in an effort to reduce cases in an epidemic, it is a pity that our street cleaning bureau seems to have taken no drastic steps to meet the situation. A more extended congeries of dusty, dirty highways in the congested area of the city has never before been seen.

In the presence of the hot wave it is perhaps too optimistic to say that with the advent of cooler weather the disease will decline at once. But its record as a hot weather affliction is beyond dispute. And, however the present conditions may seem unfavorable to its early stamping out it is clear, from the splendid cooperation among all the officials of the state and city, that no epidemic has ever been so intelligently handled.

Land of Sure Content.

From the Baltimore American.

Always human kind has dreamed of a Utopia—of a region to be found somewhere free from trouble and worry, where life moves along with a charmful zest. There isn't much of the earth that hasn't been explored and mapped, but, none the less, the hunt for the land of gilt edge opportunity is not abandoned. Just at present Alaska seems to be the land of big promise. Cold? Oh, not so cold that wheat, oats, potatoes, flax, hay, strawberries, apples, pigs, sheep, reindeer, Shorthorn cattle and a few other things cannot be grown there.

In an article in Leslie's Magazine, A. Burton Hepburn tells us once again that there are 60,000 square miles of land in the southern valleys of Alaska that are as good, as to soil and climate, as the best lands of Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland. In other words, these valleys, having about five times the area of Maryland, would, if settled as densely as the Scandinavian countries, sustain a population of 30,000,000. But there is an additional 100,000 square miles of Alaska suitable for sheep and cattle grazing and another 100,000 square miles that can be used as reindeer range.

And the mineral and fishery wealth, as the advance agents are so constantly reminding us, are of wonderful proportions. Alaska, they are telling us, is capable of sustaining a population of over 50,000,000. If piped heat is necessary for man and beast in winter time—there is the coal to make the steam that heats the pipes.

In the Housewife's Hands.

From the Chicago Herald.

While wheat prices have not reached the altitude of two years ago, flour prices are higher than then. The reason is a probable wheat crop smaller than in 1914. Hence it is to be feared that dearer bread is a prospect that must be faced. Conversation about "speculation" may be interesting but is plainly unlikely to get anywhere in the face of the facts of supply and demand.

The head of a large Chicago baking concern usefully points out that housewives have it in their power considerably to relieve the situation by preferring the large or 10-cent loaf to the smaller or 5-cent. The cost of production is less per pound of bread. Especially is it less for the wrapped loaf, which on sanitary grounds is increasingly and rightly demanded.

Whether there would be economy in more home baking is disputed. Most women who can produce satisfactory bread insist there would be. Others insist that when all elements of cost are taken into account it is cheaper to let those who make a large-scale business of baking do the work. The decision is, perhaps, largely one of personal taste and domestic facilities.

However, it is evident that relief from the burden of dearer bread is largely in the housewife's hands. She may, perhaps, solve the problem by baking more and buying less. Leaders of the baking trade, both locally and in its national convention, promise no marked rise in prices at present if the public will help them by preferring larger loaves.

Rare Breed.

From the Youngstown Telegram.

Teddy is the joy of a north hill neighborhood, not on account of his ancestry, because Teddy is a dog of varied antecedents, but because he is one of the best natured and most highly accomplished "purps" imaginable.

To be plain and frank, Teddy is a mongrel and this fact was conveyed to one little boy who urged his father to get him a dog just like him.

The little boy knew Teddy was a mongrel, but his idea of what "mongrel" meant was surprising when revealed to his father.

"What kind of a dog would you like?" the father questioned when he finally consented to make the purchase.

"Just like Teddy."

"But Teddy is a mongrel."

"Yes; that's what I want, too," said the youngster, "a full blooded mongrel."

HAD GRAND DAY'S SHOOTING

Amateur Sportsman Thoroughly Enjoyed Himself Until Unfortunately His Supplies Gave Out.

"Awfully sorry, old chap," said the host, greeting his guest, who had arrived for a week-end with the guns, "but I shan't be able to come out today! However, a sportsman like you'll be able to get on by yourself. 'Ere's a gun, and 'ere's a bag o' ferrets. Keep well in the wood, and you ought to 'ave plenty of sport."

So away went the cockney sportsman, gloriously arrayed in glaring leggings, deer-stalker and Norfolk jacket.

At about umpty-um p. m. the mighty hunter returned.

"Well, 'ow'd you get on, ole chap?" asked his host.

"Oh, grand! Capital sport! Got any more?"

"Any more what?"

"Why, any more of those squirrel things you gave me in that bag. I've shot that lot!"—London Tit-Bits.

Farm Lands Increase in Value.

The value of farm lands of the United States is estimated at $45.55 per acre, as compared with $40.85 a year ago, $40.31 two years ago, $38.10 three years ago and $36.23 four years ago. The census reported the value of farm lands in 1910 as $32.40, and in 1900 as $15.57 per acre.

In recent years the value of farm lands has been increasing at the rate of about 5 per cent a year, or approximately $2 per acre per year. The exceptional increase of the past year may be explained partly by the reaction in the southern cotton states following a temporary depression last year, and partly by the stimulus given by the war to prices, particularly of grain.

A Woman's Problem

How to Feel Well During Middle Life Told by Three Women Who Learned from Experience.

The Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Read these letters:—

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I started the Change of Life five years ago. I always had a headache and backache with bearing down pains and I would have heat flashes very bad at times with dizzy spells and nervous feelings. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new person and am in better health and no more troubled with the aches and pains I had before I took your wonderful remedy. I recommend it to my friends for I cannot praise it enough."—Mrs. Margaret Grassman, 759 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Beverly, Mass.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for nervousness and dyspepsia, when I was going through the Change of Life. I found it very helpful and I have always spoken of it to other women who suffer as I did and have had them try it and they also have received good results from it."—Mrs. George A. Dunbar, 17 Roundy St., Beverly, Mass.

Erie, Pa.—"I was in poor health when the Change of Life started with me and I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, or I think I should not have got over it as easy as I did. Even now if I do not feel good I take the Compound and it restores me in a short time. I will praise your remedies to every woman for it may help them as it has me."—Mrs. E. Kissling, 931 East 24th St., Erie, Pa.

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving women's suffering as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Women may receive free and helpful advice by writing the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Such letters are received and answered by women only and held in strict confidence.

¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

STRONG LECTURE COURSE

The 1916-17 Lyceum Course to be held in Klemme this year is one of the strongest ever offered here and contains talent not often seen in the smaller places. The course this year should have the support of all interested in high class entertainments and the Idle Hour Theatre Company who have guaranteed the course should not be turned down when they call on you for season tickets.

The following are numbers and the dates they will be given:

H. R. Manlove, Entertainer, Thursday, October 5th, 1916. He is known as, "Man of many Faces". We have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Manlove on two different occasions and if he does not make you laugh it is time you were seeing a doctor

The Kellam Co., male quartette, will be here on Tuesday evening, November 14th. They are a very strong musical organization and every lover of good music should not pass up this strong number.

R. L. Kemple, lecturer, Tuesday, December 5th. Mr. Kemple has been giving lectures all over the Northwest for a number of years and he is simply great. He has been called back as much as three years in succession to a number of places, and his lecture, "The American Boy" which he will give here will be worth the price of a whole season ticket to anyone, both young or old.

The Smith-Spencer Concert Company are to be here Thursday, January 11th. This number consists of three ladies, in readings, vocal and violin solos. They play to an open date here last year to a small but very appreciative audience who voted them to be the best that has ever visited the town in their special line of entertainment.

The Patricks, are the last number on the course and are to be here Saturday, February 10th. This is another unusual musical organization and they are being called back for a second and third visit to a number of places not far distant.

PREACHED FAREWELL SERMON

Smith of Gladbrook, will have charge of the Methodist church here Rev. Meyer preached his farewell sermon last Sunday forenoon, and on Monday loaded his household effects for shipment. During Rev. Meyer's residence here he has won the friendship of a large circle of Fenton people who regret his departure, but extend best wishes for his welfare in this new charge. To show their gratitude for services rendered during his ministry here the congregation of his church planned a farewell reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer which was given at the parsonage last Saturday evening, and as a token of the esteem in which they are being held Mr. and Mrs. Meyer were presented with a beautiful dining room rug.

On this occasion 87 plates were set besides those for the children. Rev. and Mrs. Meyer expect to leave about the middle of the week for their new home in Klemme, and with their departure they take with them the best wisnes of a host of friends.—Fenton Reporter.

OUR TWO BILLION DOLLAR CONGRESS

It was but a comparatively few years ago when the whole country was talking of the "billion dollar congress." Now a "two billion dollar congress" has just closed and but little is heard of the enormous expenitures. From this it would seem that money is so plentiful in the United States that even the colossal sum of two billion dollars is viewed with indifference. As a matter of fact, money is plentiful in this country, but it is not well proportioned as to population We are rapidly approaching the European status of collection the wealth of a nation in the hands of a comparatively few of the people, while the great mass are daily approaching nearer to a hand to mouth existence It is true that a certain class of employes are well paid, but it is equally true that other classes of working people, themselves quite necessary to the existence of a well balanced country receive hardly enough to keep soul and body together. Some day the congress of the United States will have to enact readjusting legislation, curtail the size of individual and collective fortunes and incomes, and see that the underdog has at least a fighting chance to live

RELATIVES TO PROBE IOWA WOMAN'S DEATH

They Think Miss Danielson Was Murdered After Being Tricked Into Mock Marriage.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 16.—Gabriel Danielson, of Gowrie, Ia., told local authorities today he would take steps against Dr. Percival Allen, of Seattle, Wash., following the death of Danielson's sister, 11 days after her supposed marriage to Allen. The Seattle physician recently was convicted on statutory charges filed following his trip with Miss Danielson from Fort Dodge to Seattle.

Danielson said that examination by experts at the University of Minnesota had revealed traces of poison in the lead girl's stomach, and that a test of the fluid used to embalm the body had developed no trace of that poison. Miss Danielson was the daughter of a wealthy farmer living near Gowrie.

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 15.—Dr John O. Taft, who was Anna Marie Danielson's physician, declared today that unless charges of a serious nature are placed against Dr Percival Allen within the next few days he will start for Seattle in connection with the case, accompanied by attorneys in charge of the woman's estate.

Dr. G B. Frank Foster who conducted the chemical examination of the woman's stomach at the University of Minnesota, will be called to Seattle soon, it is expected, personally to submit his report to the authorities there Dr. Taft said Dr Frankforter declared he found traces of poison in the stomach

Miss Danielson owner of an estate valued at $100,000, met Dr. Allen on a steamship while traveling between San Francisco and Seattle last spring, according to friends here, who declare the woman wrote of her marriage to the doctor and later confided that she had been trapped into a mock marriage She died in her apartment in Seattle on July 10. Before going west Miss Danielson made her home here.

NEW REGISTRATION IN ALL CITIES OF IOWA

These 1916 Lists Will Be Good For Four Years—Sept. 28 Is Last Filing Date.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 15.—W. S. Allen, secretary of state, has ruled that September 28 is the last day for filing petitions of nomination for the election November 7.

The prohibition party is the only faction in Iowa which has to use the petition method of placing candidates on the ballot. That party failed to poll 2 per cent of the total vote at the last election and, therefore, lost its right to be known in Iowa as a political party. The backers of the party at a convention at Cedar Rapids named candidates for governor and state offices. If the petitions are filed in time the names will go on the ballot.

Withdrawals from the ballot can be filed up to October 7. After that date no candidate can have his name stricken from the ballot

Nine cities of Iowa this fall for the first time in their history will require registration. One city which previously had registration will not require it in the future. These changes are due to the result of the 1915 census. The state law provides for registration of voters in cities of 3,500 population or over. The nine cities passed the 3,500 mark and the one city in question fell below it

The new registration cities are Eagle Grove, Estherville, Belle Plaine, Iowa Falls, Knoxville, Missouri Valley, Spencer, Vinton and Waverly.

Glenwood, which formerly had registration, fell under the 3,500 at the last census and, therefore, drops registration this fall.

The law requires that new registration lists be made up in all cities of the state this fall. The new lists will be good for four years. Registration will be necessary in order for voters to cast ballots by mail.

FAVORABLE WEATHER FOR MATURING IOWA CORN CROP

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 15 —The bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service for the week ending September 12, says:

"Except over the south central counties the week was generally favorable for all farming interests. The temperature was considerably above the normal, and there was sufficient sunshine to rush the corn crop toward maturity. It is much farther advanced than the reports indicated it would be a week ago In many localities the bulk of the crop is now beyond danger of frost and probably 65 per cent of all of the crop is fully matured. Silo filling is being rushed and considerable fodder is being cut with corn in excellent condition. Much seed corn has been gathered and sweet corn canning factories are running to full capacity Copious to heavy showers occurred in nearly all parts of the state, except the south central counties, where the drought is unbroken and becoming serious. Streams are dry and wells are failing, and, as a result water for stock is getting scarce in many localities. Over the remainder of the state pastures are greatly improved and plowing is progressing rapidly and some winter wheat sown The rain, however, came too late for potatoes, which will be at the best not more than half of a crop. Rain is badly needed in some southern sections for plowing, seeding and to replenish the water supply."

The feature of the grade show, however, was the foal class. Thirty-five head of rugged, growthy youngsters were lined up for judgment. Mr. Kennedy pronounced this to be the most remarkable class of grade foals that it had ever been his pleasure to see. After selecting the 11 best from which to choose the winners he said there were still enough good colts left to do credit to any community.

In the pure breds, as in the grades, the weanling class was well represented and the winners were declared to be equal if not superior to the winners at the Iowa state fair.

MEXICO ELECTION DATE IS FIXED BY CARRANZA ORDER

New National Assembly To Be Chosen October 15 To Revise Constitution, Call Announces.

CHIEF DEFENDS RECENT ACTS

Presidential Election Will Take Place In Spring as Soon as Congress Has Completed Its Task.

Mexico City, Mex., Sept. 16.—Carranza's purpose in issuing last night a call for the election of delegates to the general assembly to consider changes in the constitution are set forth in the preamble of the decree now made public here. The preamble reflects the platform of the constitutionalists as set forth in the plan of Guadalupe in 1913 before the downfall of General Huerta, and elaborated at Vera Cruz, and says that it shows clearly that the program of the constitutionalists provided that when their cause was triumphant and municipal elections had taken place, the first chief should call for the election of a congress, give an account of his administration, and have his actions ratified or modified by congress. He was then to call a presidential election and turn over the executive power to the legally elected president.

Flays His Enemies.

The enemies of the constitutionalists, General Carranza continues, omitted nothing to prevent the carrying out of the program, even going so far as to imperil the dignity of the republic and endanger the sovereignty of Mexico by provoking conflicts with a neighboring republic, seeking to bring about intervention on the pretext that there was no protection for lives and properties of foreigners. They also pretended to seek intervention for humanitarian considerations.

The enemies of the constitutionalists, General Carranza says, further have imputed to him motives which he never entertained. Accordingly, he determined to forestall attacks by a frank and sincere declaration that the reforms he has effected are not intended to lead to the establishment of a dictatorship. On the other hand, the government to be established will be of such form as to demonstrate categorically that sovereignty resides with the people, in whom it should be exercised for the public benefit. Both federal and state rights will be respected and the spirit of the constitution will be carried out.

Purpose of Revision.

The only purpose is to purge the constitution of defects in the way of obscurity and contradiction or of clauses inserted for the purpose of nullifying domestic rights.

Then follow the provisions determined upon by General Carranza to carry out his purpose. The election of delegates to the constitutional assembly will be held October 15. Business sessions will begin December 1 and will be limited to two months. As soon as a constitution is adopted, a presidential election will be arranged and the assembly will be dissolved.

Joint Border Patrol Not Feasible, Bliss Believes

New London, Conn., Sept. 15.—Practical obstacles have arisen in the consideration by American-Mexican joint commissioners here of numerous suggestions for the pacification of the border, which make it seem improbable at this time that any agreement can be formulated without prolonged discussion.

Maj. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, assistant chief of staff of the army, was before the commission today to point out objections that can be raised to many of the proposals, including that of an international constabulary to relieve the military forces of both countries of the border patrol work they are now doing.

The commission held only a brief session, the Mexican party planning to leave for New York today to attend a celebration there tomorrow of Mexican national holiday, commemorating the declaration of her independence and her throwing off of Spanish rule. They will return Monday when the conferences will be resumed.

While the attitude of General Bliss was expressed to the commissioners here has not been revealed, it is believed he shares the views of many army officers familiar with the border situation that no satisfactory solution can be found that is not based upon the establishment and maintenance of stable government in Mexico. Even the project of forming a border police force to be jointly supported by the two governments is open to objection as it is pointed out that no matter what plan might be employed to administer its affairs and direct its movements, its joint character would be hard to maintain.

MANN MAY BE NEXT SPEAKER OF HOUSE

Renomination Virtually Assures Re-election and Plum of House Changes.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 15.—News rom Chicago that Rep. "Jim" Mann, epublican House leader, has been renominated by a big vote over Rev. Melourne P. Boynton, a progressive republican who opposed him, was viewed here today as of much political importance. It means, in all probability, Mann's reelection to congress and, if the republicans get the House, that he will be elected speaker. He has opposition among House republicans, and there is a great deal of dissatisfaction over his leadership, but it does not look as if he could be kept from the speakership.

CAR MAGNATES TO FIGHT TO FINISH

Claim They Have Enough Strike Breakers to Keep Street Railway Lines In Operation.

New York, Sept. 14 - A sympathetic strike of 70,000 trade unionists allied with the striking street railway employes will be called Saturday night unless Mayor Mitchel and the public service commission succeed in bringing about an amicable settlement prior to that time, was the prediction made by James P. Holland, president of the state federation of labor, at a mass meeting held today, following a parade of the striking traction men and sympathizers.

New York, Sept. 15.—Leaders of the striking railway employes estimate that more than 10,000 men would take part in a parade and mass meeting today while city officials and the heads of both sides of the controversy held conferences in a further effort to break the deadlock which has partly tied up most of the surface car lines in Manhattan and the Bronx boroughs and Westchester.

The parade was planned to start at 11 o'clock and proceed from Eighty-six street to Union square, where a mass meeting will be held this afternoon Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, Meyer London, a prominent socialist, and leaders of the car men's union were on the program of speakers.

Mayor Mitchel admitted that he had no plan which promised a settlement of the strike. Suggestions to grant a franchise to a motor omnibus company or to ask the governor to call a special session of the legislature to enact a compulsory arbitration law were rejected by the mayor

Officials of the transit company persisted in their refusal to submit their side of the dispute to arbitration, and asserted that the service of the surface lines is being increased daily by the employment of strike breakers. Nevertheless, the elevated and subway lines and steam railroads' transportation between Manhattan and Westchester continue greatly congested.

Confident that they had available enough men to enable them to carry through a successful siege against the union, the New York Railways company, operating many surface car lines, has dismissed the employment agencies which have been engaging strike breakers, and more than 1,000 men employed to take the place of men strikers have been discharged. The officials said they had enough men to operate the elevated and subway lines, but not enough to man all the surface cars.

Despite the maintenance of regular schedules on the subway and elevated lines of the Interborough Rapid Transit company and the gradual restoration of service on the surface lines, leaders of the striking street railway employes declared today they were far from being defeated. They hinted that the danger of a "sympathetic" strike is not yet over.

Five trolley cars came together in a series of read end collisions on Westchester avenue in the Bronx today and two passengers were injured, one seriously. The accident occurred at the foot of a steep incline and the car crews who said they were strikebreakers, claimed the rails had been greased as the brakes would not hold

CLAIM RUMANIANS BUTCHER BULGARS

Fearful Outrages Said to Have Been Perpetrated By Army Fleeing In District of Dobrudja.

Berlin, Sept. 15.—(wireless to Sayville.)—According to a Sofia dispatch to the Overseas news agency, Bulgaria is greatly aroused over the atrocities upon the Bulgarians in Dobrudja charged against the Rumanians and the entire press is demanding punitive measures.

The Bulgarian government, adds the dispatch, intends to invite the diplomatic representatives of neutral countries at Sofia to make an inspection of the district and will register an energetic protest with neutral powers.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Sept. 15.—The retreat of the Rumanians and Russians in Dobrudja was accompanied by the most horrible cruelties, especially on the part of the Rumanians against the defenseless population Dobrudja formerly was Bulgarian territory. A report from the commanderinchief, dated September 10, says

"Since the first day after the crossing of the frontier it has been established that the Rumanian army has committed a series of inhuman atrocities which more and more prove to have been incredibly bestial. Some days before the declaration of war the Rumanian authorities took all cattle without formal requisition. When the Rumanians retreated they formed special detachments for the burning of Bulgarian villages. The villages of Ciskioy, Aitomrovo and Screbarna and others in the vicinity of Turtakai and Silistria are still burning. One detachment defeated near Sansalar September 7, sent a company with two officers to the village of Screbarna. All the male inhabitants were assassinated during the night. The streets were filled with the bodies of innocent persons, mutilated in the most horrible fashion. A number of children were burned in locked houses. The women and the remaining children were carried to Silistria.

"On September 9 the men of Alifak were taken to the bank of the Danube and killed mercilessly. Their bodies were thrown into the river. Inhabitants of the villages of Kalipetrovo, Aitmir, Cradmur and Dabuk were transported to the west bank near Kabarass in order to protect the cowardly enemy from our fire."

GREAT FOREST FIRES RAGE IN CALIFORNIA

Thousands of Acres of Valuable Timber and Farm Lands Burned Over.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 15.—The big basin and the big trees in the Redwood park are safe from the forest fire that last night menaced them, according to reports from the army of fire fighters today, unless a wind should fan the surrounding embers into renewed activity.

San Francisco, Sept 15—Federal and state forestry officials were making every effort today to conquer several forest fires burning over thousands of acres of timber and farm lands along the central California coast. Hundreds of volunteers have been called upon, and the prisoners of one county jail were released that they might aid.

Reports early today from San Jose, Monterey, Santa Rosa and other towns where the work of fighting the flames is being directed indicated most of the fires were being controlled.

A stand was being made at the beginning of the giant redwood forest against the largest fire in the Santa Cruz mountains.

Rumored New Bandit Raids Along Border Are Planned

Washington, D. C., Sept. 15.—Mysterious reports that trouble is brewing along the Mexican border are reaching the war department. In a general way they are similar to the "hunches" which were given to high army officers before the Villa raid on Columbus. One report is that Villistas, who are hostile to Wilson, plan a series of border attacks shortly before the election in order to try to show the United States that the administration policy has not brought peace. The war department does not know how much credit to give to such rumors, but in the light of past experience it will keep the border forces on the alert.

SEVERE STRUGGLE BEGUN IN TURKEY

British Army In Mesopotamia Reported to Have Launched an Offensive Along the Tigris.

London, Sept. 16.—Renewal of heavy fighting in Mesopotamia with the British on the offensive is reported in a delayed official statement issued at Constantinople on September 9. The British are said to have lost 2,000 men in the engagement.

Following is the statement received by way of Berlin:

"In the Euphrates sector the enemy attempted a surprise attack. His effort was frustrated and he was forced to flee. In the Tigris sector we carried out heavy attacks successfully. The enemy attempted surprise attacks at the north and was repulsed by our counter attacks, sustaining heavy losses. While storming a height the enemy lost 2,000 men.

"According to the latest news from Rumania, our troops, supported by Germans and Bulgarians, reports strong forces of Russians and Rumanians in northern Dobrudja."

BURNING STEAMER WINS DEATH RACE

Pacific Liner Congress Burns With Loss of $2,100,000 Shortly After Discharging Passengers.

Marshfield, Ore., Sept. 15.—The Pacific Coast Steamship company's liner Congress swung on her anchor chain at the entrance to Coos bay today, a black and burned out hulk, as a result of a fire which caused her to race for this port last night. Every one of the 253 passengers on board and the crew of 175 were landed safely last night by the dredge Col. P. S. Michie.

Several members of the crew who were overcome by smoke were all reported early today to be recovering. None of the passengers appeared to have suffered any ill effects whatever and they were loud in their praise of the way the vessel was managed. Order was maintained on board up until the departure of the last boat load from the Congress to the Michie, which came alongside when the burning vessel was enveloped in a pall of smoke.

Loss Is $2,100,000.

All the ship's papers and valuables, it was confirmed today, were burned.

These valuables, estimated as worth $50,000, together with the vessel's cargo valued at about an equal amount, probably will bring the total loss to $2,100,000. The original cost of the Congress was $1,250,000, but on account of the war a valuation of $2,000,000 had been placed on the vessel. Virtually nothing remains for salvage, although the hull may be saved and the ship rebuilt.

The cause of the fire remains a mystery and probably will not be definitely established. The fire was discovered in the second steerage, smoke being observed issuing from this part of the vessel, and none of the crew who battled with the flames succeeded in reaching the point of origin or even definitely locating the exact spot whence the flames came.

Fire Is Mystery.

The belief is held, however, that the flames, if they did not originate in the vicinity of the fuel tanks, at least reached them, as the entire vessel is believed to have been gutted, and the theory is advanced that the oil must have been the principal food for the flames.

Capt. Nahum E. Cousins, of the Congress, for 30 years a navigator on this coast, holds a diamond medal presented to him by his employers for subduing a fire on the steamer Queen in 1904. At that time Cousins put his passengers over side in life boats, while the crew put the fire out. Then he reembarked the passengers and made his destination.

A year ago he married Miss Julia Kirby, of Minneapolis, Minn., whom he had met aboard the Congress.

STAR OF CHILE SAFE WITH 200 MEN ABOARD

San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 15.—The Alaska Packers' association bark, Star of Chile, reported last night in the breakers near here with 200 cannery hands and a load of salmon from Bristol Bay, Alaska, was believed to be safe today.

A tug sent to rescue the bark, with orders to report if she was in serious danger, was not heard from, and vessel men took this to mean that the Star of Chile was lying outside the harbor waiting for the fog to lift.

ROUND UP SLACKERS.

London, England.—Steps are now being taken by the recruiting authorities to examine the floating population of London in lodging houses and elsewhere for the purpose of finding shirkers from army service. Calls are being made at private houses for the same purpose. The shirkers are said to form a small minority, but there are believed to be enough of them in London alone to make up an army corps.

SHARP NOTE SENT SWEDEN BY PARIS

French Government Takes Exceptions to Swedish Policy on Submarine and Mail Issues.

Paris, Sept. 16.—The French government has instructed the minister of Stockholm to join with the other entente ministers in presenting a friendly but firm note to Sweden in regard to its policy of neutrality. The note takes issue with the position of Sweden in distinguishing between submarines for war and those for commerce, which the French government affirms "has an effect contrary to neutrality since the Swedish naval forces would hesitate to attack a German submarine in Swedish waters under the pretense that it might be a commercial submarine, whereas there would be no similar hesitation in dealing with a submarine of the allies, because they have no commercial submarines."

Great Britain and Sweden have been at odds since the early period of the war and Sweden's unyielding attitude evidently has resulted in a decision to exert the combined pressure of all the entente allies on her. Difficulties arose from the allied blockade of Germany resulting in the holding up of goods enroute to Sweden which were suspected to be destined to Germany. Sweden retaliated by holding up large quantities of parcel post matter in transit between England and Russia. This led to an exchange of notes which accomplished nothing and early this month a deadlock was reached Great Britain insisted as a condition to submitting the dispute to arbitration, that Sweden must promise not to interfere again with English mail matter.

Sweden declined and the Swedish minister at London went to the continent to be gone for several weeks. Negotiations were transferred to Stockholm, but the latest advices from London were that no solution of the problem was in sight.

HOLD UP COFFEE.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Sept. 15.—A Stockholm dispatch to the Overseas News agency says that Sweden has held up 10,000 tons of coffee destined for Finland, presumably on account of the fact that Great Britain has detained shipments for Sweden. There is a report of great scarcity of coffee in Finland.

HIGHEST HONOR PAID DEFENDER OF VERDUN

General Nivelle Decorated and Given Laudatory Mention In Journal.

Paris, Sept. 16.—A tribute, unusual for an official French communication is paid to General Nivelle, the defender of Verdun, in the Journal Officiel today. Announcement was made on Wednesday that General Nivelle had been decorated with the insignia of the grand officer of the Legion of Honor and in this connection, the following citation is published:

"Robert George Nivelle, general of division, commanding an army, has for four months commanded the army that resisted victoriously the attacks of the enemy, renewed without cessation and has supported heroically the hardest trials. He has shown in this command the most brilliant qualities of leadership, the energy and force of character, which have powerfully influenced the operations in progress over the entire front.

"After having checked the advance of the enemy toward his objective, which had become a moral stake of the war, General Nivelle resumed the offensive, foot by foot and by his attacks succeeded in dominating the adversary on the very ground chosen by the latter for a decisive effort."

LEAVES HUSBAND WHO SOUGHT TO WHIP HER

Son of Denver Jurist Said Wives, Like Soldiers, Need Discipline.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—William F. Stone, son of a former federal jurist at Denver, is the defendant in a suit for divorce on file in the circuit court here today in which his wife sets up the charge that she was obliged to leave him in May, 1915, after he had insisted upon his right to whip her. Stone is a prominent art critic and librarian in a local library.

Mrs. Stone quotes her husband as having observed that "like soldiers, wives need discipline." Since leaving her husband she has supported herself by posing as a model in the Art Institute here.

French and English Troops Also Score Marked Gains While Serbs Push Foe Back 12 Miles.

GREAT BATTLES RAGING

Macedonian Campaign Seems to Have Begun In Deadly Earnest In Vardar and Struma Sectors.

Paris, Sept. 16.—The entente allies have won a series of successes on the Macedonian front, the war office announced today. French, British and Serbian operations at different points have broken through the Bulgarian defenses. The French have captured positions half a mile deep over a front of a mile.

A brilliant victory for the Serbians over the Bulgarians was scored after a battle lasting several days east of Lake Ostrovo near the western end of the fighting front.

The British success was effected west of the Vardar, near the center of the entente front, where they captured important positions. The lines forced by the French were to the east of the Vardar.

The Serbians captured 25 cannon and a large number of prisoners as yet uncounted.

The Bulgarians after their defeat, says the statement, retired for a distance of 12 miles.

London, Sept. 16.—An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Saloniki says the victory won by the Serbians has compelled the Bulgarians to retreat The Serbians are reported to have captured more than 20 field guns. They took the Bulgarian positions at Malkanidzee, northwest of Lake Ostrovo. The Bulgarians also are said to be retreating from positions further south.

Defenders of Kavala to Be Removed to Germany

Berlin, Sept. 16, (by wireless to Sayville)- The Vossische Zeitung says that the officers of the Fourth Greek army corps which is to be transported from Kavala, Greece, to Germany, will be accompanied by their families, "thus preventing the starving of women and children by the entente."

Official announcement was made in Berlin yesterday on the plan to transport to Germany Greek troops stationed at Kavala at the time of the Bulgarian occupation of eastern Macadonia. The announcement said the troops, cut off from communication with Athens by the entente forces, were suffering from disease and lack of food and that they would be taken to Germany as neutrals. Athens dispatches said 1,700 Greek soldiers had been removed from Kavala on warships of the allies.

LORIMER TO REMAIN IN POLITICS, HE SAYS

Former Senator Says He Will Yet Win His Way Back to Congress.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—"William Lorimer was beaten by his own hand. In the same manner William Lorimer will win—be it tomorrow, four or a score of more years hence."

In these words, former Senator Lorimer, defeated in Wednesday's primaries for the Sixth Illinois district republican nomination for congress, announced his intention today to "stick to politics."

"The Lord willing, I am going to live at least 30 years more," he said, "and I'm going to be alive and kicking politically every one of them."

PROBE PRICE RAISE OF BREAD AND MILK

Government Prosecutor Said to Be Convinced Bakers Are Justified.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—A federal investigation of the increase in milk prices will be added to the list of food price inquiries now under way in Chicago, United States District Attorney Clyne announced.

Clyne said investigators for the department of agriculture will begin an inquiry into the milk situation here within a few days.

The federal inquiry into the increase in bread prices was nearing its end today. It was said bakers had convinced federal authorities that an increase in price was necessary because of advanced cost of ingredients, but no confirmation of this report was obtained from Clyne.

Congressman Joseph G. Cannon, of Danville, Ill., former speaker of the House of Representatives who called on Clyne today, told the district attorney he thought an increase in the price of bread was not warranted, according to the district attorney.

Telling Tariff Points

Let these telling points on tariff and protection in the speech by Charles Evans Hughes, the Republican candidate for President, delivered in the Salt Lake Tabernacle, be fixed permanently in your mind and memory during the remainder of the campaign:

We are desirous of having strong and sure the foundations of our national greatness in this pursuit of competition among the nations which is sure to follow the cessation of the present struggle.

I presume that the Republican party as the national party, according to the constitution of the United States, within the national sphere, shall proceed wherever it is practicable, to build up and foster and encourage American enterprise, and open the doors wide for honest American achievement.

Then came the Underwood tariff bill itself. What was the result? Enterprise halted and there was a contraction of trade throughout the land, and America, instead of going ahead, stopped. That is what happened. Three hundred thousand were unemployed in the City of New York. There was not a city in this land where the jobless man anxious and able to work did not walk the street. They were fed by our charitable organizations, which were taxed to the utmost limit to provide for those for whom American enterprise could no longer make provision. It was a sad spectacle. Americans have not forgotten it. It is not forgotten here or anywhere. It cannot be forgotten. It is too recent.

If you are going to have the basis for prosperity in this country: if you are going to protect the American wage scale; if you are going to have American enterprise able to meet the competition which will follow the ending of this war, you must have an honestly devised, wisely framed tariff law to protect American industry.

No, the Democratic party will not be saved by the European war. If you would know what our condition will be when the war ends, think of what our condition was before that war began, if you think these nations are so impoverished that they cannot again turn to work. Those millions of men now fighting are better able to work than ever before in their lives. * * * Their factories are there; their plants are there; they know themselves better than ever before. They are better disciplined, more alert, keener, stronger, better physically than ever before, in the main, and they are ready to turn great national energies into the pursuits of peace to pay their war bills, to produce up to the limit, to send their goods throughout the world.

I propose that we shall study this out, applying a principle that we believe in, and secure intelligently and honestly adequate protection to American industries in every part of this land.

WHY HUGHES IS NEEDED IN THIS TREMENDOUS CRISIS.

Against Mr. Wilson's combination of grace in elocution with futility in action; against his record of words unbacked by deeds or betrayed by deeds, we set Mr. Hughes' rugged and uncompromising straightforwardness of character and action in every office he has held. We put the man who thinks and speaks directly, and whose words have always been made good, against the man whose adroit and facile elocution is used to conceal his plans or his want of plans. The next four years may well be years of tremendous national strain. Which of the two men do you, the American people, wish at the helm during those four years; the man who has been actually tried and found wanting, or the man whose whole career in public office is a guarantee of his power and good faith? But one answer is possible; and it must be given by the American people throughout the United States.—From speech of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, delivered at Lewiston, Maine, in behalf of Charles E. Hughes.

It All Depends.

"If Hugher wins an Oregon town will get a new shingle mill employing fifty men," says the Olympia Recorder "according to an announcement of the individual who took an option on timbered land. If Wilson wins the option will be allowed to lapse. That's the way with a thousand and one enterprises, all waiting to see which way the wind blows. The moment it is assured that Charles E. Hughes is elected, just watch the wheels of industry spin and listen to the hum of business."

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to flush the kidneys and flush off the poisonous urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent

THE LESSON OF THE STRIKE

There is a lesson in the proposed great railroad strike which it would be well for us as a nation to learn, and to profit by.

Probably a very small per cent of the membership of the brotherhoods, when they voted on the proposition to strike, had ever given serious thought to the far reaching effects of their action should it come to an actual walkout. The same can be said of the citizenship of the country at large. Strikes had been of so frequent occurence during the past half century, and the business of the country had suffered such small checks therefrom, that we had been lulled into a false sense of security

In the great crisis, which has been for a time averted, however the country has at last been awakened to the enormous power of organized labor. But even now we wo dn t be fully alive to this great power as it not been threatening the v the nation

Few of the masses of the p had ever realized how fully the railroads the arteries through which coursed the life blood to the heart of the nation. Not until we were threatened with a stoppage of the life giving stream did we awaken to the dire peril which such action portended. Only within the past few weeks have we begun to appreciate the extent of the want, the suffering, the colossal losses that must have inevitably resulted had the strike materialized.

But now that we are at least awake to the real significance of the situation that confronts us, we should profit by our knowledge. We should see to it at once that no similar peril is ever again permitted to threaten us.

We must recognize the fact that the railroads are an absolute necessity to national life; that it is now a moral and patriotic duty incumbent upon not only the managers, but upon the employes as well, to keep the roads in operation

Yes, we know all about the rights of labor, and of that proud boast that we are all free born American citizens. But when a small per cent of the people, either as managers or as operatives, have reached the point where the life of a nation is absolutely at their mercy, then that small per cent ceases to be free in the full sense of word. They are bound to a higher duty than self interest. They are in bondage to the great cause of universal humanity. They have made themselves absolutely necessary to their fellows and are NOT free to follow their own inclinations. They have become a part of the machinery that moves a nation, and must bear the responsibilities that accompany the position.

We must realize that for the rail road man to quit his post (unless a competent substitute is at hand to assume his duties) is just as reprehensible as a violation of train orders and fraught with as great peril to the pubic safety. The railroader must be brought to see that he owes a sacred duty to his country, not even second to that of the soldier. The soldier guards our homes and our honor; the railroader guards our very life. He should not destroy that which he guards.

A united nation should insist that these men who thus bear the burden of our comfort, prosperity and safety shall be fairly dealt with. The thousands of men who daily and hourly expose their lives to the perils of the rails that we may live and prosper should have the full weight of our influence and sympathy toward securing a square deal. The roads should be made to feel that an injustice to them is an affront to the nation. And, likewise, the employes should be made to realize that to throttle the roads is to crucify the nation which every honest American loves.

Can this be done without government action? Possibly not. But if such action should be necessary, then sooner it comes the better. Another such period of tension and uncertainty will work untold harm to our country.

PUT AWAY ROAD IN GOOD SHAPE

Fall Dragging is Most Effective Dragging of Year

Although "Drag the Road" is good advice any minute of the 365 days of the year, it is just about the best advice in the world right now. Fall dragging is most effective dragging, says the highway commission at Iowa State college.

If a road is not "put away" for the winter in the very best condition it's going to be a much poorer road next spring than it is now If, however, it is thoroly dragged so that it freezes smoothly, it will make a regular boulevard highway all winter, but come out next spring in the best possible condition.

The average American youth just revels in the joy of expatating on what his parents don't know.

ENLIST SCHOOLS FOR SEED CORN

700,000 School Children to Select Seed During Seed Corn Week

A piece of extension work unprecedented, calculated to enlist every one of the 700,000 children of school age in Iowa in a state wide campaign for better seed corn during seed corn week, October 4 to 9, is being carried on by the agricultural extension department at Iowa State college

Over 150,000 seed corn bulletins and 20,000 illustrated posters will be sent out by the department to county superintendents, principals and school teachers over the state. The literature gives complete and illustrated instructions as to gathering, hanging and storing seed corn

It is calculated that if the campaign results in permanently increasing in each township the corn yield by one bushel per acre, the net returns would be enough to pay for a consolidated school in that township in twenty years.

"During that week we hope to reach every school child in Iowa," says R K Bliss, head of the department at Ames "Instruction sheets telling how to conduct the campaign have been sent to the teachers. The county agents in the 49 organized [illegible] will so devote their entire time during that week to conducting seed corn campaigns with the school children."

WORK ON PAVING COMMENCES

Work on laying the concrete curb and gutter was commenced last Friday morning Only a small crew for this work has arrived so far, but another larger crew will arrive this week from Forest City. Their big gas tractor and plow outfit for grading work was unloaded the first of the first of the week, and with favorable weather conditions the grading will be commenced in earnest the first of the coming week. As fast as the crews finish at Forest City they will be removed to Britt, as well as another crew from Carrol, Iowa.

Mr McLaughlin inform us that with favorable weather conditions this fall, the paving will be completed in Britt by November 1st, according to contract.—Britt Tribune.

CHARACTER ASSASSINS

Perhaps, some day, the motive for the conspiracy and attack upon the conspiracy and attack upon Lieutenant-Governor Harding will be exposed. A woman reporter of the Sioux City Journal, after the meeting of the Sioux City M. E. district conference in which Mr. Harding was condemned by resolutions, said to Dr. R. T. Chipperfield: "If Mr. Harding is as bad a man as these resolutions say he is, why do they not throw him out of the church?" He replied: "To tell the truth there isn't a peg on which to hang anything." If that is the truth, then why did Dr. Chipperfield sit silent and allow the conference to assinate Governor Harding's character?—Bernard Murphy.

STRONG FOR HARDING

During his visit to the southern and central part of the state last week, Rev. S M. Stenby found that the sentiment was strongly in favor of Harding for Governor and but little defection existing among the voters, and in his close touch of association with the various elements he is satisfied that the line of attack waged against Mr. Harding is strengthening his cause and he will grow in strength as election day approaches and elected by a large majority.

Mr. Stenby is a strong supporter and admirer of Mr. Harding.—Clear Lake Mirror.

Palo Alto Gets County Agent

Bert L France, graduate of Iowa State college in 1910, has been appointed county agent in Palo Alto county, the 19th county to organize in Iowa. France was born on a farm and lived there until he came to Iowa State college, where he graduated in the animal husbandry course. For the past two years he has been doing county agent work in Missouri. He comes to Iowa October 1st.

No, sir, we don't want the job of being president of these United States. It isn't half as soft a berth as editing this paper. Germany has a grouch at us; Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria are ditto; Mexico is a thorn in our already festering flesh; Japan is opening her cavernous mouth to gobble up China and is thereby menacing our commercial interests in that country; Central and South America are suspicious of us because we have an army in Mexico; England and France are boarding our ships, rifling our mails, and stealing our trade secrets for their own use; the conflict between labor and capital has brought us almost to the brink of civil war; votes, powerful financial interests and foreign lobbies keep congress in a perpetual state of terror, and the Lord only knows what it will be next No, sir-ee! Take the job—we're out of the running.

Our great trouble with us is our wastefulness in our daily lives, in our homes, in our business occupations. We have never learned the lesson of economy Money comes easy to us, and it goes out just as easily Where other people in other countries stop to count pennies, we only count the dollars If we as a people could only cultivate the habit of systematically skimming off a penny here, another there and keep it up in every avenue of existence, the American people in the course of a few years would be transformed in wealth, whereas now a majority of us labor right up to the hook of the grave in order to live and support our families in comparitive comfort. Any intelligent person can make money in this country, but only a wise one can save it.

Harding would have to be a veritable "Carrie Nation" to suit some of his critics. He comes out flat footed and states that he does not use liquor in any form, and that if he should be the people's choice for Governor that he will enforce the law to a letter on bootleggers and other law violators.

The "Situated Wanted" and the "Help Wanted" columns of The Chicago Tribune, both Daily and Sunday, have been the stepping stones by which thousands of young men and young women have secured positions that led to big incomes, indipendence, happiness and real success.

People who want positions quickly, without wasting time enery and money, insert "Situation Wanted" Ads in The Tribune, telling what they can do, and at the same time read the "Help Wanted" columns carefully every day in order to take advantage of any suitable openings that may appear there.

NEW FOOTWEAR FOR ARMY

Improved Shoe Model Will Be Hobnailed for Service in Mexico.

The war department appointed a shoe commission in 1912 to design a model embodying the best points of all the army shoes, surpassing them, if possible. The shoe which was adopted was of good materials, well made on a rational last designed by the department. The interior is perfectly smooth, with heel broad and low and sole moderately thick. The arch is flexible and without metal shank or other stiffening. Eyelets are used rather than hooks. The shoe reaches but little above the ankle; it is wide across the ball of the foot and has a high toe cap. It is comfortable, neat looking, light in weight and easily removed or put on.

As soon as the soldiers wear out the shoes of the type which they are now using on the border they will be refitted with the new type which the government has ordered, says a writer in the Outlook. The newest shoe is hobnailed and weighs three pounds seven ounces. It has been adopted for Mexican service because the present type has not worn well in mountain climbing and has been readily cut up by the malpais rock in Mexico. The shoe is similar to that in use in the Italian army.

Whether this model will be permanently adopted is open to considerable doubt. The weight of the shoes and the stiffness of the leather used detract from the comfort of it. It has some disadvantages, therefore, but the severe usage in Mexico made it desirable to give this type a thorough try out in regular service.

"Longstreth, you say that like a man who wouldn't care much if he did drop some of them," declared Lawson, and now he was sarcastic.

"To tell you the truth, I wouldn't," returned the other, bluntly. "I'm pretty sick of this mess."

Lawson cursed in amazement His emotions were all out of proportion to his intelligence. He was not at all quick-witted. Duane had never seen a vainer or more arrogant man.

"Longstreth, I don't like your talk," he said.

"If you don't like the way I talk you know what you can do," replied Longstreth, quickly He stood up then, cool and quiet, with flash of eyes and set of lips that told Duane he was dangerous.

Well, after all, that's neither here nor there" went on Lawson, unconsciously cowed by the other. "The thing is, do I get the girl?"

"Not by any means except her consent."

"You'll not make her marry me?"

"No. No," replied Longstreth, his voice still cold low-pitched.

"All right Then I'll make her."

Evidently Longstreth understood the man before him so well that he wasted no more words. Duane knew what Lawson never dreamed of, and that was that Longstreth had a gun somewhere within reach and meant to use it Then heavy footsteps sounded outside tramping upon the porch Duane might have been mistaken, but he believed those footsteps saved Lawson's life.

"There they are,' said Lawson, and he opened the door

Five masked men entered. They all wore coats hiding any weapons A big man with burly shoulders shook hands with Longstreth, and the others stood back

The atmosphere of that room had changed Lawson might have been a nonentity for all he counted Longstreth was another man a stranger to Duane. If he had entertained a hope of freeing himself from this band, of getting away to a safer country, he abandoned it at the very sight of these men. There was power here and he was bound

The big man spoke in low, hoarse whispers, and at this all the others gathered around him close to the table. There were evidently some signs of membership not plain to Duane. Then all the heads were bent over the table. Low voices spoke, queried, answered, argued. By straining his ears Duane caught a word here and there They were planning, and they were brief. Duane gathered they were to have a rendezvous at or near Ord

Then the big man, who evidently was the leader of the present convention, got up to depart He went as swiftly as he had come and was followed by his comrades Longstreth prepared for a quiet smoke Lawson seemed uncommunicative and unsociable. He smoked fiercely and drank continually All at once he straightened up as if listening

"What's that?" he called, suddenly

Duane's strained ears were pervaded by a slight rustling sound

"Must be a rat,' replied Longstreth The rustle became a rattle

"Sounds like a rattle snake to me," said Lawson

Longstreth got up from the table and peered round the room

Just at that instant Duane felt an almost inappreciable movement of the adobe wall which supported him. He could scarcely credit his senses. But the rattle inside Longstreth's room was mingling with little dull thuds of falling dirt. The adobe wall, merely dried mud, was crumbling Duane distinctly felt a tremor pass through it. Then the blood gushed back to his heart

"What in the hell'" exclaimed Longstreth.

"I smell dust," said Lawson, sharply

That was the signal for Duane to drop down from his perch, yet despite his care he made a noise

"Did you hear a step'" queried Longstreth.

No one answered But a heavy piece of the adobe wall fell with a thud. Duane heard it crack, felt it shake.

"There's somebody between the walls'" thundered Longstreth.

Then a section of the wall fell inward with a crash Duane began to squeeze his body through the narrow passage toward the patio.

"Hear him!" yelled Lawson. "This side!"

"No, he's going that way," yelled Longstreth.

The tramp of heavy boots lent Duane the strength of desperation. He was not shirking a fight, but to be cornered like a trapped coyote was another matter. He almost tore his clothes off in that passage The dust nearly stifled him. When he burst into the patio it was not a single instant too soon. But one deep gasp of breath revived him and he was up, gun in hand, running for the outlet into the court. Thumping footsteps turned him back. While there was a chance to get away he did not want to fight. He thought he heard some one running into the patio from the other end. He stole along, and coming to a door, without any idea of where it might lead, he softly pushed it open a little way and slipped in.

CHAPTER XX.

A low cry greeted Duane. The room was lighted. He saw Ray Longstreth sitting on her bed in her dressing gown. With a warning gesture to her to be silent he turned to close the door. It was a heavy door without bolt or bar, and when Duane had shut it he felt safe only for the moment. Then he gazed around the room. There was one window with blind closely drawn. He listened and seemed to hear footsteps retreating, dying away.

Then Duane turned to Miss Longstreth. She had slipped off the bed, half to her knees, and was holding out trembling hands. She was as white as the pillow on her bed. She was terribly frightened. Again with warning hand commanding silence, Duane stepped softly forward, meaning to reassure her.

"Oh!" she whispered, wildly; and Duane thought she was going to faint. When he got close and looked into her eyes he understood the strange, dark expression in them. She was terrified because she believed he meant to kill her, or do worse; probably worse, Duane realize he must have looked pretty hard and fierce bursting into her room with that big gun in hand.

The way she searched Duane's face with doubtful, fearful eyes hurt him.

"Listen. I didn't know this was your ... came here to get away—to save my life. I was pursued. I was spying on—on your father and his men. They heard me, but did not see me. They don't know who was listening. They're after me now."

Her eyes changed from blank gulfs to dilating, shadowing, quickening windows of thought.

Then she stood up and faced Duane with the fire and intelligence of a woman in her eyes.

"Tell me now. You were spying on my father?"

Briefly Duane told her what had happened before he entered her room, not omitting a terse word as to the character of the men he had watched.

"My God! So it's that? I knew something was terribly wrong here—with him—with the place—the people. And right off I hated Floyd Lawson. Oh, it'll kill me if—if— It's so much worse than I dreamed. What shall I do?"

The sound of soft steps somewhere near distracted Duane's attention, reminded him of her peril, and now, what counted more with him, made clear the probability of being discovered in her room.

"I'll have to get out of here," whispered Duane.

"Wait," she replied. "Didn't you say they were hunting for you?"

"They sure are," he returned, grimly.

"Oh, then you mustn't go. They might shoot you before you got away. Stay If we hear them you can hide. I'll turn out the light. Ill meet them at the door You can trust me. Wait till all quiets down, if we have to wait till morning. Then you can slip out."

"I oughtn't to stay. I don't want to—I won't," Duane replied, perplexed and stubborn.

"But you must. It's the only safe way. They won't come here."

"Suppose they should? It's an even chance Longstreth will search every room and corner in this old house. If they found ... here I couldn't start a fight. You might be hurt. Then—the fact of my being here—"

Duane did not finish what he meant, but instead made a step toward the door White of face and dark of eye, she took hold of him to detain him. She was as strong and supple as a panther. But she need not have been either resolute or strong, for the clasp of her hand was enough to make Duane weak

"Up yet, Ray?" came Longstreth's clear voice, too strained, too eager to be natural.

"No. I'm in bed reading. Good night," instantly replied Miss Longstreth, so calmly and naturally that Duane marveled at the difference between man and woman. Then she motioned for Duane to hide in the closet He slipped in, but the door would not close altogether.

"Are you alone?" went on Longstreth's penetrating voice

"Yes," she replied. 'Ruth went to bed."

The door swung inward with a swift scrape and jar. Longstreth half entered, haggard, flaming eyed. Behind him Duane saw Lawson, and indistinctly another man

Longstreth barred Lawson from entering, which action showed control as well as distrust He wanted to see into the room When he had glanced around he went out and closed the door

Then what seemed a long interval ensued The house grew silent once more. Duane could not see Miss Longstreth, but he heard her quick breathing How long did she mean to let him stay hidden there? Hard and perilous as his life had been this was a new kind of adventure He had divined the strength softness of his feeling as something due to the magnetism of this beautiful woman. It hardly seemed possible that he, who had been outside the pale for so many years, could have fallen in love. Yet that must be the secret of his agitation.

Presently he pushed open the closet door and stepped forth. Miss Longstreth had her head lowered upon her arms and appeared to be in distress At his touch she raised a quivering face.

"I think I can go now—safely," he whispered.

"Go then, if you must; but you may stay till you're safe," she replied

"I—I couldn't thank you enough It's been hard on me—this finding out—and you his daughter. I feel strange. I don't understand myself well But I want you to know—if I were not an outlaw—a ranger—I'd lay my life at your feet."

"Oh! You have seen so—so little of me," she faltered.

"All the same, it's true. And that makes me feel more the trouble my coming caused you."

"You will not fight my father?"

"Not if I can help it. I'm trying to get out of his way."

"But you spied upon him."

"I am a ranger, Miss Longstreth."

"And oh! I am a rustler's daughter!" she cried. "That's so much more terrible than I'd suspected. It was tricky cattle deals I imagined he was engaged in But only tonight I had strong suspicions aroused."

"How. Tell me."

"I overheard Floyd say that men were coming tonight to arrange a meeting for my father at a rendezvous near Ord. Father did not want to go. Floyd taunted him with a name."

"What name?" queried Duane.

"It was Cheseldine."

"Cheseldine! My God! Miss Longstreth, why did you tell me that?"

"What difference does that make?"

"Your father and Cheseldine are one and the same," whispered Duane hoarsely.

"I gathered so much myself," she replied, miserably. "But Longstreth is father's real name."

Duane felt so stunned he could not speak at once. It was the girl's part in this tragedy that weakened him. The instant she betrayed the secret Duane realized perfectly that he did love her. The emotion was like a great flood.

"Miss Longstreth, all this seems so unbelievable," he whispered. "Cheseldine is the rustler chief I've come out here to get. He's only a name. Your father is the real man. I've sworn to get him. I'm bound by more than law or oaths. I can't break what binds me. And I must disgrace you—wreck your life! Why, Miss Longstreth, I believe I—I love you. It's all come in a rush. I'd die for you if I could. How fatal—terrible—this is! How things work out!"

She slipped to her knees, with her hands on his.

"You won't kill him?" she implored. "If you care for me—you won't kill him?"

"No. That I promise you."

With a low moan she dropped her head upon the bed.

Duane opened the door and stealthily stole out through the corridor to the court.

When Duane got out into the dark, where his hot face cooled in the wind, his relief equaled his other feelings.

The night was dark, windy, stormy; yet there was no rain. Duane hoped as soon as he got clear of the ranch to lose something of the pain he felt. But long after he had tramped out into the open there was a lump in his throat and an ache in his breast. All his thought centered around Ray Longstreth. What a woman she had turned out to be! He seemed to have a vague, hopeless hope that there might be, there must be, some way he could save her.

CHAPTER XXI.

Before going to sleep that night Duane had decided to go to Ord and try to find the rendezvous where Longstreth was to meet his men. These men Duane wanted even more than their leader. If Longstreth, or Cheseldine, was the brains of that gang, Poggin was the executor. It was Poggin who needed to be found and stopped. Poggin and his right hand men! Duane experienced a strange, tigerish thrill. It was thought of Poggin more than thought of success for MacNelly's plan. Duane felt dubious over this emotion.

Next day he set out for Bradford. He was glad to get away from Fairdale for a while. But the hours and the miles in no wise changed the new pain in his heart. The only way he could forget Miss Longstreth was to let his mind dwell upon Poggin, and even this was not always effective.

He avoided Sanderson, and at the end of a day and a half he arrived at Bradford

The night of the day before he reached Bradford, No. 6, the mail and express train going east, was held up by train robbers, the Wells-Fargo messenger killed over his safe, the mail clerk wounded, the bags carried away The engine of No. 6 came into town minus even a tender, and engineer and fireman told conflicting stories. A posse of railroad men and citizens, led by a sheriff Duane suspected was crooked, was made up before the engine steamed back to pick up the rest of the train. Duane had the sudden inspiration that he had been cudgeling his mind to find; and, acting upon it, he mounted his horse again and left Bradford unobserved. As he rode out into the night, over a dark trail in the direction of Ord, he uttered a short, grim, sardonic laugh at the hope that he might be taken for a train robber

He rode at an easy trot most of the night, and when the black peak of Ord mountain loomed up against the stars he halted, tied his horse, and slept until dawn He had brought a small pack, and now he took his time cooking breakfast. When the sun was well up he saddled Bullet, and, leaving the trail where his tracks showed plain in the ground, he put his horse to the rocks and brush. He selected an exceedingly rough, roundabout, and difficult course to Ord, hid his tracks with the skill of a long hunted fugitive, and arrived there with his horse winded and covered with lather. It added considerable to his arrival that the man Duane remembered as Fletcher and several others saw him come in the back way through the lots and jump a fence into the road.

Duane led Bullet up to the porch where Fletcher stood wiping his beard. He was hatless, vestless, and evidently had just enjoyed a morning drink.

'Howdy, Dodge," said Fletcher, laconically

Duane replied, and the other man returned the greeting with interest.

"Jim, my hoss's done up. I want to hide him from any chance tourists as might happen to ride up curious like."

"Haw' haw' haw'"

Duane gathered encouragement from that chorus of coarse laughter.

'Wal, if them tourists ain't too durned snooky the hoss'll be safe in the 'dobe shack back of Bill's here. Feed thar, too, but you'll hev to rustle water."

Duane led Bullet to the place indicated, had care of his welfare, and left him there Upon returning to the front porch Duane saw the group of men had been added to by others, some of whom he had seen before. Without comment Duane walked along the edge of the road and wherever one of the tracks of his horse showed he carefully obliterated it This procedure was attentively watched by Fletcher and his companions

"Wal, Dodge," remarked Fletcher, as Duane returned, 'thet's safer'n prayin' fer rain."

Duane's reply was a remark as loquacious as Fletcher's, to the effect that a long, slow, monotonous ride was conducive to thirst. They all joined him, unmistakably friendly. But Knell was not there, and most assuredly not Poggin. Fletcher was no common outlaw, but whatever his ability, it probably lay in execution of orders. Apparently at that time these men had nothing to do but drink and lounge around the tavern. Evidently they were poorly supplied with money, though Duane observed they could borow a peso occasionally from the bartender Duane set out to make himself agreeable and succeeded. There was card playing for small stakes, idle jests of coarse nature, much bantering among the younger fellows, and occasionally a mild quarrel. All morning men came and went, until, all told, Duane calculated he had seen at least 50. Toward the middle of the afternoon a young fellow burst into the saloon and yelled one word:

"Posse!"

From the scramble to get outdoors Duane judged that word and the ensuing action was rare in Ord

"What the hell'" muttered Fletcher, as he gazed down the road at a dark, compact bunch of horses and riders. "Fust time I ever seen thet in Ord! We're gettin' popular like them camps out of Valentine. Wish Phil was here or Poggy. Now all you gents keep quiet. I'll do the talkin'."

The posse entered the town, trotted up on dusty horses, and halted in a bunch before the tavern. The party consisted of about 20 men, all heavily armed, and evidently in charge of a clean cut, lean limbed cowboy. Duane experienced considerable satisfaction at the absence of the sheriff who he had understood was to lead the posse. Perhaps he was out in another direction with a different force.

"Hello Jim Fletcher," called the cowboy.

"Howdy," replied Fletcher.

At his short, dry response and the way he struck a curious bent the posse Duane found himself modifying his contempt for Fletcher. The outlaw was different now.

"Fletcher, we've tracked a man to all but three miles of this place. Tracks as plain as the nose on your face. Found his camp. Then he hit into the brush, an' we lost the trail. Didn't have no tracker with us. Think he went into the mountains. But we took a chance an' over the rest of the way, seein' Ord was so close. Anybody come in here late night or early this mornin'?"

"Nope," replied Fletcher.

His response was that Duane had expected from his manner, and evidently the cowboy took it as a matter of course. He turned to the others of the posse, entering into a low consultation. Evidently there was difference of opinion, if not real dissension, in that posse.

"Didn't I tell ye this was a wild goose chase, comin' way out here?" protested an old hawk faced rancher. "Them hoss tracks we follored ain't like any of them we seen at the water tank where the train was held up."

"I'm not so sure of that," replied the leader.

"Wal, Guthrie, I've follored tracks all my life—"

"But you couldn't keep to the trail this feller made in the brush."

"Gimme time, an' I could. Thet takes time. An' heah you go hell bent fer election! But it's a wrong lead out this way. If you're right this road agent, after he killed his pals, would hev rid back right through town. An' with them mail bags! Supposin' they was greasers? Some greasers has sense, an' when it comes to thievin' they're shore cute."

"But we ain't got any reason to believe this robber who murdered the greasers is a greaser himself. I tell you, it was a slick job done by no ordinary sneak. Didn't you hear the facts? One greaser hopped the engineer an' fireman. Another greaser kept flashin' his gun outside the train. The big man, who shoved back the car door an' did the killin'—he was the real gent, an' don't you forget it."

Some of the posse sided with the cowboy leader and some with the old cattleman. Finally the young leader, disgustedly gathered up his bridle.

"Aw, hell! Thet sheriff shoved you off this trail. Mebbe he hed reason! Savvy thet? If I hed a bunch of cowboys with me—I tell you what—I'd take a chance an' clean up this hole!"

All the while Jim Fletcher stood quietly with his hands in his pockets.

"Guthrie, I'm shore treasurin' up your friendly talk," he said. The menace was in the tone, not the content of his speech.

"You can—an' be damned to you, Fletcher!" called Guthrie, as the horses started.

Fletcher, standing out alone before the others of his clan, watched the posse out of sight.

"Luck fer you-all thet Poggy wasn't here," he said, as they disappeared. Then with a thoughtful mien he strode up on the porch and led Duane away from the others in the bar room. When he looked into Duane's face it was somehow an entirely changed scrutiny.

"Dodge, where'd you hide the stuff? I reckon I git in on this deal, seein' I stayed off Guthrie."

Duane played his part. Here was his opportunity, and like a tiger after prey he seized it. First he coolly eyed the outlaw and then disclaimed any knowledge whatever of the train robbery other than Fletcher had heard himself. Then at Fletcher's persistence and increasing show of friendliness he laughed occasionally and allowed himself to swell with pride, though still denying. Next he feigned a lack of consistent will power and seemed to be wavering under Fletcher's persuasion and grew silent, then surly. Fletcher, evidently sure of ultimate victory, desisted for the time being, however, in his solicitous regard and close companionship for the rest of that day he betrayed the bent of his mind.

Later, when Duane started up announcing his intention to get his horse and make for camp out in the brush, Fletcher seemed grievously offended.

"Why don't you stay with me? I've got a comfortable 'dobe over here. Didn't I stick by you when Guthrie an' his bunch come up? Supposin' I hedn't showed down a cold hand to him? You'd be swingin' somewheres now. I tell you, Dodge, it ain't square.'

"I'll square it. I pay my debts," replied Duane. "But I can't put up here all night. If I belonged to the gang it'd be different."

"What gang?" asked Fletcher, bluntly

'Why, Cheseldine's."

Fletcher's beard nodded as his jaw dropped.

Duane laughed. "I run into him the other day. Knowed him on sight. Sure, he's the king pin rustler. When he seen me an' asked me what reason I had for bein' on earth or some such like—why, I up and told him."

Fletcher appeared staggered.

"Who in all tired hell air you talkin' about?"

Didn't I tell you once? Cheseldine. He calls himself Longstreth over there."

All of Fletcher's face not covered by hair turned a dirty white.

'Cheseldine—Longstreth!" he whispered, hoarsely. "Gord Almighty! You braced the—" Then a remarkable transformation came over the outlaw. He gulped, he straightened his face; he controlled his agitation. But he could not send the healthy brown to his face. Duane, watching this ruse man, marveled at the change in him, the sudden checking movement, the proof of a wonderful fear and loyalty. It all meant Cheseldine, a master of men!

"Who air you?" queried Fletcher, in a queer, strained voice.

"You gave me a handle, didn't you? Dodge. Thet's as good as any. Shore it hits me hard. Jim, I've been pretty lonely for years, an' I'm gettin' in need of pals. Think it over, will you? See you manana."

The outlaw watched Duane go off after his horse, watched him as he returned to the tavern, watched him ride out into the darkness—all without a word.

Duane left the town, threaded a quiet passage through cactus and mesquite to a spot he had marked before, and made ready for the night. His mind was so full that he found sleep aloof. Luck at last was playing his game. He sensed the first slow heave of a mighty crisis. The end, always haunting, had to be sternly blotted from thought. It was the approach that needed all his mind.

He passed the night there, and late in the morning, after watching trail and road from a ridge, he returned to Ord. If Jim Fletcher tried to disguise his surprise, the effort was a failure. Certainly he had not expected to see Duane again. Duane allowed himself a little freedom with Fletcher, an attitude hitherto lacking.

That afternoon a horseman rode in from Bradford, an outlaw evidently well known and liked by his fellows, and Duane heard him say, before he could possibly have been told the train robber was in Ord, that the loss of money in the holdup was slight. Like a flash Duane saw the luck of this report. He pretended not to have heard.

In the early twilight, at an opportune moment, he called Fletcher to him and, linking his arm within the outlaw's, he drew him off in a stroll to a log bridge spanning a little gully. Here, after gazing around, he took out a roll of bills, spread it out, split it equally, and without a word handed one half to Fletcher. With clumsy fingers Fletcher ran through the roll.

"Five hundred!" he exclaimed. "Dodge, thet's damn handsome of you, considerin' the job wasn't—"

"Considerin' nothin'," interrupted Duane. I'm makin' no reference to a job here or there. You did me a good turn. I split my pile. If thet doesn't make us pards, good turns an' money ain't no use in this country."

Fletcher was won.

"UNCROWNED QUEEN OF GREECE" PASSES AWAY

Athens, Greece, (by mail)—Sophie Tricoupis, one of the most remarkable women of modern Greece, is dead. She had been termed "the Uncrowned Queen of Greece," an appellation fully warranted by the facts, for it is doubtful if even the Empress Eugene ever exercised so much direct control over the destinies of France as this woman did over the fate of modern Greece.

She was a daughter of Spyridon Tricoupis, the first premier of free Greece, and the sister of Harilaos Tricoupis, who, during the last quarter of the Nineteenth century, completely dominated Greek politics. As a child she made the acquaintance of Lord Byron, who was a familiar friend in her father's house, and it was her father who pronounced the funeral address over the coffin of the English poet Her youth was passed in London, where her father was Greek minister, but, on the entry of her brother into the political arena, she returned to Athens and took up her place at his side. Nor did she ever leave him; remaining unmarried she devoted her entire time to aiding him in his political work and in looking after his personal comfort.

A woman of striking appearance, she was the more conspicuous by the fact that she never changed the style of her clothing from the date of the death of her father in 1873. She retained even the early Victorian fashion of doing her hair, and in her later years resembled nothing so much as a dag perrotype come to life. The house which she and her brother occupied was a very small one, but, in spite of that, some of the most distinguished political figures of the Nineteenth century passed through its drawing room. The present emperor of Russia, Edward VII and Queen Alexandra of England, and King Christian IX of Denmark were only a few of those who were the guests of this remarkable woman.

But her relations with the distinguished visitors to Greece were wholly political. She had no social ambitions and the ordinary balls and social gatherings of Athens never saw her. She was not only the inspiration but the active coworker of her brother, and knew quite as much about politics as did he, and it was frequently to "Madame Sophie," as she was called, that those who had some political proposal to make addressed themselves, rather than to the minister himself With the death of her brother, however, she ceased all political activity and retired to a secluded life, which she permitted nothing to disturb. She was over 80 years old when she died

Appendicitis was the cause of her death, on July 26. Her body was interred in the vault beside that of her distinguished brother, she being clad in only a shroud. According to her wishes there was not even a coffin, and no one was present at the funeral save the members of her immediate family.

FRANCE PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE DUKE OF ROHAN

Paris.—(by mail)—The Duke of Rohan, killed in the battle of the Somme, has had one of the most imposing funerals seen in France during the war. It was not only a tribute to the heroic young nobleman, but a public recognition that the sons of the old nobility of France are fighting for the republic with the same ardor that the old nobility fought for the kings.

The Rohans are among the famous old fighting families of France. They fought at the Siege of La Rochelle. They were among the musketeers of Louis XIV. One of them was known as the 'young hero" in the seven years' war. Another became a bishop and built the famous palace at Strassburg which is still an architectural wonder But while aristocrats, they shared the views of Lafayette and [illegible] noblemen admiring republican institutions, and the present generation of the family has been one of the mot enthusiastic supporters of the republic.

The young Duke of Rohan first showed his republican sympathies by becoming a member of the chamber of deputies. But he was no sooner elected than the war broke out, and he entered the republican army as a second lieutenant. One day when home on leave he visited the corridors of the chamber, and heard a deputy spouting politics to a circle of listeners. The duke murmured dissent to some of the political statements, whereupon the deputy angrily exclaimed:

"This war has brought a great many strangers to the surface. I do not know this strange young man who dissents."

"I am sorry you do not know me," said the duke. "Let me introduce myself as one of your colleagues of the chamber of deputies, member for L'Aube. If you have not seen me there it is because I have been at the front and have not set my foot in the chamber since the war began."

A little later the duke returned to the front, where he is credited with one of the notable dare-devil undertakings of the war? While out reconnoitering as a cavalry lieutenant, he arrived alone with his orderly at an inn where 10 Prussian soldiers had taken possession and were having a drunken orgie. Warned by a peasant, the duke would not turn back. Entering the place brusquely, and speaking in German, in impressive tones he commanded the party to surrender, as the house was surrounded on all sides.

Surprised by the sudden apparition, interrogated by a firm voice of command, and hearing the orderly with his horses outside, the revellers resigned themselves, gave up their arms, and submitted as prisoners, until a French cavalry patrol warned of what had occurred, arrived to escort the 100 prisoners of a single hero.

This is the story, as told of the young Duke of Rohan, and passing current as one of the realties of the war That it is authentic is evident from the fact that it won him the Legion of Honor and placed the stamp of government recognition on the audacious achievement.

His Name Not For Sale.

From the Oklahoma City Oklahoman.

The name of George Sisler may not be familiar to readers of this department, but it is a name worth knowing just the same. Sisler has become eminent in baseball this season. Besides his fine base genius he has other qualities. He has recently returned a check from a company whose goods he had publicly indorsed. His explanation was that he believed the goods to be meritorious, his indorsement was sincere, and he could not accept money for merely telling the truth.

In other words, Mr. Sisler's name, become valuable through diamond fame, is not for sale. His position may recall that taken by Mark Twain who declined an offer of $10,000 a year for five years for the use of his name as editor of a humorous publication.

There cannot be many Mark Twains, for humor is a rare gift, and there cannot be many George Sislers, either, for first base genius is about as rare as humor. In some way or other a good many men and women manage to occupy a rather prominent place in the public eye. And many of them are quite undeterred by scruples against grabbing the dollar whenever it lifts its shining head.

GIRL COULD NOT WORK

How She Was Relieved from Pain by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Taunton, Mass.—"I had pains in both sides and when my periods came I had to stay at home from work and suffer a long time. One day a woman came to our house and asked my mother why I was suffering. Mother told her that I suffered every month and she said, 'Why don't you buy a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?' My mother bought it and the next month I was so well that I worked all the month without staying at home a day. I am in good health now and have told lots of girls about it."—Miss CLARICE MORIN, 22 Russell Street, Taunton, Mass.

Thousands of girls suffer in silence every month rather than consult a physician. If girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a safe and pure remedy made from roots and herbs, much suffering might be avoided.

Cheap Cooking Range.

An electrical toy range has lately been invented which can be made of real utility in a small apartment. At a demonstration recently given a hearty meal for five persons was cooked at the expense of 12 cents worth of current. The little stove includes an oven and six small hot plates The meal cooked included a five-pound roast, boiled potatoes, biscuit, macaroni, two small apple pies and apple sauce. Of course each result was only obtained at that cost by a skilled demonstrator, but the tiny electric range has great possibilities, for the adult housekeeper as well as for the small girl it was designed to amuse.

The Kind.

"A little bird told me you fellows are out for a good time tonight."

"I guess it must have been the lark we're going on."

OH! MY BACK

A stubborn backache is cause to suspect kidney trouble. When the kidneys are inflamed and swollen, stooping brings a sharp twinge in the small of the back, that almost takes the breath away. Soon there may be other symptoms; scanty, painful or too frequent urination, headaches, dizziness, or rheumatic pains. Don't wait for these troubles to become serious—use Doan's Kidney Pills at once. You'll find no better-recommended remedy.

A South Dakota Case

Mrs. Henry Hofert, Salem, S. D., says: "For years, I was tortured by backache and the trouble made me so weak, I could hardly turn in bed. Often, pains shot up into my head and I also noticed the kidney secretions were unnatural. Nothing relieved me until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. They fixed me up all right and I seldom have any trouble now."

NEW MEDICAL USES FOR COMMON SALT FOUND

Berlin, (by mail)—Encouraging results from the administration of common salt as a remedy against the enfeebling night sweats of consumptives and against excessive perspiration in the case of marching soldiers are reported by Company Surgeon Link in an article in the Munich Medical Weekly

Sweat contains about six parts of salt in the 1,000 A hard march of a few hours on a hot day results in the exudation of five to six liters of sweat, with a salt content of 24 to 30 grams. A strong night sweat of a consumptive exudes as much as 2½ liters, causing a salt loss of 15 grams. This amount is far from unimportant, since the blood contains altogether only about 20 grams of sale, an amount about corresponding to the maximum daily consumption of salt in foods.

Dr. Link's first experiments were made with sufferers from tuberculosis. It occurred to him that their excessive fatigue mornings might well be due to the loss of salt, and that this might be counteracted by a salt ration He began by giving a level teaspoonful of salt (about five grams) in a small glass of water just before patients retired The result was a greater freshness and absence of weariness on the following morning, but the patients either had no night sweats or else very slight ones. All patients except those suffering also from stomach catarrh and high fever stood the salt dosing without any ill effects whatever

His experiences led Dr Link to experiment with healthy persons, and especially soldiers. About 100 soldiers of one regiment were given a teaspoonful of salt at 5 45 o'clock in the morning before beginning their day's march After a march of nearly 20 miles in muggy weather the soldiers thus dosed exhibted much less fatigue than their comrades, and their perspiration was but a fraction of that of the others.

English Channel Tunnel.

From the Indianapolis News.

The British newspapers are now advocating the construction of a tunnel under the English channel. In its last annual report the French railway company that carries the English traffic from Calais and Boulogne to Paris says "With England our business of every kind will be without any doubt immensely increased. There is every reason to hope for the prompt construction of the channel tunnel. The war in progress has shown unmistakably the absolute need of it from every point of view."

The war has convinced many Englishmen that the tunnel would be of advantage and that it would in no way increase the dangers of the country. In 1907 it was objected to on the ground that it would interfere with England's insularity. Physical separation from the continent has many times been England's salvation and this condition is now changed. The over channel flight of Blerlot made a difference which the war has increased. The introduction of the submarine made the English channel a burden to the admiralty.

It is estimated that the tunnel from Dover to Calais would cost £16,000,000. Arthur Fell, a member of parliament, and one of the supporters of the scheme, asks what would have happened at Mons had the army moved more quickly, and so been intrenched before the German attack. During the war more than 1,000,000 men have been sent to France. There has been a constant stream of munitions and supplies. All the food that the expeditionary force consumes, all the stores and all the shells, have to be packed as securely for the channel passage as though they were destined for Australia In France the English government has a body of 40,000 men constantly at work unpacking and transshipping.

The transportation interests have been largely won over to the project. Although the British papers say little about it, the value of the tunnel to the world would be tremendous. Commercial hatreds engendered by the war will not last always, and there is no reason to doubt the ultimate availability of the tunnel for all continental business. The French offer to bear half the cost of constructing the tunnel.

Printers and Arbitration.

From the New York Times.

At its 62nd annual convention, held in Baltimore recently, the International Typographical union adopted an arbitration agreement with the American Publishers' association. The agreement runs for five years from May 1, 1917. Within that period every controversy between members of the union and their employers is to be composed by arbitration. The agreement contains provisions exempting from arbitration the union laws in operation on January 1, 1916, and requiring the consent of both parties before changes in those laws shall be operative on existing individual contracts, nor shall the arbitration agreement be subject to such changes until they have been accepted by the international board of arbitration.

The spirit of fairness, of justice, of temperate deliberation, of willingness to hear the other side, which characterizes this organization, breathes through this compact. The public respect which the International Typographical union has long enjoyed is not the fruit of a superior intelligence alone. It is only too possible for intelligence to be wrongly led, to fall into the hands of radicals and hot heads, to be unwise in conduct and arbitrary in action The collective intelligence of the International Typographical union is high, but it is accompanied, enforced, and guided by a large perception of public interest and public opinion It does not seek to rule or ruin. It never stoops to violence. It is not a continual threat and club against the employer It is conservative It recognizes the rule of reason. To some "labor leaders" a union is the source of political power, careless of the economic disruptions and losses, the public inconveniences it may cause It is a sort of imperium in imperio, an unofficial branch of the government, a power to be used for power. A union like the International Typographical union is a force for the benefit of its own members without perpetual encroachment upon the rights of others, without unduly magnifying its own

Source of Paper Supply.

Washington, D. C.—"Over two-thirds of the more than 1,000,000,000 pounds of wood pulp imported into the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, and used in the manufacture of paper, came from Canada," according to a communication to the National Geographic society from John Oliver La Gorce and issued by the society as a bulletin in connection with the government's inquiry into the increase in the cost of newspaper

"The pulp importations for 1915-1916 have been 150,000,000 pounds less than for the previous 12 months, yet the amount shipped to us from Canada during the past year was 130,000,000 pounds in excess of her 1914-1915 shipments. During the year just closed nearly 70 per cent of our 1,135,000,000 pounds of pulp came from our neighbor to the north, while most of the remaining 30 per cent came from Norway and Sweden.

"The enormous volume and importance of the paper manufacturing industry in the United States is seldom realized by the chief beneficiary, the average reader. According to the most recent figures of the United States department of commerce (1914) the value of the annual production of the paper mills of this country exceed $330,000,000. Over $50,000,000 of this sum is represented in newspaper—1,313,254 tons, or enough to print 10,500,000,000 14-page, eight-column papers.

"Put On Your Hat."

From the Houston Post.

The Leavenworth New Era is the name of the weekly publication of the prisoners in the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan. It is an interesting publication—though it may not appeal to many people.

The prisoners edit it, of course with the approval of the department of justice. Its purpose is the "encouragement and educational advancement of prisoners everywhere." It is sent only to government officials and to persons interested in prison reform.

The issue of July 14 devotes a considerable space, to the future policy of Joliet prison as regards prison reform, and contains beside several editorials which prove that the prisoner is helping others to help him.

Men convicted of crime are still men. As a general proposition they are neither better than the man outside nor are they worse than the man outside. Given the same advantages of health of mind and body, the same surrounding environment of happiness and contentment, and the same steady labor as the man who is not a criminal, and the average prisoner in the penitentiary becomes the average citizen of the outside world.

Men are men "for a' that and for a' that."

The editors of the New Era are impressed with the action of a deputy warden at Joliet, the state prison of Illinois. This man was approached by a prisoner who removed his hat. "Put on your hat," the official said. And the man understood that there was at least one official in the prison who understood that the convict is yet a man. The editor's comment is, "There is far more respect to the officers now than before."

It is a fact that men everywhere and in every walk of life will yield respect to those who respect them. And the prison official who does not respect the men under him, who does not understand that they, too, are human beings, that man should be removed from office and a gentleman should take his place.

The Awful Imports.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

Campaign speakers who talk of the threat of our increased imports and point to the figures carefully omit mention of the related facts concerning the nature of the imports and the amount of our export trade. Concerning these other things the New York Post presents some interesting figures. The fiscal years, which ended June 30, showed an increase of $523,000,000 in imports. This is the "threatening" total. But it is also true that in the same period our exports increased three times as much, or over $1,500,000,000. And what is still more significant, our increased imports were almost wholly of raw materials that made possible the tremendous activity of American factories.

Our purchases of crude rubber increased by $72,000,000. As a result we shipped abroad many more automobiles than ever before and reached the stupendous output of $750,000 cars in the first half of this year, most of which were for this country.

In Cuba and elsewhere we purchased $32,000,000 more raw sugar, which was refined here and exported to other countries. We bought $17,000,000 worth more of tin, $22,000,000 more of fibers, $41,000,000 more of raw silk and $43,000,000 more of hides. And every dollar so spent meant more work for American labor and greater exports for American commerce.

In other words, the immense increase in imports meant that the United States was doing an immensely bigger business, that the importation of every $1 worth of raw material was in effect making possible the receipt of $3 for exported manufactures, that American labor was being kept busy and American industry tremendously prosperous.

Birds of the Battle Front.

From the Chicago Evening Post.

An article written by a soldier who is serving in the front line of British trenches says that the birds of the country seemingly are unafraid of the cannonading, that swallows build their nests in the sand banks near the war torn front and that other birds sing unconcernedly while the 75s and the bigger guns are roaring a chorus. Birds are not easily frightened away from their accustomed haunts. When they learn that no harm is intended them they stay and rear their young, seemingly unconscious of the riot about them.

In the spring of 1915 there were some European students of bird life who thought that the swallows and all the other migrants would fail to return to their accustomed haunts in the valleys and on the plains where the war was raging There were some unthinking persons who held that the whole course of migration would be changed by war's conditions. The battle zone on any front is not very wide. Migration is a fixed habit, and even if European birds on their return from Africa, southern Italy and other sections of the Mediterranean shore should change their summer homes from one point to another only a few miles distant, the act would not constitute a change in the migration. It simply would mean a little shifting of the line.

As events have proved, the birds of Europe have maintained their summer residences despite the banging of guns and the bursting of shells. One of the commonest spring scenes in the meadows between the armies is the skylark soaring from his nest in the stubble to his "tryst in the clouds," singing all the way. A French army officer who happens to be a naturalist, almost forgot the fact that he was in a fight, so interested was he in watching an oriole and listening to its song while thousands of Frenchmen were doing their best to kill thousands of Germans and the Germans were doing their best in reverse.

A European song thrush calmly fed its young ones in their nest in a tree while the forest of which the home site was a part was being torn and gashed by heavy shell fire. A bird doesn't like gun fire, but when it finds out that it is not the target it gains confidence and it will sing unconcernedly. Some day some one will write a story about the birds of the battlefield. There must be a good many bird students in every army now engaged in fighting.

The First Step to Success.

From the Columbus Dispatch.

The first lesson in success might be entitled "Cheerful Helpfulness." It ought to be learned early by every boy and girl. It ought to be learned in the home; then it will be second nature everywhere else. It delights mother and lessens her burdens, and makes home happier for every member of the family. If the young folks will start out with the thought that the greatest thing in the world is serving others and not being served by them, all of the latter that anybody could wish will come as a natural result. Do you doubt it? Put the question to yourself—whom do you like to serve? Invariably, the answer will be those who serve or are willing to serve you. Not the quarrelsome, petulent, bullying persons about you, but those who are cheerful, watchful and willing to do the little things that smooth the rough texture of every day life.

Those who soonest make a place for themselves in the home or in money earning tasks are those who are quick to see what they can do to help and are willing to do it, giving time and effort to the task of learning, if it be difficult. It is thus that the office boy becomes a clerk, the clerk a partner in the business, and the partner the head of the concern. And the same way up is open to the young woman in any of the employments that she seeks.

On the other hand, the sure way to failure is through blindness to the little bits of helpfulness, evasion of duty, watchfulness of the clock that not an extra minute of time may be put in; the expectation that, while you give ungrudging service to none everybody will give it to you Opportunity opens wide to the cheerful, helpful person, but her gates must be pried open for those who lack good will and expect always to be helped

For cascade effects loop ideas, bandings, ruchings and fancy rosets very narrow fancy edged ribbons are used extensively. Wider ribbons are employed for elaborate bows and girdles

Loading Guns With Air.

Jack Tar knows what it means to tote heavy shells around ship, but Jack Tar will not need to worry about this duty longer, according to the Popular Science Monthly. Ammunition is now loaded by pneumatic tube straight from the magazine to the firing turret. An intricate mechanism prevents the shells from entering the breeches of the guns at great speed and also prevents any mistake in firing.

If a sick woman is able to sew she's on the mend.

More War.

Mrs. Styles—I want one of those new military bonnets.

Mr. Styles—How much are they?

"Only nineteen dollars."

"I can't afford that, and I don't see why you want a military bonnet. You're not going to fight, are you, my dear?"

"I am if I don't get the bonnet."

Its Purpose.

"So this is the prison laundry?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I suppose you wash and iron the convicts here."

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

"Fine. I raised so many vegetables that the exercise I got out of working in it cost me hardly anything at all."

Gratification.

No Wonder.

Unsuspected Efficiency.

The bureau of plant industry is endeavoring to improve tobacco by scientific study of the different brands. To eliminate the personal equation in smoking and to secure uniformity of conditions the bureau has a carefully regulated apparatus for testing the burning quality of cigars. The "pull" on the cigar is secured by means of an aspirator, which is filled by a continuous inflow of water and emptied at regular intervals by a siphon. The "pull" occurs at intervals of 30 seconds and lasts for a period of ten seconds. The apparatus smokes four cigars of the perfecto type in about 30 minutes.—Tobacco.

Fine Expression.

In a review of a novel we come across this suggestive sentence: "Here too, characters that transmute common things into gold by the alchemy of the spirit." The finest thought of the day is expressed by that modest sentence. The great problem in religion, education, business, politics, and society concerns itself with that transmutation. It suggests a finer life than one gets out of the materialism of the age, with its luxury, pleasure, selfishness, ill will, spite, and overreaching. The evolution of the day is toward the sanctification of every-day experience and infusing heroism into common life. That is what must eventually happen if humanity ever gets to be what it should be. It is a long way to that end, longer, perhaps, than from the monad to man, as Emerson expresses it, but thither the evolution proceeds.

Largest Fountain Pen.

"What is believed to be the largest fountain pen ever made for actual use was completed a few days ago in New Orleans. This pen is made of silver and holds two ounces of ink. It is ten inches long with the cap and eight inches without the cap, not including the point. The pen weighs about four ounces.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

FOUND DEAD IN BED

Word was received here, Monday, that Sam Ridder of Beltrami, Minnesota, was found dead in bed Sunday. We are without many of the particulars and the are not obtainable at this time. He was a bachelor about fifty years old and was living alone. He was known to have been troubled at different times with heart disease and that is thought to applicable to his death. He is well known here by some of our older residents as he made his home here a number of years ago with his cousins, August and Fred Ridder. He came to this country from Germany when a young man and all near relatives are still living in that country. F. H. Ridder left Monday for Beltrami, to attend the funeral and take charge of affairs

WHY ADVERTISING PAYS

Everybody reads the ads and nearly everybody remembers what they read. Mrs. Jones remarks to Mrs. Smith that she must simply go to the store and get a new dress pattern, or a winter coat, or possibly a new hat. Mrs. Smith has read of the latest creations at some store and immediately springs her knowledge upon Mrs. Jones, who simply can't resist the temptation to go and see for herself. Once there she generally buys.

Farmer Hankinson needs a new harness, or a plow, or some other implement for progressive farming. His neighbor has read the the up-to-date ad of the implement house in the local paper and incidentally mentions that So-and-So carries a good article which he is advertising quite heavily. This excites Farmer Hankinson's curiosity and he "just drops in to see it." He, too, often ends with a buy.

The woman's club, or the sewing circle, or the pink tea ladies get together and spend the afternoon or evening in gathering up stray bits of information. Anything that has attracted the eye of any member comes in for discussion, and nothing is more dear to their hearts than those delightful things that were advertised in the last issue of the paper. Of course they all want to know about them, and then they must see them, and in the end they buy them.

Bill Doolittle wants a new overcoat, and the well written overcoat ad never gets by him. He drops in and looks over the coats of which the merchant has spoken so glowingly. They are represented and he buys.

Yes, they all read the ads, and they talk about the goods they read about, and they buy when they are sufficiently interested to talk about them.

Of course advertising pays. Everybody knows it pays.

NOTICE!

We wish to announce to all farmers that have been told different, that we have been taking the standard weight on oats, 32 pounds to the bushel since July 1st, 1916, and also pay the highest prices for grain and hogs, and will sell you your coal at reasonable prices. Your business is appreciated at the North Elevator. A. C. Lau & Son.

BIRTH OF A NATION

To Play in Garner, Matinee and Night, Monday, October 9, With Big Symphony Orchestra

In each of the large cities where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which will soon be seen at the Garner Opera House was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box offices. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theatre, these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale!" said the box office attendant wearily when asked about an engagement, It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicaco's Loop, Boston's Tremont Street looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next street. The phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season. It means of course that the high-class theatre is not moribund. Only the topch of David W. Griffith's master wizardry has been required to infuse it with life.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bettin entertained a large number of their friends at dinner last Sunday. Among them were Messrs. and Mesdames F, J Weisbrod, Ed. Weisbrod, Elmer Weisbrod, E, C. Weisbrod, B. D. Weisbrod, Ed. Schles, Roy Miller, Chas, Newel, Gaylard Johnson, Peter Havenga and Misses Sadie Boevers and Tessie Brown and Henry Boevers.—Fenton Reporter.

Two true types of near accidents are mentioned in a recent issue of the National Safety Council. One can be made harmless by proper safeguards; the other type is seemingly unforseeable and unpreventable The first is the bursting grinding wheel, which injures no one because of the use of safety flanges. The second was an actual incident in a manufacturing plant, in which the head of sledge hammer, long in use, broke in two lengthwise and flew off violently, narrowly missing a man's head. In this instance there was no flaw visible on the outside of the hammer head, and although the surface of the break showed the rust of time, all along its edges was a narrow margin of clean gray metal.

One of the most notable of the many memorial performances in honor of Shakespeare took place June 24 at the historic castle of Kronburg, at Elsinore, in Denmark. "Hamlet" was presented by a cast of 200 performers in the presence of the king of Denmark and other distinguished auditors. The scenes of the play were thus laid on the very spot where Shakespeare placed them

Late corn, on low ground, was injured in those sections, but over the larger portion of the state the crop, as a whole, has been but slightly damaged Dry weather continues in the south central counties, and, as a result, fall plowing and seeding is being delayed. Unless rain comes soon the acreage of winter wheat in those counties will be greatly reduced The rains on the 11th and 12th in the southwest and southeast put the soil in excellent condition and plowing and seeding are progressing rapidly. 8-HOUR DAY PROPOSED IN IOWA PUBLIC WORK

Bill Carrying Such Provisions Will Be Presented at Next Legislative Session.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 21.—Common laborers of Iowa are now demanding recognition the same as is given union men. They want eight-hour days, especially on public improvement work.

A bill which makes eight hours the standard day length for mechanics, workmen and laborers on public work will be introduced at the next session of the state legislature by the Iowa State Federation of Labor Copies of the bill have been received from J. H. Strief, president, by L. O. Pouchot, secretary of the local Trades and Labor assembly, and he will present it to the city council for an opinion.

Another bill will be presented at the same time to the legislature which will make it possible for cities and towns to bid for the contracts for their own improvements, and also of the state. These bids are to be submitted the same as by a private contractor and will be judged on an equal basis.

That any city or town within the state of Iowa may submit a sealed estimate at the time and place arranged for the submission of bids for public improvements, reads the bill, and if no bid is lower or better, in the opinion of the city or town council, than such estimate submitted by such city or town, then it may furnish such labor and material as may be necessary for the construction of such public improvements.

The bill further provides that it shall be lawful for all cities and towns in submitting propositions to stipulate that the laborers, mechanics and workmen shall not be required to work more than eight hours on any one calendar day.

Each city and town will also have the right under the bill to stipulate a minimum wage which shall be paid the workers by the company. They further can require the contractor to give local laborers and material supply houses the preference when it can be done without loss to the city or town.

In the bill, which makes eight hours the working day length for laborers, there is a clause which makes it obligatory on every officer or agent of the state or political subdivision thereof to insert a clause in the contract which will require the contractor to not demand more than eight hours' time as a calendar day.

This restriction as to the number of hours of labor shall be applicable to all cases except where, by reason of extraordinary emergency, it becomes imperative that the hours of labor be extended and except, also, work upon public, military or naval defenses, or works connected therewith in time of war

Violations of any part of the law are to be considered as misdemeanors and the offender shall be subject to punishment.

NO ORDER ISSUED FOR PERSHING TROOPS

War Department Not Disposed to Accept as Accurate Reports of Recent Villa Raids.

Washington, Sept. 22 Secretary Baker let it be known today that the war department was not disposed to accept as accurate the report of Villa raid on Chihuahua City last Saturday transmitted by Brigadier General Bell yesterday on the strength of information that had reached him in El Paso

"We have no military information as to renewed Villista activities, Mr. Baker said, indicating that it was assumed that General Bell's account was based upon rumors and reports current in border towns and not facts obtained through army channels in Mexico.

He declined to discuss in any way what effect the reappearance of Villa if it were confirmed, might have on the movements of American troops in Mexico. So far as known, the war department has made no effort to learn from General Bell the sources of his information. General Funston is expected to transmit promptly without additional instructions any authentic news of the activities of the bandit upon which any change in plan involving General Pershing's expedition might be founded.

Chihuahua City, Mex., Sept. 22. Commenting on the report in American newspapers attributed to Brig. Gen. George A. Bell, jr., at El Paso, Tex., of the Villa raid upon this city last Saturday, Gen. Jacinto Trevino, commanding the Carranza forces of the north today issued a statement to the Associated Press in which he described it as "a tissue of lies and falsehoods."

"I am at loss to know where General Bell obtained such bad information," he continued. "The Villistas carried absolutely nothing away with them except some of the prisoners from the penitentiary, many of whom have since returned here. They captured neither ammunition, cannon, nor anything else. Our artillery drove the Villistas out of the places which they had taken and pursued them in their hasty retreat, leaving them no time to carry anything away as they left, galloping in small groups through the narrow streets of the town."

General Trevino asserted that every unit of his force was coordinate, that all prisoners examined by him agreed that Villa's band did not number more than 600; that there were no defections from the garrison and that all of the automobiles in the city are accounted for, none being carried away by the outlaws. Government artillery fire was only ceased he said, when the bandits had been repulsed and there seemed danger of shooting the pursuing forces under Generals Ramos and Merriem.

Chihuahua City, Mexico, Sept. 22.—(via El Paso Junction) Sept. 22.—Carranza troops are pursuing the bandit Villistas which attacked Chihuahua City last Saturday southward according to official announcement here today. The Villistas are reported passing along the road to Jiminez, southwest of Chihuahua City Ranchers arriving report Villa's forces were discouraged at failure to obtain the ransom promised by Villa, when he captured the city.

Reports from the district through which the band is passing, it was given out, say Villa has lost considerable prestige because of failure of the attack.

Prisoners taken by Villa who have returned, say Villa's plan was to surround the palace during the independence day celebration, kill General Jacinto Trevino, commandant at Chihuahua City and his staff, and to disorganize the garrison.

Villa last was reported in the Sierra de la Silla district near Santa Ysabel.

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 22.—General Funston today said he placed full confidence in the report of Villa's attack on Chihuahua City, sent to the war department by Brigadier General Bell and given out for publication yesterday. He said that he had been informed that General Bell's information was gained from reliable persons who had come to El Paso directly from Chihuahua City immediately after the battle.

New York, Sept. 22.—In a telegram today to Juan T. Burnu, Mexican consul general in New York, General Trevino, after reiterating his statement that his forces defeated the Villa invaders at Chihuahua City, says:

"This foolish shedding of blood with the intention of creating difficulties for the conferees of the commission at New London, at the machinations of American and Mexican political interests. They themselves are satisfied that they have failed."

GERMAN ARMY MAKING GOOD USE OF PIGEONS

Behind the Somme Front, (by mail). —Scattered along the German lines in France, but several miles to the rear, are a succession of "carrier pigeon stations" which form an effective link in the German scheme of defense, and in times of extreme stress can become well nigh invaluable. Especially is this the case when all other means of communication from the front trenches with the rear are destroyed.

In the trenches are kept cages of trained pigeons. The birds are kept constantly in practice so that in times of emergency they will go without fail to some station to give word of disaster that might have been telephoned had not the telephone connection been shot away or otherwise destroyed.

The messages are written on tiny pieces of paper, enclosed in thimble-like aluminum containers which are attached to a leg of the bird, and the fliers are released. If longer messages must be sent, or maps have to be transmitted, these are enclosed in a larger container which is attached to a sort of harness that can be put over the bird's head and fitted tight to its body

HOW THEY GO SHOPPING DURING STRIKE

Since the beginning of the great traction strike in New York the autoped, the latest single passenger motor vehicle, has been more prominent in the streets of the city than ever before. The young woman seen in the picture did not permit the strike to stop her shopping tour, and she made her inspection of the stores on her autoped. Many persons travel to work on them.

CRACK TROOPS OF HINDENBURG FAIL

German Chief With 90,000 Men Hurled Back By French In Attacks In the Somme Sector.

Paris, Sept. 23.—German infantry, advancing in waves, made renewed efforts this morning to beat back the French from positions recently captured north of the Somme. The official announcement of today says the attacks were broken by French artillery before the Germans reached the French lines, compelling them to retire to their own trenches, after sustaining heavy losses.

Ninety thousand men, directed personally by Field Marshal von Hindenburg, took part in yesterday's attack on the new French positions in the region of Bouchavesnes on the Somme, according to La Liberte's special correspondent in the field. Many additional artillery trains also had been brought up for the event.

The results of the battle were disastrous for the attacking forces, declares the correspondent, division after division being decimated by the French infantry and machine gun fire. The fighting was extraordinarily fierce in the center of the region attacked, around Bouchavenes and Bois L'Abec and at Combles and at the Priez farm, as well as at Rancourt. At the Priez farm, two Prussian battalions were nearly destroyed, adds the correspondent, and a similar fate was suffered at Rancourt by three German regiments, which advancing in four waves, made the last desperate effort of the day.

The extent of the German losses, says the dispatch, may be estimated by the fact that a company of the Eleventh Bavarian division lost 160 men out of 210, while regiments elsewhere lost 60 per cent of their effectives.

British Make New Gain on Front of One Mile

London, Sept. 22.—The British advanced on a front of about a mile last night in the Somme sector south of the Ancre river. The war office announced today that two lines of hostile trenches have been captured.

"During the night we advanced on a front of about a mile," the statement says, capturing two lines of hostile trenches approximately between Flers and Martinpuich."

"Our front now runs approximately on a direct line north of Flers and Martinpuich.

"The enemy's trenches were successfully entered, last night, south of Arras, prisoners being taken and many casualties inflicted. North of Neuville St. Vaast a mine was blown up by us and the crater occupied."

WRITERS REJECT PLAN TO JOIN LABOR UNIONS

New York, Sept. 22.—Ninety members of the Authors' League of America have signed and issued a protest against the proposal to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor. Included in that number are many well known writers, such as Jack London, George Ade, Cyrus Townsend Brady, John Burrows, Winston Spencer Churchill, Hamlin Garland, Emerson Hough, Joseph C. Lincoln, Brander Matthews, Ray Stannard Baker, Samuel G. Blythe, Irvin S. Cobb, James Flagg, Will Payne, Ida M. Tarbell, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Owen Wister and Edward Matt Wooley. They denounced the proposed affiliation as inappropriate, disadvantageous and dangerous and assert that those favoring it dwell on the advantages of standardized contracts in the publishing, magazine and theatrical business, but fail to show that it would attain any of these advantages.

BANKS ARE EQUAL TO STRESS, CLAIM

Charles Hamlin, of Reserve Board, Says Americans Are Able to Meet Any After War Shock.

New York, Sept. 23.—American business men, aided by the federal reserve bank system, will be able successfully to withstand the shock of European competition after the war, is the opinion of Charles Hamlin, governor of the federal reserve board. His views were expressed at the annual dinner of the institute of accountants last night. He spoke in part as follows:

"I estimate that the wealth of the United States has increased during the last two years by $40,000,000,000. Bank deposits have increased between $6,000,000,000 and $7,000,000,000, and the stock of gold has increased more than $700,000,000. Since the first of the year the importations of gold have amounted to $460,000,000.

Hungarian Statesman Weathers Storm Brought About By Entry of Rumania.

London, Sept. 23.—The Hungarian diet has finally rejected the motions of Counts Andresey and Apponyi, leaders of the opposition for the convocation of the delegations, according to a Budapest dispatch to Reuters by way of Amsterdam. The storm which Premier Tisza is now reported to have weathered reached its height on the entrance of Rumania into the ranks of the allies. The matters which the opposition demanded should be referred to the delegations were the alleged incompetency of the Austrian government and the condition of foreign affairs and the efficiency of the Austro-Hungarian army administration.

MORE TROUBLE DEVELOPS IN GREGIAN MACEDONIA

Athens, (via London), Sept. 22.—Further disorders in Greek Macedonia, where a revolutionary movement has been in progress for some time were reported today. A dispatch from Kozhani (a town of some 10,000 inhabitants, 55 miles southeast of Monastir), says the Greek civil authorities, have been removed from office by the inhabitants. The police chief and Major Karapanos, the military governor with a company of the 31st regiment of the line are said to have joined the uprising.

FUNSTON STOPS REVIVAL WORK

Preachers Can't Tell Soldiers They Are "Lost."

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 23.—General Funston today explained an announcement by Dr. J. D. Gambrell, corresponding secretary of the Baptist general conference of Texas, at Dallas last night, quoting General Funston as ordering that Baptist preachers might preach to the soldiers, providing that they did not tell them they were "lost."

General Funston said he had no desire to dictate to ministers what they should preach to army men, but he objected to revivals being held in the camps and found obnoxious any suspicion that army men needed to be special objects for evangelization.

"We have a fine lot of men, equal to any other class of men in the country," he said, "I don't believe that should be considered as being 'lost.'"

MAYOR SEEKS WAY TO CURB TROUBLE

New York Executive Threatens to Use Force If General Walkout Is Called Next Week.

New York, Sept. 23.—Repeated threats of a great general strike to help the striking street car representatives caused all branches of the city government charged with enforcing the laws to prepare today for outbreaks of mob violence. Mayor Mitchel's notice that he stood ready to invoke all the civil and military power at his command to suppress disorder was followed by greater police activity and a warning that persons convicted of engaging in street riots would receive heavier punishment.

The police department told the traction companies that they could reestablish night service as soon as they were ready under assurance of adequate protection. Thus far 6,700 policemen have been disposed at strategic points.

This police guard includes a patrol of 50 automobiles and 100 motorcyclists along the most exposed car routes.

Decide Sympathy Strike.

Trade union leaders representing about 700,000 workers will meet this afternoon to decide whether to issue a call for a general strike. Some of the labor leaders said such a strike, if ordered, would begin Monday or Tuesday. The call, they said, would be based on the ground that organized wage workers should not ride in cars manned by strike breakers.

Cross town surface lines where cars were run last night were not molested. The lines had heavy police guards. The early morning bombardments of elevated trains were resumed, however, strike sympathizers lurking on roof tops throwing bricks and bottles which shattered car windows. Several passengers were injured in 16 attacks reported by the police.

BRITAIN TO ESTABLISH FOREIGN TRADING BANK

London, Sept. 22.—Establishment of a British trade bank with a capital of £10,000,000 was recommended today by a committee of which Baron Farmingdon, chairman of the Great Central railway is the head. The committee was appointed to consider the best means of meeting the needs of British firms, after the war with particular reference to financing large overseas contracts. It suggested that the proposed bank could fill the gap between the home banks and the colonial and foreign British institutions and develop facilities not provided by the present system.

The scale affects practically 20,000 men in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Oklahoma, Illinois and Indiana.

FRENCH HARVEST ONLY FAIR, OFFICIALS STATE

Paris, Sept. 22.—The agricultural situation in France on the completion of the harvest was summed up authoritatively as follows:

"The wheat yield is somewhat below that of the average year, but in the west, central and southeastern sections, the harvest is good as a whole. The situation as to oats is quite favorable. Potatoes suffered from dryness, but good crops were raised in many sections. The beet yield was satisfactory.

"Vineyards suffered from the heat, but, on the whole, the yield is considered a satisfactory one."

DOBRUDJA BATTLE TIDE IS FAVORING TEUTONIC ARMIES

Von Mackensen Reported to Have Again Broken Resistence of Russians and Rumanians.

SERIOUS RESULT LIKELY

Entente Forces Claim to Be Making Slow Steady Gains Against Bulgars In Macedonia.

Berlin, Sept. 23.—The tide of the great battle in the Rumanian province of Dobrudja has again turned, this time in favor of the central powers, according to Berlin today. Field Marshal Von Mackensen has succeeded in breaking the Rumanian and Russian resistance, the German war office reports, excepting an encircling movement which compelled the entente forces to retreat in disorder.

It was only last night that an official announcement from Bucharest declared the battle which had been in progress for six days had ended Wednesday with the defeat of the Germans, Bulgarians and Turke, who were retiring southward, burning villages as they went.

Outcome May Be Serious.

If the German victory turns out to be a decisive one, the situation promises to develop seriously for the Rumanians and Russians who have been fighting to protect the railroad running from Constanza on the Black sea to Tchernavoda on the Danube. The battle was fought not more than 20 miles south of the railroad and its loss would mean the cutting off of the convenient water route of communication between Russia and Rumania by way of Constanza. Through Tchernavoda in addition lies the route to interior Rumania, over the only bridge spanning the Danube along the entire Dobrudja front.

Fighting in Mountains.

In the fighting in the Carpathians the Russians have taken the mountain peak of Smotreo, which already had changed hands several times. Elsewhere along this rugged front from the Russians have been attacking heavily, but according to Berlin, were beaten off.

Losses Are Heavy.

Rumanians, Russians and Serbians were pitted against the invaders, strong reinforcements having been hurried to Dobrudja, whon the operations under the noted field marshal threatened to overwhelm a section of Rumania. A strong line to the north was hastily fortified and powerful forces were thrown out to oppose the onslaughts of the central powers. That the eight days' battle has been a sanguinary one, is indicated by the various official statements which told of the intensity of the fighting that has continued without cessation.

Today's official statement says:

"The Bulgarian and German troops under Field Marshal Von Mackensen have driven back the Russians and Rumanians in Dobrudja in disorder. The victory was gained by means of an encircling counter attack.

"Desperate fighting between the Austro-Germans and the Russians in the Carpathian mountains continues. The summit of Smotreo, which has changed hands several times, has again been captured from the Germans by the Russians. Further Russian attacks on Baba Ludowa were repulsed.

Bulgaria Pledged Not to Fight Rumanians, Is Report

London, Sept. 23.—The reports which have been current for some time that Bulgaria had agreed not to attack Rumania when the latter nation discussed war on Austria-Hungary are supported by a statement made today by a Rumanian official in London. Discussing the Russo-Rumanian battle with the German and Bulgarian forces in Dobrudja, he said General Averesco, former Rumanian war minister, who led the forces which invaded Hungary, was transferred from Transylvania to Dobrudja only after evidence had been obtained that the Bulgarians intended to break their word.

"The German plan of capturing the town of Constanza and the great bridge over the Danube has failed definitely," he continued. "The Bulgarians will realize the mistake they made in following nation instincts and being unable to keep their word."

Bulgars Hard Pressed All Along Macedonian Front

Paris, Sept. 22.—French and Serbian troops operating along the western end of the Macedonian front have scored new successes against the Bulgarians, the war office announced today.

Serbian troops continuing their advance along the Broda river have reached the neighborhood Urbani, where 100 prisoners were taken.

North of Florina a Bulgarian attack was broken up by the fire of the French artillery.

As a result of heavy engagements the entente forces were able to make progress on the heights dominating the road from Florina to Popili.

London, Sept. 22.—British warships have been bombarding Bulgarian positions in the vicinity of Neohori on the east bank of the Struma near its mouth, northeast of Saloniki, the war office announced today. On the left of the British position on the Macedonian front in the Doiran region an artillery duel of increasing intensity is in progress, says the statement.

Sofia, (via London), Sept. 22.—Only minor fighting on all the Bulgarian fronts with no change in the general situation is reported in an official statement issued by the war office today.

Turkish Troops Now Being Used In District of Riga

London, Sept. 22—Turkish troops have appeared on the Riga front, says a Reuter dispatch from Petrograd. They are led by German and Austrian officers and their whole equipment is German.

QUIET, SAYS PETROGRAD.

Petrograd, (via London), Sept. 22.—"In the western and Caucasian fronts there were no developments of importance," says the official statement today.

FINNEGAN'S PHILOSOPHY

Single Track Minds

"What is he?" asked Finnegan. "Sure at Injainnypoles he said he was full of Annymated Conceery'tism Fwhat's that ye say? T'is the turn-table on the wan thrack mind. It kapes spinnin' round and round an' divil a man can tell fwhat switch it will pick up. It dinnau itself So ye dinnau where to lay for it.

"T'was so wid the arrumed freight ships. 'They're not warships,' he says, 'onless I change me mind,' he says, 'which I have,' he says, 'an' annywan who says so is a liar,' he says, 'but I refuse to discuss it,' he says, 'I'll pass the buck to Congress,' he says, 'on'y I won't,' he says, 'for t'is no business of their's,' he says, 'though they must vote on the resolution,' he says, 'to show where they stand,' he says 'Hince ye'll lay it on the table,' he says, 'an' thin they can't vote,' says Wudthrow to Stone.

"'I—I- thought I seen a fallacy,'—says Stone, timid like, but the Great Idaylist brung down his fisht wid a t'ump.

'Table the risolution,' says he,—an' away goes Stone.

"'I what does this mean?' axes the Sinit.

"'Gintlemen,' says Stone, weepin' bitterly, 'Ye can frisk me But thim's the orders,' says Stone, 'an' if anny man ivir knew fwhat it meant he's kep quiet about it.'

"So wid the fightin' wurd 'We're too proud to fight,' says this turrible man to a bunch iv just-overs at Philadephy. 'Haw-Haw-Haw,' says the wurld (a laugh gets his goat, Jawn) 'I was thinkin' iv somethin' I didn't say,' yells Wudthrow. 'Haw-Haw-Haw,' says the wurld, laughin' to split.

"Be this an' be that 'Too Proud to Fight' has made the reppytashun iv Wudthrow. T'is like the Monroe Doctrine to Monroe, or Emanshipashun to Lincoln. T'was thranslated into ivry tongue. T'is better known than the twenty-third psalm, or the famous oration iv the Guv-nor iv North Carliny. If an Ashtantee poked another in the eye, he's give him the coon f'r 'Are Ye Too Proud to Fight?' ah' they'd both laugh before they wint to the flure All the recruitin' signs abroad had in an 'the shame wud bring three recruits, where 'Tippenary' or rum wud bring wan. 'Oh, won't ye plaze stop laughin'?' says Wudthrow, but they laughed the more So he sinds Jim Ham Lew is to explain. He's called Ham by reason he's so fond of pork

"'Three thousand years agone,' says Jim Ham, 'or maybe less,' says he, 'an ould Dago said 'Non Dinny Carey win Kerry' (or the like o' that, Jawn. It means not to have a chip on yer shoulder) 'Non Dinny Carey win Kerry,' says Jim Ham, 'an' Julius Sayzer,' says he, 'an Tolmy Philadelphy, says he, 'an' the Earl iv Cheatem, says Jim, 'an' William Haitch Seward, says Ham, 'an' a lot more I forget, says Ham, 'who felt the same way,' says Jim, although he says, 'they nivir said so,' says Jim Ham to the Sinit.

"'Now,' says he, 'how, I axe ye, end the Prisidint know that the cultyvated Christian aujience,' he says, 'iv immygrants,' says he, 'wud fail to grasp the nooance,' says Jim Ham An' Jawn, they shut the dures the way the people wudden't see the Sinit lose its dignity.'

"Fwhat's a nooance?" asked Malumphy.

"T'is a sort iv intellectual gold brick," replied Finnegan, slightly puzzled, "be which ye say fwhat ye doant mane, an' mane wye doant say. The nooance comes out iv it somehow. T'is like I dinnau what. Just exactly like it," he added after a short pause "I cudden't tell thim apart."

"Well," said Malumphy, "the single thrack mind gets nowhere, I'm thinkin'."

"Th' gauge is none too broad," replied his friend, "an' the thraffic's heavy," he added.

'BEATEN GOOD AND PLENTY'

Champ Clark Sees No Rainbows in Maine Result.

"We got whipped, and I guess that is all I will say about the Maine election," said Speaker Champ Clark. "We got beaten good and plenty."

Here is reason enough why Mr. Wilson should be defeated. Why should Mr. Hughes be preferred? Gifford Pinchot, the Progressive, answers, giving facts to support his statement: "Hughes is a man of his word. . . . I cannot vote for Wilson because I cannot trust him. He does not do what he says. Hughes does. Therefore my choice is Hughes."

Shadow Lawn as a residence for the next few weeks, will give its occupant an opportunity to get accustomed to the after-election gloom.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three time during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Democrats who harbored hopes that Josephus would catch the virus from the Bryan and Garrison resignations are still nursing their disappointment. Nothing remains for them but to resign to a realization that Josephus will not resign.

President Wilson is now anxious to have it thought that there was no withdrawal of troops from Mexico at the request of Carranza. Why not go one better and declare that we never had any troops in Mexico to withdraw?

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

NO PROTECTIVE MEASURE FROM DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS.

"You couldn't get a protective measure out of a Democratic Congress sectionally organized any more than you could get a revival meeting out of a disorderly house."—From Mr. Hughes' Speech at Chicago.

PREPARE FOR THIS.

When we contemplate industrial and commercial conditions we see that we are living in a fool's paradise. The temporary prosperity to which our opponents point has been created by the abnormal conditions incident to the war. With the end of the war there will be the new conditions determined by a new Europe. Millions of men in the trenches will then return to work. The energies of each of the now belligerent nations highly trained, will then be turned to production."—Charles E. Hughes.

"WORDS, OR DEEDS?"

"If anything in this campaign is real it is that we are now facing the question whether we want words or whether we want deeds; whether we want that which is written and spoken, or whether we want American action in the interests of the American people, worthy of the American name, maintaining the American honor, and buttressing the prosperity of the United States."—From Mr. Hughes' speech at Chicago.

MR. WILSON HAS HAD NO MEXICAN POLICY.

"We cannot let the American spirit fall so low that, lapped in the luxury occasioned by a foreign war, we shall see American lives sacrificed without a determination to prevent it and to make the American name honored and respected wherever our flag flies. The trouble with this administration is this:—I don't think it ever has had a policy in Mexico worthy of the name."—From Mr. Hughes' speech at Chicago.

MR. HUGHES OPPOSED TO FOOLISH GOVERNMENT.

"I have no respect for the idea that because democratic government is a government of the people, by the people and for the people it is a government of the foolish, for the foolish and by the foolish."—From Mr. Hughes' speech at Chicago.

"I don't care, if I am elected President, what becomes of my personal political fortunes. I propose that we shall have no more if I can stop it, of these "kiss me and I'll kiss you' appropriations in Congress."—From Mr. Hughes' speech at Chicago.

Now that Mr. Hughes knows he has been nominated for president, we may wait patiently for a few days longer to hear what Mr. Wilson has to say about it.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS

LIFE'S PERVERSITY

All night I lie upon my bed, until the dawn is glowing red, and chickens wake and shadows flee, and slumber will not come to me. I try out all the standard schemes for luring people into dreams; I count some fifty million sheep, and still I cannot get asleep. The night seems forty fortnights long, before I hear the breakfast gong, and from my tumbled bed arise, with mold and cobwebs in my eyes. Night after night this useless quest I make for slumber and for rest; when in the morning I am seen, I'm like a joke of Hallowe'en.

It is the balmy Sabbath day, and to the church I take my way. There in my pew I take my seat, in proper mood for discourse sweet. I love to mark the pastor's fire, I love to hear the singing choir. But ere the pastor's struck his gait, I feel some seven hundred weight of slumber pressing on my eyes; I do not hear the anthems rise, and not a sentence have I caught, of helpful words the preacher praught. Two deacons drag me from my pew, and push me then the portals through, and call it scandal and disgrace, the way I'm snoring through my face.

I wonder why things go that way, in this old world, so grim and gray.

Some leading citizens one day, came to the cottage where I stay, and said they wished I would attend a public meeting and defend the suffrage question, noble cause! I'm always glad to weild my jaws.

I practiced for it night and day; I thought up scorching things to say; I stood before my looking glass, and bellowed with my lungs of brass, until the lodgers on my floor began to shoot things through the door. I had my discourse down so fine, I thought a triumph would be mine.

The evening came when I appeared, to push some language through my beard. The hall was full of stately dames, who stood behind the suffrage games, and blessed damosels were there, with starry eyes and sunny hair.

I stood before that cultured crowd, and smiled a sickly smile and bowed, and did some gurgling most absurd, but couldn't say a blooming word. They gently dragged me from the stage, and hauled me homeward in a cage, assisted me to soak my brow, and I am feeling better now

I wonder why things go that way. So none of us will get too gay.—By Walt Mason From Judge.

A South Bend (Ind.) judge has ruled a man has a right to curse when another man takes his umbrella. This is old established custom legalized.

There is only one thing more rare than a real and disinterested friendship between two women, and that is a real and disinterested friendship between a man and a woman.

There are two ways of killing a love affair. One is to make it so difficult that it is not worth while, and the other is to make it so easy that it is not worth while.

Flirtations before marriage are like cocktails before a meal—they give you an appetite. Flirtations after marriage are like liquors—sweet and sticky, intoxicating and superfluous, and really a great mistake.

Love affairs are all alike, it is only the people who are different.

It is said but true that most things and people cease to be desirable as soon as they cease to be desired.

The British soldier will make a joke even against himself. An elderly lady in a bus noticed the initials "R. D. C." on a soldier's tunic. She puzzled her brains, but could not solve the mystery as to their meaning. At last her curiosity overpowered her and she asked what they stood for. "Reformed Drunkards' corps, ma'am," said the soldier gravely. "Dear me," said the lady, "how very interesting." And probably not one of those who laughed at the reply could have explained what "R. D. C." really means.—London Chronicle.

"Lor', Miss Edith, "how you done talk. Me steal? Poor old Mandy never done steal nothing."

"How does it come I found them in your room behind the trunk?"

"Now, Miss Edith, ain't you jes' the smartest, though, finding them stockings there when I done forgot where it was I put them. No'm, I din't steal 'em; I jes' forget them."

And Appropriate.

The two men spent much time together. Duane made up a short fictitious history about himself that satisfied the outlaw, only it drew forth a laughing jest upon Duane's modesty. For Fletcher did not hide his belief that this new partner was a man of achievements. Knell and Poggin, and then Cheseldine himself, would be persuaded of this fact, so Fletcher boasted. He had influence. He would use it. He thought he pulled a stroke with Knell. But nobody on earth, not even the boss, had any influence on Poggin. Poggin was concentrated ice part of the time, all the rest he was bursting hell. But Poggin loved a horse. He never loved anything else. He could be won with that black horse Bullet. Cheseldine was already won by Duane's monumental nerve; otherwise he would have killed Duane.

Little by little the next few days Duane learned the points he longed to know, and how indelibly they etched themselves in his memory! Cheseldine's hiding place was on the far slope of Mount Ord, in a deep, high walled valley. He always went there just before a contemplated job, where he met and planned with his lieutenants. Then while they executed he basked in the sunshine before one or another of the public places he owned. He was there in the Ord den now, getting ready to plan the biggest job yet. It was a bank robbery, but where, Fletcher had not as yet been advised.

Then when Duane had pumped the now amenable outlaw of all details pertaining to the present he gathered data and facts and places covering a period of 10 years. Fletcher had been with Cheseldine. And herewith was unfolded a history so dark in its bloody regime, so incredible in its brazen daring, so appalling in its proof of the outlaw's swoop and grasp of the country from Pecos to Rio Grande, that Duane was stunned. Compared to this Cheseldine of the Big Bend, to this rancher, stock buyer, cattle speculator, property holder, all the outlaws Duane had ever known sank into insignificance. The power of the man stunned Duane; the strange fidelity given him stunned Duane, the intricate inside working of his great system was equally stunning. But when Duane recovered from that the old terrible passion to kill consumed him, and it raged fiercely and it could not be checked. If that red-handed Poggin, if that cold-eyed, dead-faced Knell had only been at Ord! But they were not, and Duane with help of time got what he hoped was the upper hand of himself.

CHAPTER XXII.

Again inaction and suspense dragged at Duane's spirit. Like a leashed hound with a keen scent in his face Duane wanted to leap forth when he was bound. He almost fretted. Something called to him over the bold, wild brow of Mount Ord. But while Fletcher stayed in Ord waiting for Knell and Poggin, or for orders, Duane knew his game was again a waiting one.

But one day there were signs of the long quiet of Ord being broken. A messenger strange to Duane rode in on a secret mission that had to do with Fletcher. When he went away Fletcher became addicted to thoughtful moods and lonely walks. He seldom drank, and this in itself was a striking contrast to former behavior. The messenger came again. Whatever communication he brought, it had a remarkable effect upon the outlaw. Duane was present in the tavern when the fellow arrived, saw the few words whispered, but did not hear them. Fletcher turned white with anger or fear, perhaps both, and he cursed like a madman. The messenger, a lean, dark-faced, hard-riding fellow reminding Duane of the cowboy Guthrie, left the tavern without eye a drink and rode away off to the west. This west mystified and fascinated Duane as much as the south beyond Mount Ord. Where were Knell and Poggin? Apparently they were not at present with the leader on the mountain. After the messenger left Fletcher grew silent and surly. He had presented a variety of moods to Duane's observation, and this latest one was provocative of thought. Fletcher was dangerous. It became clear now that the other outlaws of the camp feared him, kept out of his way. Duane let him alone, yet closely watched him.

Perhaps an hour after the messenger had left, not longer, Fletcher manifestly arrived at some decision, and he called for his horse. Then he went to his shack and returned. To Duane the outlaw looked in shape both to ride and to fight. He gave orders for the men in camp to keep close until he returned. Then he mounted.

"Come here, Dodge," he called.

Duane went up and laid a hand on the pommel of the saddle. Fletcher walked his horse, with Duane beside him, till they reached the log bridge, when he halted.

"Dodge, I'm in bad with Knell," he said. "An' it 'pears I'm the cause of friction between Knell an' Poggy. Knell never had any use for me, but Poggy's been square, if not friendly. The boss has a big deal on, an' here it's been held up because of this scrap. He's waitin' over there in the mountain to give orders to Knell or Poggy, an' neither one's showin' up. I've got to stand in the breach, an' I ain't enjoyin' the prospects."

"What's the trouble about, Jim?" asked Duane.

"Reckon it's a little about you, Dodge," said Fletcher, dryly. "Knell hadn't any use fer you thet day. He ain't got no use fer a man onless he can rule him. Some of the boys here hev blabbed before I edged in with my say, an' there's hell to pay. Knell claims to know somethin' about you that'll make both the boss an' Poggy sick when he springs it. But he's keepin' quiet. Hard man to figger, thet Knell. Reckon you'd better go back to Bradford fer a day or so, then camp out near here till I come back."

"Why?"

"Wal, because there ain't any use fer you to git in bad, too. The gang will ride over here any day. If they're friendly I'll light a fire on the hill here, say three nights from tonight. If you don't see it thet night you hit the trail. I'll do what I can. Jim Fletcher sticks to his pals. So long, Dodge."

Then he rode away.

He left Duane in a quandry. This news was black. Things had been working out so well. Here was a setback. At the moment Duane did not know which way to turn, but certainly he had no idea of going back to Bradford. Friction between the two great lieutenants of Cheseldine! Open hostility between one of them and another of the chief's righthand men! Among outlaws that sort of thing was deadly serious. Generally such matters were settled with guns. Duane gathered encouragement even from disaster. Perhaps the disintegration of Cheseldine's great band had already begun. But what did Knell know? Duane did not circle around the idea with doubts and hopes; if Knell knew anything it was that this stranger in Ord, this new partner of Fletcher's, was no less than Buck Duane.

Well, it was about time thought Duane, that he made use of his name if it were to help him at all. That name had been MacNally's hope. He had anchored all his scheme to Duane's fame. Duane was tempted to ride off after Fletcher and stay with him. This, however, would hardly be fair to an outlaw who had been fair to him. Duane concluded to await developments and when the gang rode in to Ord, probably from their various hiding places, he would be there ready to be denounced by Knell. Duane could not see any other culmination of this series of events than a meeting between Knell and himself. If that terminated fatally for Knell there was all probability of Duane's being in no worse situation than he was now. If Poggin took up the quarrel! Here Duane accused himself again—tried in vain to revolt from a judgment that he was only reasoning out excuses to meet these outlaws.

Meanwhile, instead of waiting, why not hunt up Cheseldine in his mountain retreat? The thought no sooner struck Duane than he was hurrying for his horse.

He left Ord ostensibly toward Bradford, but, once out of sight, he turned off the road, circled through the brush, and several miles south of town he struck a narrow grass-grown trail that Fletcher had told him led to Cheseldine's camp. The horse tracks along this trail were not less than a week old, and very likely much more. It wound between low, brush-covered foothills, through arroyos and gullies lined with mesquite, cottonwood, and scrub-oak.

In an hour Duane struck the slope of Mount Ord, and as he climbed he got a view of the rolling, black spotted country, partly desert, partly fertile, with long, bright lines of dry streambeds winding away to grow dim in the distance. He got among broken rocks and cliffs and here the open, downward-rolling land disappeared, and he was hard put to it to find the trail. He lost it repeatedly and made slow progress. Finally he climbed into a region of all rock benches, rough here, smooth there, with only an occasional scratch of iron horseshoe to guide him. Many times he had to go ahead and then work to right or left till he found his way again. It was slow work, it took all day, and night found him half-way up the mountain. He halted at a little side-canon with grass and water, and here he made camp. The night was clear and cool at that height, with a dark blue sky and a streak of stars blinking across. With this day of action behind him he felt better satisfied than he had been for some time. Here, on this venture, he was answering to a call that had so often directed his movements, perhaps his life, and it was on that logic or intelligence could take little stock of. And on this night, lonely like the ones he used to spend in the Nueces gorge, and memorable of them because of a likeness to that old hiding-place, he felt the pressing return of old haunting things—the past so long ago, wild flights, dead faces—and the places of these were taken by one quiveringly alive, white, tragic, with its dark, intent, speaking eyes—Ray Longstreth's.

That last memory he yielded to until he slept.

In the morning, satisfied that he had left still fewer tracks than he had followed up this trail, he led his horse up to the head of the canon, there a narrow crack in low cliffs, and with branches of cedar fenced him in. Then he went back and took up the trail on foot.

Without the horse he made better time and climbed through deep clefts, wide canons, over ridges, up shelving slopes, along precipices—a long, hard climb—till he reached what he concluded was a divide. Going down was easier, though the farther he followed this dim and winding trail the wider the broken battlements of rock. Above him he saw the black fringe of pinon and pine, and above that the bold peak, bare, yellow, like a desert butte. Once, through a wide gateway between great escarpments, he saw the lower country beyond the range, and beyond this, vast and clear at it lay in his sight, was the great river that made the Big Bend. He went down and down, wondering how a horse could follow that broken trail, believing there must be another better one somewhere into Cheseldine's hiding place.

He rounded a jutting corner, where view had been shut off, and presently came out upon the rim of a high wall. Beneath, like a green gulf seen through blue haze, lay an amphitheater walled in on the two sides he could see. It lay perhaps 1,000 feet below him, and, plain as all the other features of that wild environment, there shone out a big red stone or adobe cabin, white water shining away between great borders, and horses and cattle dotting the levels. It was a peaceful, beautiful scene. Duane could not help grinding his teeth at the thought of rustlers living there in quiet and ease.

Duane worked half way down to the level, and, well hidden in a niche, he settled himself to watch both trail and valley. He made note of the position of the sun and saw that if anything developed or if he decided to descend any farther there was small likelihood of his getting back to his camp before dark. To try that after nightfall he imagined would be vain effort.

Then he bent his keen eyes downward. The cabin appeared to be a crude structure. Though large in size, it had, of course, been built by outlaws.

There was no garden, no cultivated field; no corral. Excepting for the rude pile of stones and logs plastered together with mud, the valley was as wild probably, as on the day of discovery. Duane seemed to have been watching for a long time before he saw any sign of man, and this one apparently went to the stream for water and returned to the cabin.

The sun went down behind the wall and shadows were born in the darker places of the valley. Duane began to want to get closer to that cabin. What had he taken this arduous climb for? He held back, however, trying to evolve further plans.

While he was pondering the shadows quickly gathered and darkened. If he was to go back to camp he must set out at once. Still he lingered. And suddenly his wide roving eye caught sight of two horsemen riding up the valley. They must have entered at a point below, round the huge abutment of rock, beyond Duane's range of sight. Their horses were tired and stopped at the stream for a long drink.

Duane left his perch, took to the steep trail, and descended as fast a he could without making noise.

It did not take him long to reach the valley floor. It was almost level, with deep grass, and here and there clumps of bushes. Twilight was already thick down there. Duane marked the location of the trail, and then began to slip like a shadow through the grass and from bush to bush. He saw a bright light before he made out the dark outline of the cabin. Then he heard voices, a merry whistle, a coarse song, and the clink of iron cooking utensils. He smelled fragrant wood smoke. He saw moving dark figures cross the light. Evidently there was a wide door, or else the fire was out in the open.

Duane swerved to the left, out of direct line with the light, and thus was able to see better. Then he advanced noiselessly but swiftly toward the back of the house. There were trees close to the wall. He would make no noise, and he could scarcely be seen—if only there was no watch dog! But all his outlaw days he had taken risks with only his useless life at stake, now, with that changed, he advanced stealthy and bold as an Indian. He reached the cover of the trees, knew he was hidden in their shadows, for at a few paces' distance he had been able to see only their tops. From there he slipped up to the house and felt along a wall with his hands.

He came to a little window where light shone through. He peeped in. He saw a room shrouded in shadows, a lamp turned low, a table, chairs. He saw an open door, with bright flare beyond, but could not see the fire. Voices came indistinctly. Without hesitation Duane stole farther along—all the way to the end of the cabin. Peeping round, he saw only the flare of light on bare ground. Retracing his cautious steps, he paused at the crack again, saw that no man was in the room, and then he went on round that end of the cabin. Fortune favored him. There were bushes, an old shed, a wood pile, all the cover he needed at that corner. He did not even need to crawl.

Before he peered between the rough corner of wall and the bush growing close to it Duane paused a moment. This excitement was different from that he had always felt when pursued. It had no bitterness, no pain, no dread. There was as much danger here, perhaps more yet it was not the same. Then he looked.

He saw a bright fire, a red faced man bending over it, whistling, while he handled a steaming pot. Over him was a roofed shed built against the wall, with two open sides and two supporting posts. Duane's second glance, not so blinded by the sudden bright light, made out other men, three in the shadow, two in the flare, but with backs to him.

"It's a smoother trail by long odds, but ain't so short as this one right over the mountain," one outlaw was saying.

"What's eatin' you, Panhandle?" ejaculated another. "Blossom an' me rode from Faraway Springs, where Poggin is with some of the gang."

"Excuse me, Phil. Shore I didn't see you come in, an' Boldt never said nothin'."

"It took you a long time to get here, but I guess that's just as well," spoke up a smooth, suave voice with a ring in it.

Longstreth's voice — Cheseldine's voice!

Here they were—Cheseldine, Phil Knell, Blossom Kane, Panhandle Smith, Boldt—how well Duane remembered the names!—all here, the big men of Cheseldine's gang, except the biggest—Poggin. Duane had holed them, and his sensations of the moment deadened sight and sound of what was before him. He sank down, controlled himself, silenced a mounting exultation, then from a less strained position he peered forth again.

The outlaws were waiting for supper. Their conversation might have been that of cowboys in camp, ranchers at a roundup. Duane listened with eager ears, waiting for the business talk that he felt would come. All the time he watched with the eyes of a wolf upon its quarry. Blossom Kane was the lean limbed messenger who had so angered Fletcher. Boldt was a giant in stature, dark, bearded, silent. Panhandle Smith was the red faced cook, merry, profane, a short, bow legged man resembling many rustlers Duane had known, particularly Luke Stevens. And Knell, who sat there, tall, slim, like a boy in build, like a boy in years, with his pale, smooth, expressionless face and his cold, gray eyes. And Longstreth, who leaned against the wall, handsome, with his dark face and beard like an aristocrat, resembled many a rich Louisiana planter Duane had met. The sixth man sat so much in the shadow that he could not be plainly discerned, and, though addressed, his name was not mentioned.

Panhandle Smith carried pots and pans into the cabin and cheerfully called out: "If you gents air hungry fer grub, don't look fer me to feed you with a spoon."

The outlaws piled inside, made a great bustle and clatter as they sat to their meal. Like hungry men, they talked little.

Duane waited there awhile, then guardedly got up and crept round to the other side of the cabin. After he became used to the dark again he ventured to steal along the wall to the window and peeped in. The outlaws were in the first room and could not be seen.

Duane waited. The moments dragged endlessly. His heart pounded. Longstreth entered, turned up the light, and taking a box of cigars from the table, he carried it out.

"Here, you fellows, go outside and smoke," he said. "Knell, come on in now. Let's get it over."

He returned, sat down, and lighted a cigar for himself. He put his booted feet on the table.

Duane saw that the room was comfortably, even luxuriously furnished. There must have been a good trail, he thought, else how could all that stuff have been packed in there. Most assuredly it could not have come over the trail he had traveled. Presently he heard the men go outside and their voices became indistinct. Then Knell came in and seated himself without any of his habitual ease. He seemed preoccupied and as always, cold.

"What's wrong, Knell? Why didn't you get here sooner?" queried Longstreth.

Poggin, damn him! We're on the outs again."

"What for?"

"Aw, he needn't have got sore. He's breakin' a new hoss over there at Farconcerned. That kept him, I reckon, more than anythin'."

"Well, close! Get it out of your system, so we can go on to the new job."

"Well it begins back a ways. I don't know how long ago—weeks—a stranger rode into Ord an' got down easy like as if he owned the place. He seemed familiar to me. But I wasn't sure. We looked him over, an' I left, tryin' to place him in my mind."

"What'd he look like?"

"Rangy, powerful man, white hair over his temples, still, hard face, eyes like knives. The way he packed his guns, the way he walked an' stood an' swung his right hand showed me what he was. You can't fool me on the gun sharp. An' he had a grand horse, a big black."

"I've met your man," said Longstreth.

"No!" exclaimed Knell. It was wonderful to hear surprise expressed by this man that did not in the least show it in his strange physiognomy. Knell laughed a short, grim, hollow laugh. "Boss, this here big gent drifts into Ord again an' makes up to Jim Fletcher. Jim, you know, is easy led. He likes men. An', when a posse come along trailin' a blind lead, huntin' the wrong way for the man who held up No. 6, why Jim—he up an' takes this stranger to be the fly road agent an' cottons to him. Got money out of him sure. An' that's what stumps me more. What's this man's game? I happen to know, boss, that he couldn't have held up No. 6."

"How do you know?" demanded Longstreth.

"Because I did the job myself."

A dark and stormy passion clouded the chief's face.

"Damn you, Knell! You're incorrigible. You're unreliable. Another break like that queers you with me. Did you tell Poggin?"

"Yes. That's one reason we fell out. He raved. I thought he was goin' to kill me."

"Why did you tackle such a risky job without help or plan?"

"It offered, that's all. An' it was easy. But it was a mistake. I go the country an' the railroad hollerin' for nothin'. I just couldn't help it. You know what idleness means to one of us. You know also that this very life breeds fatality. It's wrong—that's why. I was born of good parents, an' I know what's right. We're wrong, an' we can't beat the end, that's all. An', for my part, I don't care a damn when that comes."

"Fine, wise talk from you, Knell," said Longstreth, scornfully. "Go on with your story."

"As I said, Jim cottons to the pretender, an' they get chummy. They're together all the time. You can gamble Jim told all he knew an' then some. A little liquor loosens his tongue. Several of the boys rode over from Ord, an' one of them went to Poggin an' says Jim Fletcher has a new man for the gang. Poggin, you know, is always ready for any new man. He says if one doesn't turn out good, he can be shut off easy. He rather liked the way this new pard of Jim's was boosted. Jim an' Poggin always hit it up together. So, until I got on the deal, Jim's pard was already in the gang, without Poggin or you ever seein' him. Then I got to figurin' hard. Just where had I ever seen that chap? As it turned out, I never had seen him, which accounts for my bein' doubtful. I'd never forget any man I'd seen. I dug up a lot of old papers from my kit an' went over them. Letters, pictures, clippin's, an' all that. I guess I had a pretty good notion what I was lookin' for an' who I wanted to make sure of. At last I found it. An' I knew my man. But I didn't spring it on Poggin. Oh, no! I want to have some fun with him when the time comes. He'll be wilder than a trapped wolf. I sent Blossom over to Ord to get word from Jim, an', when he verified all this talk, I sent Blossom again with a message calculated to make Jim hump. Poggin got sore, said he'd wait for Jim, an' I could come over to see you about the new job. He'd meet me in Ord."

Knell had spoken hurriedly and low, now and then with passion. His pale eyes glinted like fire in ice, and now his voice fell to a whisper.

"Who do you think Fletcher's new man is?"

"Who?" demanded Longstreth.

"Buck Duane!"

Down came Longstreth's boots with a crash, then his body grew rigid.

"That Nueces outlaw? That two-shot ace of spades gun thrower who killed Bland, Alloway—?"

"An' Hardin." Knell whispered this last name with more feeling than the apparent circumstance demanded.

"Yes, and Hardin, the best one of the Rim Rock fellows—Buck Duane!"

Longstreth was so ghastly white now that his black mustache seemed outlined against chalk. He eyed his grim lieutenant. They understood each other without more words. It was enough that Buck Duane was there in the Big Bend. Longstreth rose presently and reached for a flask, from which he drank, then offered it to Knell. He waved it aside.

"Knell," began the chief, slowly, as he wiped his lips, "I gathered you have some grudge against this Buck Duane."

"Yes."

"Well, don't be a ——— fool now and do what Poggin or almost any of you men would—don't meet this Buck Duane. I've reason to believe he's a Texas Ranger now."

"The hell you say!" exclaimed Knell.

"Yes. Go to Ord and give Jim Fletcher a hunch. He'll get Poggin, and they will fix even Buck Duane."

"All right. I'll do my best. But if I run into Duane—"

"Don't run into him!" Longstreth's voice fairly rang with the force of its passion and command. He wiped his face, drank again from the flask, sat down, resumed his smoking, and, drawing a paper from his vest pocket, he began to study it.

"Well, I'm glad that's settled," he said, evidently referring to the Duane matter. "Now for the new job. This is October 18. On or before the 25th, there will be a shipment of gold reach the Ranchers' bank of Val Verde. After you return to Ord, give Poggin these orders. Keep the gang quiet. You, Poggin, Kane, Fletcher, Panhandle Smith, and Boldt to be in on the secret and the job. Nobody else. You'll leave Ord on the 23rd, ride across country by the trail till you get within sight of Mercer. It's 100 miles from Bradford to Val Verde—about the same from Ord. Time your travel to get you near Val Verde on the morning of the 26th. You won't have to more than trot your horses. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon, sharp, ride into town and up to the Ranger's bank. Val Verde's a pretty big town. Never been any holdups there. Town feels safe. Make it a clean, fast, daylight job. That's all. Have you got the details?"

Knell did not even ask for the dates again.

"Suppose Poggin or me might be detained?" he asked.

Longstreth bent a dark glance upon his lieutenant.

"You never can tell what 'll come off," continued Knell. "I'll do my best."

"The minute you see Poggin tell him. A job on hand steadies him. And I say again—look to it that nothing happens. Either you or Poggin carry the job through. But I want both of you in it. Break for the hills, and when you get up in the rocks where you can hide your tracks head for Mount Ord. When all's quiet again I'll join you here. That's all. Call in the boys."

SCANDINAVIA CLEANS UP PROFITS ON WA

New Era of Prosperity Almost Sufficient to Offset the Rigors of Neutral.

Stockholm, (by mail).—Now that the wave of war time prosperity sweeping over Scandinavia has reached its crest, in the case of Sweden, with the greatest crops the country has ever known, these northern peoples are forgetting some of the vicissitudes of the small neutral in the midst of the European conflagration, even the rigors of the blockade itself.

So great has been the prosperity of the last two years that it is reported the governments of Denmark, Norway and Sweden already have paid off, or have sufficient funds in the state coffers to pay off, all outstanding foreign indebtedness. So, in a brief space of time, the three small neutrals lying here in the very lap of war, but not of the war, have been transformed from the borrowing to the lending class.

The process of paying off foreign obligations has been materially facilitated by a loss in value of foreign exchange. The German mark has led the international monies downward with a loss of more than 30 per cent. The English pound, the American dollar, the Russian ruble, the continental franc all have been quoted on the Scandinavian bourses at a loss of 10 per cent and upward, so that the foreign buying power of the Scandinavian crown, when buying has been permitted, has greatly advanced. Sweden had borrowed much money from Germany. War time trade with the blockaded Germans has brought enormous profits. This fact, combined with the cheapness of the German mark, has enabled the Swedish debtors to wipe out many million crowns of Teutonic obligations.

When prosperity first came to Scandinavia it was distinctly a prosperity of the monied classes. People with money were quick to take advantage of the war opportunities, and not a few of them have made fortunes by merchandising in foreign money. There were stock booms that made the manipulators of American "war brides" appear as amateurs. But, gradually, the inflow of money affected all industries. Unemployment became unknown and the skilled laborers received high wages. The farmers participated in the prosperity from the beginning, and their share has been steadily increasing, until this year they will divide a crop yield estimated at more than $400,000,000 against a normal of less than half that amount. This remarkable yield is due both to the bountiful crops and the increased values of foodstuffs. The middle classes of the cities, the salaried employes, have as usual been caught between the millstones of high prices and big profits, the salaries having in no case kept pace with the increased cost of living.

Savings banks and commercial banks show deposits far in excess of any expectation. Luxuries are in great demand and of course bring fabulous prices. The summer resorts report a record season. People with home products to sell are naturally not worried by the British blockade for they have discovered it has served the double purpose of lowering the value of foreign exchange and increasing the value of materials and foodstuffs now in the Scandinavian countries. There are plenty of complaints naturally among the importers, who appreciate the wonderful opportunities of prosperity but are not able to bring in foreign goods in sufficient quantity to get what they claim is their share of the good times.

The bountiful Swedish crops mean much to the Germans, for they will get their share of the much needed foodstuffs in compensation for the German coal, chemicals and other exports sent to this country. Coal always has been the chief import of Sweden, and great stores of German coal are being piled up here in Stockholm and at other ports throughout the country. There is a long winter coming and English coal has so increased in cost as to be almost prohibitive. Part of the "compensation" for German coal has been paid in Swedish horses, the export of 10,000 having been approved by the government this year. But the only horses allowed to go to Germany are those considered unfit for Swedish military service. For these somewhat aged animals the price has averaged over $[illegible] thus giving the horse owners a share of the prevailing prosperity.

WILL PROVIDE HOMES FOR BRITISH VETERA

London—An estate of 12,000 acres on which soldiers and sailors can settle after the war has been given to Scotland. The donor is the duke of Sutherland who owns large tracts of fine land in northern Scotland. It is the first practical step in the united kingdom for a movement to provide small farms for veterans of the great war. The estate is situated to the west of the River Navre in the county of Sutherland in the extreme north of Scotland.

In making the announcement the duke said that there would be absolute conveyance to the state, he reserving to himself and his successors only certain fishing rights on lochs and rivers. A provision is that the land is to be settled by soldiers and sailors who have been on foreign service, have enlisted voluntarily and have good records.

Getting at Food Prices.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

"Yes, I guess potatoes are pretty high," but I have mine for the winter," said a bronzed east sider as he leaned on his hoe and looked triumphantly across his patch of a vacant space near the intersection of two car lines. He had just been digging a measure of big, fine potatoes, taken from a comparatively few hills.

"I'll save quite a bit on my grocery bill this year and besides I may have a few bushels to sell. The work has been not only an enjoyable recreation hour of the day, but a real health gainer for me. I am going to garden even more extensively next year, although I raised all the vegetables we needed this year."

How many vacant lots around Milwaukee could be utilized as this man has utilized one! He has not only reduced his own grocery bill, but by adding a unit to the total production of the nation has aided, at least potentially, in reducing the bills of other people. Present high prices for foods are due, students of economics hold, to the demand of a rapidly increasing nation which has outgrown in consumption the yield brought forth by present American methods of agriculture and horticulture.

When all the vacant places about American cities are utilized by city dwellers who need not only the food, but also the exercise, for the production of crops, when the farmers of the United States are really getting from their soil what the possibilities of intensive cultivation and then the food problems of America, at least for this generation, will solve themselves and the fallacy of artificial means of bettering conditions will be demonstrated.

A Test of Friendship.

From the Birmingham Age-Herald.

"So you have been camping with a party of friends?"

"Well," replied the man who tries to speak the truth and nothing but the truth, "we were all amiable enough when we started, but I can't say we wore as many of friends when we got back home."

WOMEN LOSING THEIR FEAR OF TELEGRAMS

Thousands of Night Letters Sent Daily—12,000,000 Sent In One Year.

From the New York Times.

In the present prosperity of the Western Union Telegraph company, reflected in the steady advance of its stock, predicated upon an increase in net income for the last quarter of 80 per cent over the same quarter in 1915, no small part has been played by the avidity with which the American public has seized both business and social communication While there is also a large use of the day letter, its use had not approximated the use of the night letter, which can be sent up to 2 o'clock in the morning from any part of the United States to any other part to be delivered at breakfast time.

Six years ago there were no night letters. Tonight, unless some catastrophe destroys the Western Union system, its lines will carry approximately 40,000 night letters of 50 words or less. There will be about two-thirds that number of day letters sent. Of the 100,000,000 messages a year sent over the Western Union lines, 12,000,000 are night letters, illustrating the remarkable growth of this auxiliary to the telegraph service. About 8,000,000 day letters are sent annually This growth has taken place in the case of the night letters since 1910, and in the case of the day letters since 1912. The increase in the last year has been about 25 per cent, and the company expects a like increase in the ensuing year

12,000,000 Night Letters a Year.

The night letter was started by the Western Union in 1910 because it wished to make some use of its great facilities lying idle at night. It was decided to make the experiment of giving its patrons the opportunity to send 50 words at night for the cost of a 10-word day message, to be delivered at the start of business the next day. The idea took from the start. Business men found they could send to their traveling salesmen at the close of the day's business important information which their men would have at the start of the next day's business quicker than a letter, by days in some cases, and much cheaper than the old rate of messages. Then the man away from home began to send his wife a night letter, which she read at breakfast the next morning Business houses began to send appeals to customers by the night letter Then the Western Union went after the business in earnest and now there are 12,000,000 night letters annually.

There is a lot of psychology about the night letter In the first place the Western Union figured that the business man who sat down in front of his pile of mail in the morning would give his first attention to the telegrams. This belief was communicated to other business men, and the business men found it was good logic Now the use of the night letter has been developed until it is used for urging payment on accounts, used by politicians in the business of getting votes, used to ask contributions to war relief funds, used for placing business orders, and for a myriad other uses. It is a part of the American business system

When it came to the social use of the night letter, it was found that the psychology of the telegram was again a factor It had long been the custom for the woman who received a telegram to handle it with the fire tongs and to pray a few minutes that the news was not so bad as it might be before she opened it For telegrams formerly were used in emergencies socially and the dread and fear of telegrams had to be overcome This has been in a large sense achieved, and now wives and husbands who are separated send tens of thousands of telegrams every year, which wife or husband reads at breakfast and learns how the other half of the family fares.

Women's Fear of Telegrams.

But the old time fear of the telegram has not been altogether overcome by the night letter. Only this month, when the nation wide use of the night letter was suggested in connection with the celebration of Mother's day, on May 14 by which sons and daughters could send words of cheer to the "Old Folks at Home" it was suggested that the mothers would receive a fear along with the telegram which would counteract the words of cheer they would read when they opened it It was at first suggested that special envelopes be used which would bear the words, "This is a Mother's day telegram." This was discarded because it was too expensive. Special Mother's day blanks were furnished, and the rest of the problem was solved by instructing all messenger boys delivering such messages to say to the recipient, "Madam, this is a Mother's day message." Telegraph officials hope even this precaution will not be necessary in a year or two.

Telegraph officials believe that the business and social possibilities of the telegraph have only been tapped. They believe there will be more new uses and greater amplifications of the service. As the night letter was inaugurated in 1910 to supply a use for facilities at night, the day letter was started to use the "valleys" in the service facilities. There are "peaks" in the business at 10 o'clock in the morning, at noon, and at the closing of business around 4 30 o'clock. Between the "peaks" are "valleys." The day letter of 50 words is sent during the "valley" period of business that follows the regular business messages. The charge is one and one-half times that of the night letter.

The night message is sent ahead of the night letter and behind the regular message. It is charged at the 10-word rate, as a regular message is, only at about two-thirds of the rate of the regular message.

Modern Cable Service.

The Western Union has also installed modifications of cable service which correspond closely to modifications in the land wire service. In addition to the fast regular cables there is the deferred half-rate service sent along when the regular messages do not keep the facilities busy. Then there is the cable service letter, based on a 13-word rate, and the week end letter service, which is based on a 25-word basis. These messages are filed at any time up to midnight Saturday night for delivery in any part of the world the following Monday morning. The money transfer service, the marine service, the messenger service, the commercial news service, and the time service are other ramifications by which the Western Union has made its service fit the requirements of business and of the public.

Following is the latest quarterly report of the Western Union, issued April 1:

Total revenues	$14,390,372	$11,568,175
Maintenance repairs and reserved for depreciation	1,862,477	1,776,642
Other operating expenses, including rent of leased lines and taxes	8,870,305	7,618,070
Total expenses	$10,733,782	$ 9,394,712
Balance	$ 3,656,590	$ 2,173,463
Deduct interest on bonded debt	332,963	334.300
Net income	$ 3,323,627	$ 1,839,163

Newcomb Carlton, president of the Western Union, said that the success of the night letter illustrated good business methods.

"We have telegraph service to sell," he said. "It was the same proposition as having any other business commodity to sell. We have put it in attractive packages. That's the explanation."

AIDING TINY WAR VICTIMS

Friends of Childhood Society Seeks Funds For International Work.

Washington, D. C.—With contributions and offers of assistance coming from men and women prominent in the social and educational life of the country, the Friends of Childhood society, an international and nonsectarian organization founded at the outbreak of the European war by Miss Caroline Dawes Appleton, of Paris and New York, niece of the late Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, has launched an active campaign to provide education and homes for helpless little children made destitute and homeless by the war and other sociological conditions.

Miss Appleton, who is founder and president of the society, has opened headquarters in the Union Trust building and is preparing prospectuses to be sent throughout the country asking that food, clothing and money be contributed in order that little children who have been made homeless by the war, may develop into useful citizens.

Several states are already receiving special consideration by the society for the location of experimental farms, and vocational training schools and national and state officials, colleges, clubs, churches, landowners, farmers' societies, relief organizations and others interested in humanity's betterment and the development of the nation's resources, are cooperating with the Friends of Childhood to provide homes for the children. Land has been donated outright for experimental farms and vocational training schools.

Another object of the society is to maintain and administer a philanthropic fund without taint of charity or institutionalism, to be used in educating boys and girls.

Among the sympathizers and contributors to the work of the society are the governors of 10 states, the Attorney General and Mrs. Gregory, Mrs. Marcus A. Hanna, Mrs. Anson Mills, Mrs. Ignacius Grossman, the Rev. Dr. George A. Dougherty, of the Catholic university, Mrs. Charles Boughton Wood, Mrs. Robert N Hinckley, Mrs. Helen Baldwin Sterrett, and Mrs. Rudolph Kauffman, all of Washington.

State governors, financiers, educators and philanthropists are represented in the council of 100, which constitutes the governing board of the society.

GERMANS TO GO AFTER LATIN STATES TRADE

Berlin, (by mail).—That German business men mean to make a determined effort to recover lost ground in Latin-American markets after the war is over, is the conclusion that may be drawn from rapid growth of the German Economic Association for South and Central America. This organization, which was only formed on September 1, 1915, has already about 1,200 members, consisting for the most part of German business firms interested in the South and Central American trade.

In an interview with a correspondent of the Associated Press the manager of the Berlin head office of the Association said that it is maintaining but a quiescent existence now in view of the fact that no business correspondence of Germans with the countries in question is possible. The society, however, has representatives, usually German business men, in all centers of trade in those countries; and nearly all of them have stayed where they were and managed, according to last accounts, to keep their businesses going in some way. The services of these men will be drawn upon again immediately after the war closes to give advice as to the best ways and means for restoring German trade.

That this fight to regain lost ground will not be an easy one is evident to all German business men. "There are different views among us," said the manager of the association, "as to our prospects for recovering this lost trade. Our excellent organization with agents everywhere, who are thoroughly well equipped for giving us quick and accurate business reports, will be strongly in our favor. This, together with the fact that certain classes of German goods held a preferred position in the South and Central American markets before the war, make not a few of our people inclined to believe that we shall recover ground rapidly.

"On the other hand, we recognize the fact that new difficulties have arisen during the war. The Americans have gone in and have been doing excellent and effective work in winning South American trade, have planted branch banks, and have greatly developed transportation facilities. This is one difficulty which we by no means underrate. Another is found in the fact that railways are in some places owned or controlled by English or French capital, and wherever this is the case the roads will probably make discriminations against German goods that would prevent their shipment into interior markets in competition with British and French goods. British capital in other forms also enpoys powerful advantages in South America, and we are calculating that those advantages will be used against us to a much greater degree than before the war. Altogether, therefore, we see that the fight for the South American markets will be a difficult one for us, it will call for all our ability in organization, and in the manufacture and marketing of goods—all the courage that we can bring to our help.

BASEBALL EDITOR IS HURT

Makes Unkind Comment on Question Asked by Sweet Girl Viewing National Game.

Gilligan, the Demon Swatter, stepped up to the plate.

It was the last half of the ninth inning with the score tied and two men out.

Gilligan swung at the first ball and missed.

The next one was a ball, and the next and the next.

The umpire called the next one a strike, though 20,000 fans disagreed with him.

"This one tells the tale," said everybody to his next neighbor.

Gilligan gripped his bat firmly, dug his spikes into the ground and swung with all his might.

Crack! The ball sped as if shot out of a cannon, far over the center field fence, while the Demon trotted round the bases amid the plaudits of the multitude.

When the excitement had subsided a bit, a girl—Oh, she was a beautiful girl—you ought to've seen her—well, anyhow, this girl touched her escort timidly on the arm and asked in dulcet tones:

"Does the batter have to pay for the ball when he loses it over the fence like that?"

Ideal Wife.

Miss Marion Pomeroy Smith, the Cape Cod heiress who has just won a legal contest for the control of her huge fortune, believes in women's rights.

"There will be fewer divorces," she said to a reporter, "when men treat women as their equals."

"'Do you know the kind of wife my ideal is?' a married man once said to me.

"'Of course, I do said I. 'Your ideal wife is the kind that's titckled to death over a birthday present of a bag of flour.'"

Didn't See It.

An excitable Irishman riding in an open car signaled the conductor to stop at the corner. He jumped off anyway, and found himself landed in an excavation.

Scrambling out, he rushed up to a policeman.

"Did you see that?" he asked indignantly.

"I did," said the policeman. "It was your own fault."

"I'm not asking whose fault it was, I'm asking you did you see that."

"I did not," said the policeman, turning his back

Not Coffee.

"What's the matter, Bill, you look tired this morning?"

"I didn't get any sleep last night."

"Too much coffee?"

"Oh, no, the baby doesn't drink coffee."

COULD NOT CORNER MIKE

Mr. Flaherty Ready With Explanation for Failure to Keep Awake in Church.

One Saturday evening Mrs. Flaherty said to her husband, who is a successful contractor: "Mike, Father Burke is to preach to morrow at St. Patrick's church, and you've often told me you wanted to hear him."

"Yes, Jane, I do want to hear him. They say he's a fine speaker."

'But, for pity's sake, Mike, if you do come with me, keep awake! You know you're always falling asleep during the sermons."

"I'll do my best, Jane."

Next day, when Father Burke began to preach, Mike watched him for five minutes, and thne dropped off to sleep. When they were back home Jane gave Mike a tongue lashing.

"Well, Jane," said Mike in self-defense, "it's just this way. When I engage a new hand I watch him to see if he's on the job. As soon as I find he's efficient and hard-working I don't bother about him any more. Now, as soon as Father Burke began I saw he was right on to his job, and so I didn't worry about him. And then, in spite of myself I let go."—Everybody's Magazine.

An Improvement.

Mrs. Josiah Cowles, the new president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs, was talking in New York about dress.

"Women, once they get interested in our movement," she said, "dress more sensibly. They give less thought to dress. I may claim, in fact—"

Mrs. Cowles smiled.

"I may claim, in fact," she ended, "that these women start making their own clothes and stop picking their friends' clothes to pieces."

The Expense.

"I am in favor of peace at any price."

"Yes," replied the pessimist; "but suppose you wake up some morning and find you haven't got the price?"

All Parents Know That.

Every bright boy, at the age of four, becomes an animated interrogation point."

Had Learned His Lesson.

After one of the reservations had been opened, the white community was annoyed by the promiscuous swearing of the noble red man, numbers of whom seemed quite unaware of the strength of their recently acquired vocabulary. This condition became so intolerable that several arrests were made and jail sentences imposed. It was not long before the native sons of America realized that swearing in public was a very bad business, and they quit. One of these Indians was a witness in a case of some importance in the local justice court, and had testified to certain facts which greatly exasperated counsel for defense. With his hand upraised the lawyer impressively thundered: "Now, Nick, will you swear—" "No!" shouted the Indian. "Me no swear! Swear talk no good here—gettum jail!"

The Anticlimax.

The revival meeting was tense in its interest, and the evangelist was waxing eloquent. He arraigned the laxness of the church people and present-day evils in general, and everyone was too absorbed to notice the growing uneasiness of two lads on the front seat.

With the question, "What's the matter?" pronounced in tones of thunder, the preacher reached his climax.

The two boys had risen and were starting for the door. One of them hearing the preacher's question, wheeled and said: "Aw, I got the nosebleed."—The Christian Herald.

No Joke.

"I need a lot of new things this fall," began Mrs. Wife. "We have to get a new rug for the dining room and some curtains for the living room. We need some new dishes, too. And besides, I haven't a thing to wear. I've got to get a new evening dress and a street dress, and a couple of new hats, and I haven't a pair of shoes to my name, and—"

It isn't any joke—that's all.

Conspicuous Example.

"What's your idea of an optimist?"

"A professional prizefighter telling what he is going to do to the other fellow."

The public's neck is always exposed.

NOTICE!

Hard luck seems to be the lot of Contractor Werner, who is employed in the construction of the Commercial State Bank building. On Friday about 11 o'clock a. m., while workmen were employed in hoisting the large Bedford rock for use on the cornice work at the top of the structure, the rock at the southeast corner of the building, which was being lowered in place, loosened the rocks to the west of it which gave way and carried with it many tons of rock extending along the south side of the top almost to the west end of the building. A row of large rock lay on the sidewalk next to the building in position to be hoisted to the top and placed. On this the rock fell, breaking and smashing into fine parts numerous pieces. Nobody was hurt and how the accident happened does not seem real clear to any of the workmen. It will cause a delay of a couple of weeks until new rock can be shipped from the quarry in Indiana.—Britt News.

The Register & Leader are sure some straddlers when they can stretch their politics like they are doing in the present campaign They are sure a consistent bunch, we do not think. They are supporting Hughes, Republican for president, and Meredith, Democratic for Governor. That is sure consistency Harding was nominated for Governor on the Republican ticket in the June primary by one of the largest majorities ever accorded a candidate, while the voters of Iowa did not have any voice in the nomination of Hughges. But that is easy to see through for if you will go back a few years in Iowa politics you will find that the Meredith-Register & Leader bunch have been working hand in hand and trying to dictate Iowa politics for the past eight years. They have hoodwinked some of the methodists of the state into believing that if Harding is elected our next Governor that he will bring the saloons back into Iowa and point back to Harding's record while he was legislator. Where is Meredith's record? The voters of Iowa do not even know if he is a Democrat as far as past history is concerned. One thing is certain that he supported Holden, a republican candidate for Governor a few years ago. The Republicans of Iowa nominated Harding for Governor in the June primary and we do not believe that they will let a certain political gang of this state dictate to them in the November election. Harding should, and we believe will, receive the Republican support.

Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

REPORT SHOWS WHAT'S WHAT

Cow Test Statistics Show Value of work Done in Associations.

A monthly report of what's doing in a number of Iowa Cow Testing Associations has been published that speaks for itself

In the 17 associations reporting there was a total of more than 5300 cows on test during August. Eighty-seven of these made 40 pounds or more fat, and ten 50 pounds or more. The fat averages of the ten high cows of the various associations ranged from 29 to 47.7 pounds. Milk production averaged from 822 to 1215 pounds Heading the list of high cows is Jessie Fobes Besse Homestead, the cow bought recently by the Cass Farm at Sumner for $4600, which produced 81 lbs of fat.

Antone Christiansen, tester for the Pioneer Testing Association which heads the list, reports that 16 new silos have been built since the last report and states that "all the members of the Pioneer association have from one to four silos and all have pure-bred sires." Eight more Pioneer herds are headed by pure-bred bulls; more than 50 cows went to the butcher because they were not bringing a profit and 20 new cows bought by the members

It is estimated that 10,000 persons saw the exhibit at the State Fair of the Kossuth county testing association and went away with the conviction that a cow testing association is valuable to the man milking cows regardless of the breed he keeps.

FALLS FROM TRAIN

Unknown Man Falls From Train at Miller and Is Seriously Injured

A party reported to be John Runtzel of Crystal Lake stepped off backwards from the afternoon passenger at Miller, Wednesday, and fell in such a manner as to break his back and receive various other injuries. He was taken on the evening passenger to the hospital at Iowa Falls and has been accorded the best of treatment by the railway officials, although but slight hope is offered for his recovery.

We have not been able to learn for sure if Mr. Runtzel is the party injured or not but description and circumstances point him out to be the unfortunate party. Mr. Runtzel is well known by our older citizens having lived here for a number of years in the early days.

BIRTH OF A NATION

To Play in Garner, Matinee and Night, Monday, October 9, With Big Symphony Orchestra

In each of the large cities where D W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" which will soon be seen at the Garner Opera House was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box offices. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theatre, these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared "Oh, there won't be any advance sale!" said the box office attendant wearily when asked about an engagement, It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop, Boston's Trement Street looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the curb or even to the next street. The phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season. It means of course that the high-class theatre is not moribund, Only the touch of David W. Griffith's master wizardry has been required to infuse it with life.

BOOZE ISSUE A MYTH

If the dry voters of Iowa believe that there is not anything to the Governorship position outside of the saloon question why not vote the ticket they should support—the Prohibition? The Democratic platform for a number of years past at least, has always been "wet." If you are a conscientious prohibitionist vote your own ticket. Meridth is not a prohibition worker by any means, if he were, he surely would not have supported Hamilton, the Democratic "wet" candidate for Governor two years ago. The voters that are letting the Register & Leader hoodwink them into voting for Meridith on the strength that he is a "dry" supporter, we believe are being badly misled. The "wet" and "dry" issue is dead in Iowa right now. The saloons are gone and neither Harding or Meridith can bring them back. The senate and house is where the booze legislation will be enacted and as long as we elect men like Rule and Wichman we can feel sure that there will not be any wet legislation as far as they are concerned.

KLEMME, IOWA

By a coincidence the death of Sir Victor Horsley occurred the day following that of Metchnikoff, whose momentous discovery that the white corpuscles had the power to destroy certain disease producing microbes, profoundly influenced the great surgeon neurologist's views on total abstinence Experiments carried out after Metchnikoff's discovery convinced Sir Victor that the consumption of alcohol "even in tiny quantities lowered the body's resistance to disease The good phagocytes, whose duty it is to play the sentinel and destroy noxious bacilli, became temporarily paralyzed under the influence of a very small amount of alcohol and this, in the opinion of Sir Victor Horsley, sufficiently explained much chronic ill health and infectious disease

In reports and records of the war there are few words more frequently met with than salient. Yet as a noun it is quite modern, and is only to be found in the most modern dictionaries, but as an adjective it was in se centuries ago in its original sense of 'leaping" Now that which leaps is prominent, and so this became the secondary meaning Then as that which projects is also prominent, a projecting angle was called a salient angle and the expression passed into use by military authorities. Short as it is however, they found it too long, and dropping the angle, gave us the new term with which we are all familiar

The Turks' Arabian campaign is being fought with the aid of a railway that is unusual. It is a railway without shareholders, for its capital was raised by means of subscriptions given by pious Mohammedans. The sultan gave a personal offering of £50,000, and his good example was followed by the Turkish government, which levied a toll of one-tenth of a month's pay on every civil service official, and on the whole army from general to private. This line is officially the "Hedjaz railway," colloquially the "Hajj railway," and is actually the "Pilgrimage line."

William R. Gardener, who has a cottage on the west shore of Pontoosuc lake, in the Berkshires, has been noticing khat he termed moving stars in the northeastern heavens. "These stars," he had said, "appeared quite high in the sky and slowly descended. They disappeared and then appeared again lower down in the sky" Recently a powerful telescope was brought into play and the mystery was solved. The lights were found to be those on automobiles coming down the Rockwell road from the summit of Greylock mountain

The following appeared in a Pittsfield, Mass., church calendar recently "The church is not a refrigerator for preserving perishable piety It is a dynamo for charging human wills. The object of the church is not to tell how to dodge difficulties, but to furnish strength and courage to meet and master them The business of the church is not to furnish hammocks for the lazy It is rather to offer well-fitting yokes for drawing life's loads. The man who does not attend any church virtually votes to do away with all churches"

PROHIBS FILE TICKET ON LAST LEGAL DATE

Oren D. Ellett of Marshalltown Designated For Governor—Six State Tickets.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 30.—The prohibition party late yesterday afternoon filed petitions in the office of W. S. Allen, secretary of state, placing candidates in nomination for state offices.

Yesterday was the final day for filing nomination petitions. When the filing closed, six political parties had full state tickets in the field. The parties are: Republican, democratic, progressive, socialist, socialist labor and prohibition.

The ballot at the November election will be seven columns wide in some counties and eight columns wide in others. The tickets of the six political parties, and the nonpartisan judiciary ticket will appear on the ballot in every county—making a seven column ballot. In counties where there are candidates running on the independent ticket, the ballot will provide one extra column for the independents

The candidates nominated yesterday by the prohibition party are:

Governor—Oren D. Ellett, Marshalltown.

Lieutenant Governor—W. O Taurenther, Waterloo.

Secretary of State—Carl S. Lewis, Marshalltown

Treasurer of State—M. D. Evans, DeWirt.

Auditor of State—Morris Bailey, Des Moines.

Railroad Commission—M. Kurtzweil, Altoona

Electors at Large—Kendrick W. Brown, Ames, and Charles H. Gordon, Des Moines.

LAND COMPANY SHOWS ITS AFFAIRS IN BAD WAY

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 30.—The city of Des Moines is accused of placing an arbitrary value of $212,200 on "a scrap of paper" in an assessment objection filed in district court yesterday afternoon by the Carbondale Land company.

In the objection the company claims that all that remains of the corporation which incorporated July 18, 1895, is the old charter, all the stocks and other assets having been disposed of about two years ago.

The company asserts that the city assessed $212,200 against capital stock which does not exist.

Does anyone want stock in this company? Here is what is says about itself in the document filed yesterday afternoon

It does not pay any dividends.

All the property it owns is a lot in Hoxie's addition and it went in debt for the full amount of the purchase price.

The capital stock of the company has no real value after the actual value of this lot is deducted

The expense of running this property is greater than the income from renting it.

The company has an outstanding debt of $31 000

All there is to show for the $212,200 worth of stock which the city assessor entered in his books is the paper on which the charter is printed.

SOME HEATED DISCUSSIONS AT INDIAN CONVENTION

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Sept. 30.—At the second day's session of the Society of American Indians here, an Apache challenged an Arapahoe to combat during a clash over a resolution proposing the abolition of the federal Indian bureau.

Dr. Chas. L. Montesuma, an Apache, in the course of an impassioned speech attacking the Indian bureau as inefficient, directed his remarks at Dr. Sherman Coolidge, of Colorado, an Arapahoe Indian, president of the society, and a former member of the federal bureau.

"I am an Apache," he shouted, "and you are an Arapahoe. I can lick you. My tribe has licked your tribe before."

"I'm from Missouri," shouted Dr Coolidge, and the laughter that followed broke the tension.

Both sessions of the conference were heated. The treatment accorded the Chippewa Indians by the government presented an opportunity for severe criticism and heated defense of the work of the Indian bureau.

RICH IOWA WIDOWER FLEECED OF $10,000

Blackmailers Get Him In Compromising Position and He Pays Hush Money.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—Investigation of a new blackmail plot, involving a rich Iowan who is alleged to have been fleeced out of $10,000, was started by federal officials today.

The method of extortion was declared to be the same as was employed by the so called $1,000,000 blackmailing syndicate, agents of the federal department of justice said. Two young women and a Chicago attorney are involved. Neither their names nor the name of the Iowa victim will be made public until arrests are made.

The Iowa merchant, who is a widower, is said to have been surprised in a compromising situation, and his arrest by a man posing as a government agent followed. Pleadings of his companion led to the suggestion, federal officials said, that the affair might be adjusted by the payment of money. The Iowan paid.

SUITS STARTED TO BREAK TWO WILLS IN IDA COUNTY

Ida Grove, Ia., Sept. 27.—Law suits were started yesterday to prevent the probating of wills administering two large estates.

In the estate of the late Edwin Benedict, a pioneer of Ida county, who left an estate worth $500,000, a granddaughter, Mrs. Earl C. Smith, has commenced a contest of the will, claiming that she has been cut out of the share of the state which should have come into the estate of her own father, deceased. The granddaughter made her home with her grandfather from childhood and always expected to get at least one-half of her father's share. She has another sister surviving.

Mrs. W. H. Shirk, a resident of Ida Grove and only daughter of the late William O'Meara, of this city, by a first marriage, started action objecting to the probating of her father's will. Mrs. Shirk alleges that undue influence was used by children of her father's second marriage, and that at the time the will was made he was mentally incapable of constructing or devising a will. Mr. O'Meara had been a resident of Ida county for upwards of 30 years, and left an estate in reality estimated to be worth $150,000

Then came the order of expulsion.

BOYS TAKE CANOE TO JOIN FATHER IN FLORIDA

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Sept. 27.—In an effort to join their father in Florida, from whom they had been separated because of domestic difficulties, Joe Alvord and his younger brothers, Lloyd and Clyde—three little chaps from Waterloo, Ia—left their home in a canoe five days ago, planning to make the entire journey by water. They were arrested here on warrents charging them with having stolen the boat.

With them they carried a well thumbed map of their proposed route, via the Mississippi river and the gulf of Mexico. They had no food nor money, but lived on food they begged from farmers along the river banks.

The little boys, the youngest of whom was 7, were broken hearted when they learned that they had to abandon their trip. Their mother lives in Waterloo and they will be returned to her.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 27.—Indications that there is to be a shakeup in certain quarters of the police department, as the result of disclosures made in letters confiscated in the recent raids made by Tom Watters, assistant city solicitor, on offices suspected of acting as agents for big liquor concerns outside the state, came in a statement made by Mayor John MacVicar last night.

"Some of the letters seized by the city solicitor's department reflected on some of the employes of the department, employes of the former administration," said the mayor.

"What action will be taken?" the mayor was asked.

"That, I cannot say," was the reply

WARRANTS ISSUED FOR INSURANCE SWINDLERS

Plea of Guilty By Woman Member of Gang Did Not Check Investigation.

Creston, Ia., Sept. 28.—The operations of a large gang of insurance swindlers, said to have been working in the middle west for the last nine years, are about to be brought to light by the arrest of a number of its members.

Recently Mrs. Lillie Lewis, of Sewall, Ia., an alleged member of the band, pleaded guilty in United States court to conspiracy and was sentenced to two years imprisonment. This, it is said was to protect the rest of the gang by preventing a trial of the case. Since then more evidence has been obtained and indictments have been returned against another woman and two men Their names have not yet been made public.

One means of swindling insurance companies often used, was the presentation of the carcass of a worthless horse with the claim that it was a valuable one which had been insured for a large amount and had been struck by lightning

ONE LISTED "MIKE" SAVED FROM GRAFTERS BY HIS WIFE

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 28 —James Risden, state special agent, left last evening over the Great Western for Waterloo, in charge of H. Ward and John Brown, who were arrested in Des Moines Saturday night charged with operating the Des Moines-Waterloo race swindle by which John G. Huglin, 1834 Mondamin avenue, was relieved of $10 000 They will be given a hearing in the Black Hawk county courts.

Ward and Brown were taken to the state house yesterday afternoon at their request, for an interview with Atty. Gen George Cosson, who is conducting the investigation of the swindle by which Iowans lost more than $100,000 in the last year. Both men declared they had never been in Waterloo and that they could not have worked the Des Moines-Waterloo swindle.

The special agents are at work lining up other witnesses. One other Des Moines man who lost $13,000 through the swindle and recovered it through the work of his friends, probably will aid the state by giving his testimony. Another Des Moines man who took his wife with him when the Des Moines-Davenport swindle is alleged to have been staged by the same crowd of swindlers, is also in line to give testimony The presence of the latter's wife prevented the intended victim from being swindled.

Attorney General Cosson is working hard on this case. He has met with considerable difficulty owing to the unwillingness of the persons swindled to give testimony

SOME IOWA BANKS MAKE ILLEGAL TAX DEDUCTIONS.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 28.—Discovery that some of the banks of Iowa are escaping taxation by making illegal deductions from the amounts submitted to the assessor for taxation was made by J F Wall, head of the county accounting department of the state.

In a statement given out yesterday he says that record of $30,000 in taxes which banks did not pay has been found in the last few months. Of this amount about $20,000 has been collected through the efforts of the state department

In one county where there were 20 banks, Mr Wall found that 18 of them had been paying every cent of tax required The other two had not These two banks, the state official said owed the county $7,500 in unpaid taxes which the department now is endeavoring to collect

Some of the ways the banks in question used to dodge taxes were: Deduct government bonds from the capital stock, deduct estimated amount of taxes for the year, deduct from assets certain securities, carry paper which is credited as good by bank examiners yet declared worthless for assessment purposes.

In several counties it was discovered that several banks had listed bank stock for assessment as moneys and credits. In this classification the stock was taxed at a flat rate of 5 mills, instead of the regular tax rate of the city and county in which the institutions were located.

UNION MEN REFUSE TO ADMIT DEFEAT

Hugh Frayne, chairman of the joint labor conference committee, which has directed the attempt to call out all the trade unionists explained the postponement of further action by saying that many of the unions had not had time to consider the strike call.

CARRANZA CITES LAW TO CONFISCATE MINES

Title Shown to Be Conditional Upon Payment of Imposts to Government.

El Paso, Tex., Sept. 30.—"Private ownership of mineral property in Mexico is in fact nothing more than a species of rent of the subsoil for which the holder has to pay the nation, the true proprietor of the subsoil."

This extract from a public statement by Mexico's secretary of finance, received here today by the Mexican consulate, presents the official attitude of the Carranza government toward owners of Mexican mines, whether Mexicans or foreigners. The statement is issued in defense of Carranza's decree of May 1, of this year, which under penalty of confiscation lays imposts and working conditions on the mines that have caused foreign owners to make strong representations to their home governments. These complaints have been carried to New London, where the joint commission is sitting. The statement makes clear that the Carranza government will not consider special pleas to escape the effects of the decree and adds

"According to article 11 of the mineral land law of November 25, 1909, now in force, mineral land is obtained from the nation, the real proprietor, through deeds issued by the secretary of the interior The said title does not grant an absolute right, but a limited proprietorship revertible to the state."

The theory of the law according to the statement, is that title is conditional on the payment of imposts, or merely "grants of privilege to exploit land which primarily belongs to the nation" It is issued on no other understanding Annullment of titles is excused as the only efficacious way of dealing with owners who fail to comply with the decree or to operate their holdings

It is pointed out that a law confiscating mines for nonpayment of imposts was passed in Mexico as far back as 1892, a fact held to prove the constitutionality of Carranza's present decree

Rich Iowan Proved Easy Money When Trapped in Room of Girl

One "Lure" of Blackmail Gang Locked Him In With Confederate When She Went to Admit Alleged Federal Agents —Abandoned Wife Tipped Off Plot.

Chicago, Sept 30.—The details of a scheme whereby a wealthy Iowan, referred to as a "leading citizen of his community," was compelled to pay $15,000 to a band of so called Mann act blackmailers, became known here today when H G Clabaugh, investigator for the department of justice, prepared to hold a conference with C E. Wheeler and W N Jay, attorneys for the Iowa victim, and one of the two girls alleged to have been the "lures" in this case

The Iowan, it is said, was introduced to one of the "lures" by a client in his home town, who said she was the girl's aunt Later he came to Chicago alone and visited the apartment at which the girl he had met in Iowa lived with another girl While the girls were showing him through the flat, the bell rang, and, in going to answer it, one of the girls locked the Iowan and the other girl in a bed room.

The visitors, two men, proclaimed themselves a lawyer and detective, respectively, and accused the Iowan of violating the Mann act. Under the combined pressure of the girls and the two men, the former pleading that he save them from shame and threatened publicity, the Iowan paid the men $500 on the spot.

Followed to his home town and again threatened with "exposure," the victim paid the gang $4,500 more in cash and $10,000 in notes.

To celebrate their success, the "lures" and their accomplices took a trip to California and, upon their return, were betrayed to federal authorities by the abandoned wife of one of the men.

Buda Godman, the alleged "lure" in a similar case in which a Chicago business man was mulcted of $15,000 following a trip with her to New York, spent last night in jail, in lieu of $5,000 bonds.

BANKERS TAKE RAP AT STRIKE SETTLEMENT

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 29.—Agricultural development of the United States, designed to inculcate ideas of crop diversification, road construction, county farm demonstration work and the upbuilding of rural communities, was discussed at the annual convention here today of the American Bankers' association.

Speakers urged the banker visitors to aid in the better farming campaign and plans were made to continue the work in which the association's agricultural commission has been engaged for five years.

"Agricultural development means not only more profits for the farmer, the banker and the businessman," B. F. Harris, of Champaign, Ill., said. "It means as well arousing and inspiring a militant citizenship."

The speaker was resigning the chairmanship of the agricultural commission and concluded his talk on militant citizenship with an attack on the methods by which the recent threatened railroad strike was averted. The actions of congress and President Wilson were characterized as an appalling cowardice.

TWO GERMAN VESSELS MOVED FROM NORFOLK

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 29.—The interned German auxiliary cruisers Kron Prinz Wilhelm and Prinz Eitel Friederich left the Norfolk navy yard early today for Philadelphia, where they are to be laid up for the remainder of the war. A squadron of American battleships waited off the Virginia capes to escort the cruisers up the coast and serve the double purpose of preventing their escape and guarding against interference by allied warships.

The Prinz Eitel Friederich went out under her own steam while five tugs towed the Kron Prinz Wilhelm.

"War Is Hell."

From the Houston Post.

The famous and equally infamous general who originated that remark did not know just how awful war could be.

The soldiers of the north and the south had no conception of the meaning of the words "war" and "hell."

But the soldier fighting in Europe today knows. And the nightmare that he is living through will remain in his mind to blight the coming children of Europe even "to the third and fourth generation."

Maximilian Harden in a recent article on the war, says: "What we are living through is so inexpressibly atrocious that no dream of Satan has ever evoked anything comparable with it. Things are happening billions of times more horrible than all the murders committed since the days of Cain and all the savagery of the naked Huns

FRENCH AERONAUT BAGS THREE FOES

Famous Flyer Completes Task In Two and Half Minutes, Then Survives 10,000 Feet Drop.

Paris, Sept. 30.—Three German aeroplanes brought down in two minutes and 30 second by a stop watch is the latest exploit of Second Lieut. Georges Guynemer. Incidentally Lieutenant Guynemer, who is known as "King of the Air," fell 10,000 feet, but escaped unhurt.

Guynemer went to the assistance of a comrade who was hard pressed by five German machines. He brought down two of them within 30 seconds and then, rising, overtook a third which he shot down two minutes later. He was looking for the remaining two German machines when a shell burst beneath him and stripped the left wing of his aeroplane of every stitch of its covering. It plunged giddily earthward.

"I gave myself up for lost," he said, "but after falling 5,000 feet I thought I would struggle all the same. The wind blew me over our lines and like a flash I had a picture of my funeral and all my good friends following the coffin. I continued to fall and the levers would not budge. In vain I pushed and pulled to right and left. I made a last desperate effort, all to no purpose, and then I saw the field toward which I was dashing down. Suddenly something happened and my speed diminished. Then there was a resounding crash and a violent shock. When I recovered my wits, I was in the midst of the fragments of my machine and practically uninjured. How am I still alive, I asked myself. I believe it was the straps which held me to my seat which saved me."

On September 16, Lieutenant Guynemer was credited with his 16th enemy aeroplane. A week later he was reported to have brought down his 17th and 18th.

Tell Tale Rope About Neck Of Woman Leads to Arrests

Attempt to Conceal Murder By Burning House Fails When Corpse Falls Into Pool of Water—Husband of Victim Held Pending Solution of Mystery.

Mountain View, N. H., Sept. 30.—Mrs. Frederick L. Small, wife of a Boston real estate broker, who was burned in a fire which destroyed the small summer home at Lake Ossipee last night, was murdered, it was discovered today when her body was taken from the ruins. She had been beaten over the head and strangled by a rope tied around her neck.

The police believe the fire was set to cover the crime. By a mere chance, however, this failed. The body dropped into the basement and the head and neck lodged in a pool of water. The rope which had been drawn twice around the neck was preserved.

Mr. Small, who had left his cottage on a business trip to Boston six hours before the fire was discovered, hurried back today to assist the police in their investigation. He said his wife was alone in the cottage when he departed.

Later on his own authority Sheriff Chandler placed Small under arrest and held him at a local hotel pending instructions from the county solicitor.

In 1909 Small sued A. H. Soden, widely known as one of the three owners of the Boston National league baseball club, for $500,000 for alienation of Mrs. Small's affections. He was awarded $10,000.

BORDER IS CROSSED BY ARMED MEXICANS

Small Carranza Command Flees Across Rio Grande When Discovered.

Washington, Sept. 30.—General Funston advised the war department today that a band of 30 armed Mexicans crossed into American territory yesterday near Yaleta, Tex., but retreated across the Rio Grande immediately their presence was discovered. The Mexicans belonged to the command of Colonel Revel, a Carranza officer, who with other de facto officials has assured General Bell that the incident will not be repeated. General Funston's report follows:

"Yesterday about noon a small patrol of Eighth cavalry from Yaleta discovered about 30 armed Mexicans on the north side of the Rio Grande about two miles west of Yaleta toward El Paso. All the Mexicans were dismounted and concealed in the brush except one who had a burro and was apparently on guard. The Mexicans all retreated across the river and the mounted man left so hurriedly that he left his mount with a Mauser carbine in the boot. This carbine, which has a gun sling marked "K, Tenth Cavalry," is now in our possession. No shots were fired by either side. These men belonged to the command of Colonel Revel, a Carranza officer. This matter was at once taken up with the Juarez authorities and they have promised there shall be no repetition of this affair. Nothing was disturbed on this side, and the reasons for the crossing are not known."

Troop K, Tenth cavalry, was the command attacked by Carranza troops at Carrizal.

ALL PARTS OF EMPIRE CONTRIBUTE TO ORPHANS

London—Officials of the treasury have been surprised by the steady inflow of gifts from all parts of the empire and from former Britishers in neutral countries in the form of cash towards meeting the expenses of the war. The donors range from men and women to small boys and girls, the former sending sums mounting up as high as 1,000 pounds and the latter remitting the contents of their savings banks. A total of many thousands of pounds has been sent. Sums ranging from a shilling to 1,000 pounds are acknowledged with the same promptness and politeness by the treasury.

Many gifts are accompanied with notes explaining that they are designed as substitutes for personal service at the front, and one man in Canada explains that a sum of 200 pounds is intended as payment for schooling obtained in England a half century ago.

A firm in Sandakan, British North Borneo, sent 500 pounds, explaining that as that territory contributes nothing towards the finances of the empire while enjoying all benefits of British protection, they wished to be allowed to discharge a portion of their obligation in this war. A Britisher writes from St. Louis in the same tone with a contribution of 100 pounds.

The municipality of Matsqui, British Columbia, sends 52 pounds. The natives employed at Fanning Island, who live in the Gilbert Islands, have sent two gifts.

A Baptist minister in Ontario sends $5. From Summit, N. J., an American citizen sends a substantial check made payable to the British empire. A husband and wife send from China a check in four figures. From Saskatchewan an old man accompanies a check for 20 pounds with the explanation that it is to help beat the kaiser.

A little girl who writes that she is 7 and has two uncles fighting, sends from an island a shilling from her savings bank. There are many gifts from officers on active service, some sending a year's pay. Among gifts from retired officers, one writes from a far country to say that he desires to aid the war fund because, after having been made deaf from gunfire as a gunner officer, he had been refused active service now on account of his lack of hearing. A working man, sending 20 pounds in an anonymous letter, explains that he never believed in war loans as long as gifts would be accepted.

Many of the gifts are sent in the form of monthly donations, one man in Asia having instructed his bankers to remit a certain sum to the treasury monthly until the end of the war. Among anonymous contributions are those for 5,000 and 4,050 pounds respectively, among the few mentioned. The women are contributing generously, one sending a check for 100 pounds and declining exchequer bonds in exchange. A number of handsome, even princely gifts, from India are acknowledged by almost every mail.

IRON AND STEEL RATE RAISE IS SUSPENDED

Washington, Sept. 29.—Tariffs of railroads in the middle west and east proposing increases of 7 and 8 cents per 100 pounds on iron and steel articles from Chicago, Pittsburgh and other points to the Atlantic seaboard and gulf ports for export, were suspended today by the Interstate Commerce commission until January 29, pending investigation.

The suspended tariffs would affect a large volume of the shipments to European belligerents.

The proposed increases have been fought by shippers who contended they were without justification and an attempt by the carriers to take some of the profits of the iron and steel business. One company alleged that its loss under standing contracts, if the advances became effective, would be $100,000.

Took a Hand In the Game.

From the Boston Transcript.

A number of British recruits at Sandhurst thought they would have a little fun with the drill sergeant. They made their plan and on the following morning when the sergeant gave the order, "Number off from the right," they did so in this manner: "One, two, three, four five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, knave, queen, king."

Quick as a flash the sergeant came back. "All court cards fall out and report to the major."

GREEK SHIP STOLEN BY BOARDING PARTY

Warship Hydra Captured and Towed Away as Whole Fleet Stands By.

Pierus, Wednesday, Sept. 27, (via London, Sept. 29.)—The defection to the revolutionists of the Greek warship Hydra in the small hours of this morning has caused excitement in this Greek port. The Hydra anchored under the guns of the arsenal last night was silently boarded at 3 o'clock this morning by a party of men in civilian dress. The loyalist officers in command was aroused from his bunk and with pistols at his head was forced with other loyalist officers to embark. The commander readily surrendered to the boarders.

Two tugs were attached by two ropes to the ship and as noiselessly as possible she slipped her anchor chains and was drawn by the tugs from the company of the other Greek men of war. The tugs towed her to Salamis bay, where the allied warships are stationed.

PROPOSE COMMISSION FOR STUDY OF JAPAN

New York, Sept. 29.—The appointment by the president or congress of a commission to study the relations of America with Japan and China is advocated by a group of 40 American missionaries from China and Japan as the result of a conference held here. The meeting was arranged by the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship, through the churches, and by the Federal Council of Churches. It was voted also, according to an announcement today, to ask the United States government to invite the governments of China and Japan to appoint similar commissions to confer with the proposed American commissioners.

Moose Jaw, Sask., Sept. 29.—Robbers late last night entered the village of Caron, 18 miles west of here, cut all the telegraph and telephone wires into the town, overpowered the watchman at the bank of Hamilton, blew the safe and escaped with $9,000, according to reports brought here. No trace of the four robbers had been found today.

COMMERCIAL HARMONY

Bickering, backbiting and lack of harmony have wrecked more community prospects than we care to enumerate. They are the granite upon which many a bright commercial future has been smashed to nothingness. They are the death knell of prosperity in any town.

And yet we see reputable and high standing and well meaning business men continually taking little, vicious digs at their competitors in the commercial field. We see them throwing out innuendos in the hope of curtailing the trade of their rivals. We see them casting veiled reflections on the business integrity of other firms who may perchance be more successful than they are.

It doesn't pay. It doesn't pay either the man, his rival, or the commercial life of the community upon which we all must depend.

Many business men have no thought for the far reaching effect of their inconsiderate words to the detriment of others, but the disastrous effect is felt on all hands. It creates a spirit of discord in the community, destroys the confidence of one in another, and prevents the cohesion of purpose by which we accomplish the greater achievements of life.

We would like to see every man speak well of his business associates. We would like to see them all laboring in harmony in a commercial union for the advancement of this town and this community. We would like to see them all pulling together in order that the load may be lighter for each.

We have everything to gain by such a unit of purpose. We have nothing whatever to lose.

Are you for it?

RICH VS. POOR

The spectacular arrest of a gang of blackmailers who have been preying upon rich men and women of the metropolitan cities furnishes us new food for thought—and skepticism.

When the arrests were made in Chicago a few days ago it was heralded broadcast that millionaire men and women had been caught in compromising positions. It was even said that many social families of prominence would be rocked to their very foundations. Federal prosecutors gleefully announced that no one caught in the net of the blackmailers would be shielded—that everything would be laid bare to the world.

The public gasped with anticipation, and the victims shivered with apprehension.

And then an order suddenly came out of Washington directing that the names of the victims be kept secret.

Money, money, money! The overpowering influence of money!

If poor men and women had been caught in the net of exposure no consideration would have been vouchafed them, no mercy would have been shown them. The searchlight of publicity would have been turned on to the full.

But not so with the socially prominent, not so with those of the swollen bank accounts. Money and position give them influence, and influence grants them immunity from publicity.

Skeptical? We are just skeptical enough to wonder if the time will ever come when the law will be for all people alike—not a law for the poor man and none for the rich.

Political Jottings

The Wilson Keynote.

In his kneeling to the demands of the trainmen, in his sacrifice of the sacred principle of arbitration on the altar of peace-at-any-price, we see, in review, the whole philosophy of the Wilson theory of government and nationality.

"It is better to run than to fight."

That theory is at work in American government today for the first time.—Boston Journal.

The Wilson Waltz.

In view of recent events the following formula overheard on a hotel veranda may be of interest: The Wilson waltz; one step forward, three steps backward, hesitate, then sidestep.

The Administration is depressed by the reflection that under no circumstances can it postpone election day.

Wilson insists that he will never recognize government by assassination, but he hasn't cut off relations with those who have assassinated Americans.

The first President and the first Congress that ever submitted to a hold-up.

And, by the way, nobody will ever be able to claim this was a regular Democratic Administration unless we have a bond issue before March 4, 1917.

There is one section of the country where Catarrh was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years local doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three time during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink.

FINNEGAN'S PHILOSOPHY

Pitiless Publicity.

"I see Mr. Hughes wud like to know fwhat's to come to 'Pitiless Publicity.' Meself could tell him. 'Where's "Pitiless Publicity"?' says Hughes. 'In the Ash Can,' says I. "T'was all right on the stump, but in Washin'ton 'tis jiffer.' The Harp that wanst through Trenton's halls'—I mane Tumulty Whin he bursts into song now he picks his chune!

"'Tis not that Prisidint Wilson is less public than Candydate Wilson—He's less pitiless. 'Tis like the showman. He tells ye all, an' more, about th' illyfant, but he has mintal res'vashune about the spotted baby.

"So it is wid Wilson. He's sof'ned the hard heart iv 'Pitiless Publicity.' 'How about the Postmasters?' axes the refawrumers. 'We'll niver tell ye,' says the C'mishun. 'For why?' says the League. 'T'wid embar'ss th' Administhrashun,' says the C'mishun. And the people laughs. 'Ye fired th Hid iv the Cinsus,' says Hughes. 'Ye lie,' says Redfield. 'He resigned wid out bein' axed,' says he. 'Ye lie yer self,' says Durand. 'Ye towld me ye'd fire me, an' ye gev me place to a pol'tician,' says Durand. 'Ixac'ly fwhat I said,' yells Pink Whiskers. 'I was goin' to fire ye annyway, but I niver axed ye to raysine,' says Pinky. An' the people roars.

"'Tell us about all th'm Dishurvin Dimmycrats,' says the people An Washin'ton is swep' be a storm iv silence.

"But doan't ye think there's no publicity at all. Teddy himself was none gunshy with the papers, but he cud be quiet, too.

"'We'll grab some land in Vinzuecly,' says the Ambassydure. 'tem'prily,' says he. 'Ye'll not,' says Teddy, 'ye'll agree to arbitrate,' says he, 'or,' he says, 'in tin days Dewey'll be there,' says Teddy.

"'Me Kyle Masther will niver consint,' says th' other. 'Thin,' says Teddy, 'I'll sind Dewey at wanst. 'There's no use waitin',' Teddy says. 'Howld 'em,' says the Ambassydure. 'We agree,' says he,—an' divil a bit did we know how it was for a dozen year.

"'We'll have Ferdy Carey alive, or the Bushi Bazook dead,' says Teddy, an' back comes Ferdy. An' the papers says 'On demand iv the State Department Ferdy Carey has been released.' An' that's all.

"How is it now? The greasers slaughtered twinty at Santy Isabel. 'Another Mexican Crisis, says the headlines. 'Twinty Americans killed,' they says. 'The Prisidint Calm,' says they. 'Ates Bacon and Eggs. Plays Goluf,' says the headlines. An' the paper goes on:

"'The Prisidint's appytite at breakfast was good, th' leader iv the nashun gettin' outside iv' grape fruit, bacon an' eggs, hot biscuit an' coffee. Whin Docther Grayson announced the bill iv fare the tinshun over Mexico was much relaved.

"'The Prisidint is solvin' in privacy the fateful question, "Will me throat last?" The answer is waited wid feverish anxiety.'

"Mondah, the papers says 'Nashunal Disaster? Sore Throat Feared, Panic at the Capital. The Prisidint Calm.

"'Consternation was spread among all classes today be the report that the Prisidint awoke with a sore throat. Strong men fainted before they cud reach the nearest saloon. There is talk iv appintin' a day iv prayer. It is hoped that Senor Arre-ye-on-thougl will claim that the dead Americans rayaised Ixicushun. A high authority states that this wud end the crisis The Prisidint made but wan remark. "Av they'd not been there they'd not iv been kilt.'"

"Choosdah, they says, 'Hope revives. No sore throat. Bitten by insect. Prisidint calm. All Phrases iv Mather to be considered.

"'The anxiety in the Capital was relaved today be the followin' bulletin.

"'"The Prisidint has a slight perforation in the cuticle over the infery ure maxinary caused by a insect bitin him whin asleep. The patient was too proud to scratch. (Signed) Grayson."

"'It is reported also that Gineral Scott will go to the border to bury the dead, and apologize to the insurgints. He will axe Carranzy, whether he wud accept a loan if offered. This is considered the thrue s'lution iv the difficulty.'

"Winsdah the Prisidint goes motorin', Thursdah he writes a note and Gineral Scott starts for the border. Fridah the headlines says 'Peace in Europe near. Prisidint studyin' terms. Will he stop the war? Another note expected. Capital excited over report.'

"But we're comforted be bein' towld the Prisidint will not be bethrayed into hasty ackshun.

"Sundah, he's considerin' th' Armenyan question, an' Mondah he advises Grandmothers about suckin' eggs. And another crisis is past.

"So it goes ivry day. As I was sayin', there's n'plenty publicity, but 'tis not the brand iv 1912."

Evidently Mr. Wilson has made up his mind about something. He refers in his acceptance speech to "the sovereign authority of Mexico." He may have decided to whom he was referring. Less than two years ago he was not sure whether it was the soldier-bandit Villa or the grocer-grafter Carranza.

The Administration ought to be able to take a comfortable rest. It has turned pretty much everything over to commissions from the Mexican question to the tariff. The talent for shirking responsibilities comes handy

PEOPLE YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

There are many people in this town know but you should.

You should know the banker. He you ought to know, for your own sake. Some of them you may not is the one who supplies you with money when you need it, and cares for your money when you have it. No town can conduct modern business without him.

You should know each merchant. They have the goods you want, and if you know each one personally you also know something of the wares they sell. This enables you to buy judiciously and saves you many a lost penny.

You should know the mechanic. Every time an improvement is made you must call him in. If you know them all you likewise know the one who is most likely to give you the best service.

You should know the school teacher. He is responsible to a great degree for the molding of the character of your children, for the lessons they learn while under his care are not forgotten even unto the brink of the grave. Know him, and help him.

You should know the farmer. He holds the world in the hollow of his hand. To him we look for the production of the sustenance of life, and without him we could not live.

You should know the minister. He is interested in you though you may give little thought to him. He does not supply you with the bread you eat, or the clothes you wear, but he does beckon you along the road to a better life beyond. Know him, and hear him, and heed him.

And, brother, you should know the sheriff. When the devil gets under your hide the sheriff is a good man to know. If you are inclined to kick up a little dust your knowledge of him may cause you to pause before you kick. Yes, brother, know the sheriff, for while you are a good citizen he is your friend, and when you cease to be good he puts you where you can be nothing but good.

NOTICE!

We wish to announce to all farmers that have been told different, that we have been taking the standard weight on oats, 32 pounds to the bushel since July 1st, 1916, and also pay the highest prices for grain and hogs, and will sell you your coal at reasonable prices. Your business is appreciated at the North Elevator. A. C. Lau & Son.

PICTURE RECORDS OF WAR

They Will Be Valuable as Object Lessons in Training the Future Schools.

A large proportion of the pictures made in the European war are not intended for public exhibition, says St Nicholas A rigid censorship is exercised over all photographic work by the governments, exactly as in the case of the mails and printed matter The films may be developed in the field or in nearby cities, but they are not permitted to leave the country until they have been passed upon A board of censors sits in a darkened room at headquarters and scans every detail of the movies as they flash past. Should some secret, valuable in any way to the army, be revealed, it is erased or the film is destroyed

The presence of the moving picture men in such numbers at the front does not mean that the governments are going into the show business. The photographs thus secured, at enormous expense become matters of official record and are of course invaluable In no previous war has such complete photographic reproduction been possible and the government officials have been quick to take advantage of the opportunity It is estimated that upward of 10,000 films have been prepared by the army movie men in Germany alone They are intended mainly for educational work in the military training schools.

As illustration for textbooks and lectures, the war movies will have a unique value in the classroom A lesson in strategy, for instance may be illustrated by a movie picture showing the advance or retreat of troops in an actual engagement Every phase of military instruction may thus be illustrated The motion picture showing the construction of bridges will help to train still more efficient engineers in the future than in the past. A careful study of their value will rank the great expense and risk involved in securing these interesting war pictures seem trifling

Like a swift shadow and as noiseless Duane stole across the level toward the dark wall of rock. Every nerve was a strung wire. For a little while his mind was cluttered and clopped with whirling thoughts, from which, like a flashing scroll, unrolled the long, baffling order of action. The game was now in his hands. He must cross Mount Ord at night. The feat was improbable, but it might be done. He must ride into Bradford, 40 miles from the foothills, before 8 o'clock next morning. He must telegraph MacNelly to be in Val Verde on the 25th He must ride back to Ord, to intercept Knell, face him, be denounced kill him, and while the iron was hot strike hard to win Poggin's half-won interest as he had wholly won Fletcher's Failing that last, he must let the outlaws alone to bide their time in Ord, to be free to ride on to their new job in Val Verde. In the mean time he must plan to arrest Longstreth. It was a magnificent outline, incredible, alluring, unfathomable in its nameless certainty He felt like fate He seemed to be the iron consequences falling upon these doomed outlaws.

Under the wall the shadows were black, only the tips of trees and crags showing, yet he went straight to the trail It was merely a grayness between borders of black. He climbed and never stopped It did not seem steep His feet might have had eyes. He surmounted the wall, and, looking down into the ebony gulf pierced by one point of light, he lifted a menacing arm and shook it. Then he strode on and did not falter till he reached the huge shelving cliffs. Here he lost the trail, there was none, but he remembered the shapes, the points, the notches of rock above. Before he reached the ruins of splintered ramparts and jumbles of broken walls the moon topped the eastern slope of the mountain, and the mystifying blackness he had dreaded changed to magic silver light It seemed as light as day, only soft mellow, and the air held a transparent sheen He ran up the bare ridges and down the smooth slopes and, like a goat, jumped from rock to rock In the light he knew his way and lost no time looking for a trail He crossed the divide and then had all down hill before him Swiftly he descended, almost always sure of his memory of the landmarks He did not remember having studied them in the ascent, yet here they were, even in changed light, familiar to his sight. What he had once seen was pictured on his mind. And, true as a deer striking for home, he reached the canon where he had left his horse

Bullet was quickly and easily found. Duane threw on the saddle and pack, cinched them tight, and resumed his descent The worst was now to come. Bare downward steps in rock, sliding, weathered slopes, narrow black gullies, 1,000 openings in a maze of broken stone there Duane had to descend in fast time, leading a giant of a horse. Bullet cracked the loose fragments, sent them rolling, sliding on the scaly slopes, plunged down the steeps, followed like a faithful dog at Duane's heels

Hours passed as moments. Duane was equal to his greatest opportunity. But he could not quell that self in him which reached back over the lapse of lonely, searing years and found the boy in him He who had been worse than dead was now grasping at the skirts of life—which meant victory, honor, happiness. Duane knew he was not just right in part of his mind Small wonder that he was not insane, he thought! He tramped on downward, his marvelous faculty for covering rough ground and holding to the true course never before even in flight so keen and acute. Yet all the time a spirit was keeping step with him Thought of Ray Longstreth as he had left her made him weak But now, with the game clear to its end, with the trap to spring, with success strangely haunting him, Duane could not dispel memory of her He saw her white face, with its sweet sad lips and the dark eyes so tender and tragic And time and distance and risk and toil were nothing

The moon sloped to the west. Shadows of trees and crags now crossed to the other side of him The stars dimmed Then he was out of the rocks, with the dim trail pale at his feet. Mounting Bullet, he made short work of the long slope and the foothills and the rolling land leading down to Ord. The little outlaw camp, with its shacks and cabins and row of houses, lay silent and dark under the paling moon Duane passed by on the lower trail, headed into the road, and put Bullet to a gallop. He watched the dying moon, the waning stars, and the east He had time to spare, so he saved the horse. Knell would be leaving the rendezvous about the time Duane turned back toward Ord Between noon and sunset they would meet

The night wore on The moon sank behind low mountains in the west. The stars brightened for a while, then faded. Gray gloom enveloped the world, thickened, lay like smoke over the road. Then shade by shade it lightened, until through the transparent obscurity shone a dim light.

Duane reached Bradford before dawn. He dismounted some distance from the tracks, tied his horse, and then crossed over to the station. He heard the clicking of the telegraph instruments, and it thrilled him The operator sat inside reading When Duane tapped on the window he looked up with startled glance, then went swiftly to unlock the door.

"Hello. Give me paper and pencil. Quick," whispered Duane.

With trembling hands the operator complied. Duane wrote out the message he had carefully composed.

"Send this—repeat it to make sure—then keep mum. I'll see you again. Good-by."

The operator started, but did not speak a word.

Duane left as stealthily and swiftly as he had come. He walked his horse a couple of miles back on the road and then rested him till break of day. The east began to redden, Duane turned grimly in the direction of Ord.

When Duane swung into the wide, grassy square on the outskirts of Ord he saw a bunch of saddled horses hitched in front of the tavern. He knew what that meant. Luck still favored him. If it would only hold! But he could ask no more. The rest was a matter of how greatly he could make his power felt. An open conflict against odds lay in the balance. That would be fatal to him, and to avoid it he had to trust to his name and a presence he must make terrible He knew outlaws. He knew what qualities held them. He knew what to exaggerate.

There was not an outlaw in sight. The dusty horses had covered distance that morning. As Duane dismounted he heard loud, angry voices inside the tavern. He removed coat and vest, hung them over the pommel. He packed two guns, one belted high on the left hip, the other swinging low on the right side. He neither looked nor listened, but boldly pushed the door and stepped inside.

The big room was full of men, and every face pivoted toward him. Knell's pale face flashed into Duane's swift sight then Boldt's, then Blossom Kane's, then Panhandle Smith's, then Fletcher's, then others that were familiar, and last that of Poggin. Though Duane had never seen Poggin or heard him described, he knew him. For he saw a face that was a record of great and evil deeds.

There was absolute silence The outlaws were lined back of a long table upon which were papers, stacks of silver coin, a bundle of bills, and a huge gold mounted gun

"Are you gents lookin' for me?" asked Duane. He gave his voice all the ringing force and power of which he was capable. And he stepped back, free of anything, with the outlaws all before him.

Knell stood quivering, but his face might have been a mask. The other outlaws looked from him to Duane. Jim Fletcher flung up his hands.

"My Gawd, Dodge, what'd you bust in here fer?" he said, plainly, and slowly stepped forward. His action was that of a man true to himself. He meant he had been sponsor for Duane and now he would stand by him.

"Back, Fletcher!" called Duane, and his voice made the outlaw jump.

"Hold on, Dodge, an' you-all, everybody," said Fletcher. "Let me talk, seein' I'm in wrong here."

His persuasions did not ease the strain

"Go ahead Talk," said Poggin.

Fletcher turned to Duane. "Pard, I'm takin' it on myself thet you meet enemies here when I swore you'd meet friends. It's my fault. I'll stand by you if you let me"

"No, Jim," replied Duane.

"But what'd you come fer without the signal?" burst our Fletcher, in distress. He saw nothing but catastrophe in this meeting

"Jim, I ain't pressin' my company none But when I'm wanted bad-"

Fletcher stopped him with a raised hand Then he turned to Poggin with a rude dignity

"Poggy, he's my pard, an' he's riled I never told him a word thet'd make him sore. I only said Knell hadn't no more use fer him than fer me. Now what you say goes in this gang I never failed you in my life. Here's my pard I vouch fer him. Will you stand fer me? There's goin' to be hell if you don't An' us with a big job on hand!"

While Fletcher toiled over his solemn, ernest persuasion Duane had his gaze riveted upon Poggin. There was something leonine about Poggin. He was tawney He blazed He seemed beautiful as fire was beautiful. But looked at closer, with glance seeing the physical man, instead of that thing which shone from him, he was of perfect build, with muscles that swelled and rippled, bulging his clothes, with the magnificent head and face of the cruel fierce, tawny-eyed jaguar.

Looking at this strange Poggin, instinctively divining his abnormal and hideous power, Duane had for the first time in his life the inward quaking fear of a man. It was like a cold tongue bell, ringing within him and numbing his heart. The old instinctive firing of blood followed, but did not drive away that fear. He knew He felt something here deeper than thought could go. And he hated Poggin

That individual had been considering Fletcher's appeal.

"Jim, I ante up," he said, "an' if Phil doesn't raise us out with a big hand—why, he'll get called, an' your pard can set in the game."

Every eye shifted to Knell. He was dead white. He laughed, and any one hearing that laugh would have realized his intense anger equally with an assurance which made him master of the situation.

"Poggin, you're a gambler, you are—the ace high, straight flush hand of the Big Bend," he said, with stinging scorn "I'll bet you my roll to a greaser peso that I can deal you a hand you'll be afraid to play"

"Phil, you're talkin' wild," growled Poggin, with both advice and menace in his tone.

"If there's anythin' you hate it's a man who pretends to be somebody else when he's not. Thet so?"

Poggin nodded in slow gathering wrath

"Well, Jim's new pard—this man Dodge—he's not who he seems. Oh-ho! He's a hell of a lot different. But I know him. An' when I spring his name on you, Poggin, you'll freeze, an' your hand'll be stiff when it ought to be lightnin'—All because you'll realize you've been standin' there five minutes—five minutes alive before him'"

If not hate then assuredly great passion toward Poggin manifested itself in Knell's scornful, fiery address, in the shaking hand he thrust before Poggin's face. In the ensuing silent pause Knell's panting could be plainly heard. The other men were pale, watchful, cautiously edging either way to the wall, leaving the principals and Duane in the center of the room

"Spring his name, then, you—" said Poggin, violently, with a curse

Strangely Knell did not even look at the man he was about to denounce. He leaned toward Poggin, his hands, his body, his long head all somewhat expressive of what his face disguised.

"Buck Duane!" he yelled, suddenly.

The name did not make any great difference in Poggin. But Knell's passionate, swift utterances carried the suggestion that the name ought to bring Poggin to quick action. It was possible, too, that Knell's manner, the import of his denunciation, the meaning back of all his passion held Poggin bound more than the surprise. For the outlaw certainly was surprised, perhaps staggered at the idea that he, Poggin, had been about to stand sponsor with Fletcher for a famous outlaw hated and feared by all outlaws.

Knell waited a long moment, and then his face broke its cold immobility in an extraordinary expression of devilish glee. He had hounded the great Poggin into something that gave him vicious, monstrous joy.

"Buck Duane! Yes," he broke out, hotly. "The Nueces gunman! That two-shot, ace of spades lone wolf! You an' I—we've heard 1,000 times of him—talked about him often. An' here he is in front of you! Poggin, you were backin' Fletcher's new pard, Buck Duane. An' he'd fooled you both but for me. But I know him. An' I know why he drifted in here. To flash a gun on Cheseldine—on you—on me! Bah! Don't tell me he wanted to join the gang. You know a gunman, for you're one yourself. Don't you always want to meet a real man, not a four flush? It's the madness of the gunman, an' I know it. Well, Duane faced you—called you! An' when I sprung his name, what ought you have done? What would the boss—anybody—have expected of Poggin? Did you throw your gun, swift, like you have so often? Naw! you froze. An' why? Because here's a man with the kind of nerve you'd love to have. Because he's great—meetin' us here alone. Because you know he's a wonder with a gun an' you love life. Because you an' I an' every damned man here had to take his front, each to himself. If we all drew we'd kill him. Sure! But who's goin' to lead? Who was goin' to be first? Who was goin' to make him draw? Not you, Poggin' You leave that for a lesser man—me—who've lived to see you a coward. It comes once to every gunman. You've met your match in Buck Duane. An, by God, I'm glad! Here's once I show you up!"

The hoarse, taunting voice failed. Knell stepped back from the comrade he hated He was wet, shaking, haggard, but magnificent

"Buck Duane, do you remember Hardin?" he asked, in scarcely audible voice.

"Yes," replied Duane, and a flash of insight made clear Knell's attitude.

"You met him—forced him to draw—killed him?"

"Yes."

"Hardin was the best pard I ever had"

His teeth clicked together tight, and his lips set in a thin line.

The room grew still Even breathing ceased. The time for words had passed In that long moment of suspense Knell's body gradually stiffened, and at last the quivering ceased He crushed. His eyes had a soul piercing fire

Duane watched them He waited. He caught the thought—the breaking of Knell's muscle bound rigidity. Then he drew.

Through the smoke of his gun he saw two red spurts of flame. Knell's bullets thudded into the ceiling. He fell with a scream like a wild thing in agony.

Duane did not see Knell die. He watched Poggin. And Poggin, like a stricken and astounded man, looked down upon his prostrate comrade

Fletcher ran at Duane with hands aloft.

"Hit the trial, you liar, or you'll hev to kill me!" he yelled

With hands still up, he shouldered and bodied Duane out of the room.

Duane leaped on his horse, spurred, and plunged away

CHAPTER XXIII

Duane returned to Fairdale and camped in the mesquite till the 23rd of the month The few days seemed endless. All he could think of was that the hour in which he must disgrace Ray Longstreth was slowly but inexorably coming. In that waiting time he learned what love was and also duty! When the day at last dawned he rode like one possessed down the rough slope, hurdling the stones and crashing through the brush, with a sound in his ears that was not all the rush of the wind Something dragged at him.

Apparently one side of his mind was unalterably fixed, while the other was a hurrying conglomeration of flashes of thought, reception of sensations. He could not get calmness. By and by, almost involuntarily, he hurried faster on. Action seemed to make his state less oppressive; it eased the weight. But the farther he went on the harder it was to continue. Had he turned his back upon love, happiness, perhaps on life itself?

There seemed no use to go on farther until he was absolutely sure of himself Duane received a clear warning thought that such work as seemed haunting and driving him could never be carried out in the mood under which he labored. He hung on to that thought. Several times he slow up, then stopped, only to go on again At length, as he mounted a low ridge, Fairdale lay bright and green before him not far away, and the sight was a conclusive check There were mesquites on the ridge, and Duane sought the shade beneath them. It was the noon hour, with hot, glary sun and no wind. Here Duane had to have out his fight. Duane was utterly unlike himself; he could not bring the old self back, he was not the same man he once had been But he could understand why. It was because of Ray Longstreth. Temptation assailed him. To have her his wife! It was impossible. The thought was insidiously alluring. Duane pictured a home. He saw himself riding through the cotton and rice and cane, home to a stately old mansion, where long eared hounds bayed him welcome, and a woman looked for him and met him with happy and beautiful smile. There might there would be children And something new, strange, confounding with its emotion, came to life deep in Duane's heart. There would be children! Ray their mother! The kind of life a lonely outcast always yearned for and never had! He saw it all, felt it all.

But beyond and above all other claims came Captain MacNelly's. It was then there was something cold and deathlike in Duane's soul. For he knew, whatever happened, of one thing he was sure—he would have to kill either Longstreth or Lawson Longstreth might be trapped into arrest; but Lawson had no sense, no control, no fear. He would snarl like a panther and go for his gun, and he would have to be killed This, of all consummations, was the one to be calculated upon.

Duane came out of it all bitter and callous and sore—in the most fitting of moods to undertake a difficult and deadly enterprise. He had fallen upon his old strange, futile dreams, now rendered poignant by reason of love. He drove away those dreams. In their places came the images of the olive skinned Longstreth with his sharp eyes, and the dark, evil faced Lawson, and then returned tenfold more thrilling and sinister the old strange passion to meet Poggin.

It was about 1 o'clock when Duane rode into Fairdale. The streets for the most part were deserted. He went directly to find Morton and Zimmer. He found them at length, restless, somber, anxious, but unaware of the part he had played at Ord. They said Longstreth was home, too. It was possible that Longstreth had arrived home in ignorance.

Duane told them to be on hand in town with their men in case he might need them, and then with teeth locked he set off for Longstreth's ranch.

Duane stole through the bushes and trees, and when nearing the porch he heard loud, angry, familiar voices. Longstreth and Lawson were quarreling again. How Duane's lucky star guided him! He had no plan of action, but his brain was equal to 100 lightning swift evolutions. He meant to take any risk rather than kill Longstreth. Both of the men were out on the porch. Duane wormed his way to the edge of the shrubbery and crouched low to watch for his opportunity.

Longstreth looked haggard and thin. He was in his shirt sleeves, and he had come out with a gun in his hand. This he laid on a table near the wall. He wore no belt.

Lawson was red, bloated, thick lipped, all fiery and sweaty from drink, though sober on the moment, and he had the expression of a desperate man in his last stand. It was his last stand, though he was ignorant of that.

"What's you news? You needn't be afraid of my feelings," said Lawson.

"Ray confessed to an interest in this ranger," replied Longstreth.

Duane thought Lawson would choke. He was thick necked anyway, and the rush of blood made him tear at the soft collar of his shirt. Duane awaited his chance, patent, cold, all his feelings shut in a vise.

"But why should your daughter meet this ranger?" demanded Lawson, harshly

"She's in love with him and he's in love with her."

Duane reveled in Lawson's condition. The statement might have had the force of a juggernaut. Was Longstreth sincere? What was his game?

Lawson, finding his voice, cursed Ray cursed the ranger, then Longstreth.

"You damned selfish fool!" cried Longstreth, in deep bitter scorn. "All you think of is yourself—your loss of the girl Think once of me—my home—my life."

Then the connection subtly put out by Longstreth apparently dawned upon the other. Somehow through this girl her father and cousin were to be betrayed. Duane got that impression, though he could not tell how true it was. Certainly Lawson's jealousy was his paramount emotion.

"To hell with you!" burst out Lawson, incoherently. He was frenzied. "I'll have her, or nobody else will!"

"You never will," returned Longstreth, stridently. "So help me God I'd rather see her the ranger's wife than yours."

While Lawson absorbed that shock Longstreth leaned toward him, all of hate and menace in his mien.

"Lawson, you made me what I am," continued Longstreth. "I backed you—shielded you. You're Cheseldine—if the truth is told' Now it's ended. I quit you. I'm done!"

Their gray passion corded features were still as stones.

"Gentlemen!" Duane called in far reaching voice as he stepped out. "You're both done!"

They wheeled to confront Duane.

"Don't move! Not a muscle' Not a finger!" he warned.

Longstreth read what Lawson had not the mind to read. His face turned from gray to ashen.

"What d'ye mean?" yelled Lawson, fiercely, shrilly. It was not in him to obey a command, to see impending death.

All quivering and strung, yet with perfect control, Duane raised his left hand to turn back a lapel of his open vest. The silver star flashed brightly.

Lawson howled like a dog. With barbarous and insane fury, with sheer impotent folly, he swept a clawing hand for his gun. Duane's shot broke his action.

Before Lawson even tottered, before he loosed the gun, Longstreth leaped behind him, clasped him with left arm, quick as lightning jerked the gun from both clutching fingers and sheath Longstreth protected himself with the body of the dead man. Duane saw red flashes, puffs of smoke, he heard quick reports. Something stung his left arm Then a blow like wind, light of sound yet shocking in impact, struck him, staggered him. The hot rend of lead followed the blow Duane's heart seemed to explode, yet his mind kept extraordinarily clear and rapid.

Duane heard Longstreth work the action of Lawson's gun. He heard the hammer click, fall upon empty shells. Longstreth had used up all the loads in Lawson's gun. He cursed as a man cursed at defeat. Duane waited, cool and sure now. Longstreth tried to lift the dead man, to edge him closer toward the table where his own gun lay. But, considering the peril of exposing himself, he found the task beyond him. He bent, peering at Duane under Lawson's arm, which flopped out from his side. Longstreth's eyes were the eyes of a man who meant to kill. There was never any mistaking the strange and terrible light of eyes like those. More than once Duane had a chance to aim at them, at the top of Longstreth's head, at a strip of his side.

Longstreth flung Lawson's body off. But, even as it dropped—before Longstreth could leap, as he surely intended, for the gun—Duane covered him, and called piercingly to him:

"Don't jump for the gun! Don't! I'll kill you! Sure as God, I'll kill you!"

Longstreth stood perhaps 10 feet from the table where his gun lay. Duane saw him calculating chances. He was game. He had the courage that forced Duane to respect him. Duane just saw him measure the distance to that gun. He was magnificent. He meant to do it. Duane would have to kill him.

"Longstreth, listen!" cried Duane, swiftly. "The game's up. You're done. But think of your daughter! I'll spare your life—I'll try to get your freedom on one condition. For her sake! I've got you nailed—all the proofs. There lies Lawson. You're alone. I've Morton and men to my aid. Give up. Surrender Consent to demands, and I'll spare you. Maybe I can persuade MacNelly to let you go free back to your old country. It's for Ray's sake! Her life, perhaps her happiness, can be saved! Hurry, man! Your answer!"

"Suppose I refuse?" he queried, with a dark and terrible earnestness.

"Then I'll kill you in your tracks! You can't move a hand! Your word or death! Hurry, Longstreth! Be a man! For her sake! Quick! Another second now—I'll kill you!"

"All right, Buck Duane; I give my word," he said, and deliberately walked to the chair and fell into it.

Longstreth looked strangely at the bloody blot on Duane's shoulder.

"There come the girls!" he suddenly exclaimed. "Can you help me drag Lawson inside? They mustn't see him."

Duane was facing down the porch toward the court and corrals. Miss Longstreth and Ruth had come in sight, were swiftly approaching, evidently alarmed The two men succeeded in drawing Lawson into the house before the girls saw him.

"Duane, you're not hard hit?" said Longstreth.

"Reckon not," replied Duane.

"I'm sorry. If only you could have told me sooner! Lawson, damn him! Always I've split over him!"

"But the last time, Longstreth!"

"Yes, and I came near driving you to kill me, too, Duane, you talked me out of it. For Ray's sake! She'll be in here in a minute. This'll be harder than facing a gun."

"Hard now, but I hope it'll turn out all right."

"Duane, will you do me a favor?" he asked, and he seemed shamefaced.

"Sure."

CANADA OWNS BIG HERD OF BUFFALO

From the New York World.

The Canadian government is meeting with signal success in its efforts to preserve the buffalo from the extinction which threatened it a few years ago. This is shown in a report on the growth of the herd at Wainwright Buffalo park, Alberta, just issued by J. B. Harkin, dominion parks commissioner.

The report shows that in April, 1909, the herd numbered 402. Since then it has gradually increased at the rate of about 200 a year, until today it numbers 2,017.

The history of this herd, now the largest in the world, dates back to 1873, when a Pend d'Oreille Indian captured four little bison calves—two bulls and two heifers—by cutting them out of a stampeded herd on the Flathead reservation in Montana In accordance with a peculiar characteristic, often noted by old plainsmen, these young creatures obediently followed the horses of the hunters who had stolen and driven off their mothers.

The Indian in question gave them to the Mission of St Ignatius, where they were kept as pets and became as domesticated as ordinary cattle. When the heifers were 4 years old each had a calf. From that time on they gradually increased in number, until, in 1884, there were 13 head and, finding the care of them too great a tax, it was decided to sell them. The head were bought for $250 apiece by A. A. Allard and Michel Pablo, who were ranching on the reservation, and were shrewd enough to see that specimens of what was even then an almost extinct animal would eventually become very valuable.

The herd increased under their careful supervision, and in a few years it became possible to sell specimens at high prices. Some idea of the average rate of increase may be deduced from the observed fact that half the cows gave birth to calves every year, while twin calves are not uncommon As a rule, the bison calf is a very hardy creature. There are instances of the Pablo-Allard calves finding their feet in less than a minute after birth and showing fight within half an hour.

In 1906 the Hon. Frank Oliver, then minister of the interior, obtained for the dominion government an option on the 600 unsold head belonging to Pablo and Allard, and eventually they were all bought for $200,000. The "roundup" lasted two months, and was carried out by 75 cowboys, horsemen picked for their ability.

Since it became the property of the Canadian government, this great herd has fared well in the new national park at Wainwright. The park is becoming a favorite resort of the traveler It has an area of 150 square miles and is securely inclosed with a high fence of wire.

TESTS FOR DIABETES.

There are 1,000,000 of diabetics in the United States. The best authorities are agreed that it is advisable for a diabetic to learn a few laboratory tests and to note for himself the effect of certain diets. The most intelligent diabetic with whom I have had close contact kept himself in very good condition for 20 years. He was taught to perform a few simple laboratory tests. For a while he experimented with himself to determine just what he could eat and how much. During this period of experimentation he tested his urine for quantity of sugar every time he voided any. Having worked out a dietary for himself, he discontinued strenuous laboratory examinations, only making tests at considerable intervals.

Benedict's test for the presence of sugar: Five c. c. (about 80 drops) or a little more than a teaspoonful of Benedict's solution is placed in a test tube and 8 to 10 drops of urine is added. The mixture is then boiled vigorously for three minutes. If no sugar is present, the solution will remain blue. There may be a slight precipitate, but the solution remains a blue. If there is less than one third of 1 per cent sugar the mixture remains blue so long as it is boiling; but, as it cools, it turns green or even yellow. If more sugar is present the mixture turns green while hot. If the quantity is large, the color is yellow or even red.

To make Benedict's solution, mix sodium citrate, 173 grams, and sodium carbonate (crystallized), 200, in 700 parts of hot distilled water Filter. Mix copper sulphate (pure crystals), 17.3, and water, 100, Filter. Slowly pour solution No. 2 into solution No. 1, stirring constantly. Add enough cold distilled water to make 1,000 parts.

Tests for Amount of Sugar in the Urine—It being known that sugar is present in the urine, it is desirable to know the quantity. Joslin teaches his patients to test the urine for the quantity of sugar, as follows:

Benedict's test—10 c. c. of urine and 90 c. c. of water are mixed. Half of this, or 50 c. c., is poured into a buret; 25 c. c. of Benedict's solution is measured into a white porcelain evaporating dish; 10 to 20 grams of crystallized sodium carbonate and a small quantity of powdered pumice stone or talcum are added to the solution in the porcelain dish. The mixture is heated to boiling. While the solution is boiling the diluted urine is run into it from the buret until the blue color is gone. To get the percentage of sugar divide 60 by the number of c. c. of diluted urine required to decolorize the copper.

To make Benedict's quantitative solution dissolve 200 grams of crystallized sodium carbonate, 200 grams of sodium citrate, and 125 grams of potassium sulphate cyanide in enough water to make 800 c. c. of the mixture. Boil. Filter.

Dissolve 18 grams of copper sulphate in 100 c. c. of water. Slowly add the copper solution to the other solution, stirring briskly. Add 5 c. c of a 5 per cent solution of potassium ferrocyanide solution and then add enough water to make exactly 1,000 c. c. (One c. c. is 15.4 minims. One grom is 15.4 minims.)

Prohibition Fails Again.

From the Oklahoma City Oklahoman.

The state tax commissioner of West Virginia says that, in two years of prohibition, crime has been reduced 50 per cent and drunkenness 75 per cent. But what do such figures prove? Why, they vindicate the liquor dealer's contention that "prohibition does not prohibit." And you must not expect perfectionists like the liquor dealers to enthuse about a law that is admittedly 25 per cent deficient. If prohibition completely prohibited why then the liquor dealers might indorse it. But no conscientious liquor dealer will jubilate over a law that enables one drunk to disfigure the landscape where four reeled before.

Further, those figures show that booze is not responsible for all crime that is committed. For while drunkenness has been reduced 75 per cent, crime has diminished only 50 per cent. It is plain therefore, that if West Virginia is going to be 100 per cent free from crime she will have to be 150 per cent "dry." That is the mathematics of it, and the logic, according to the liquor dealers. And under the circumstances there is nothing to do but let the liquor dealers keep their mathematics and their logic—and their booze.

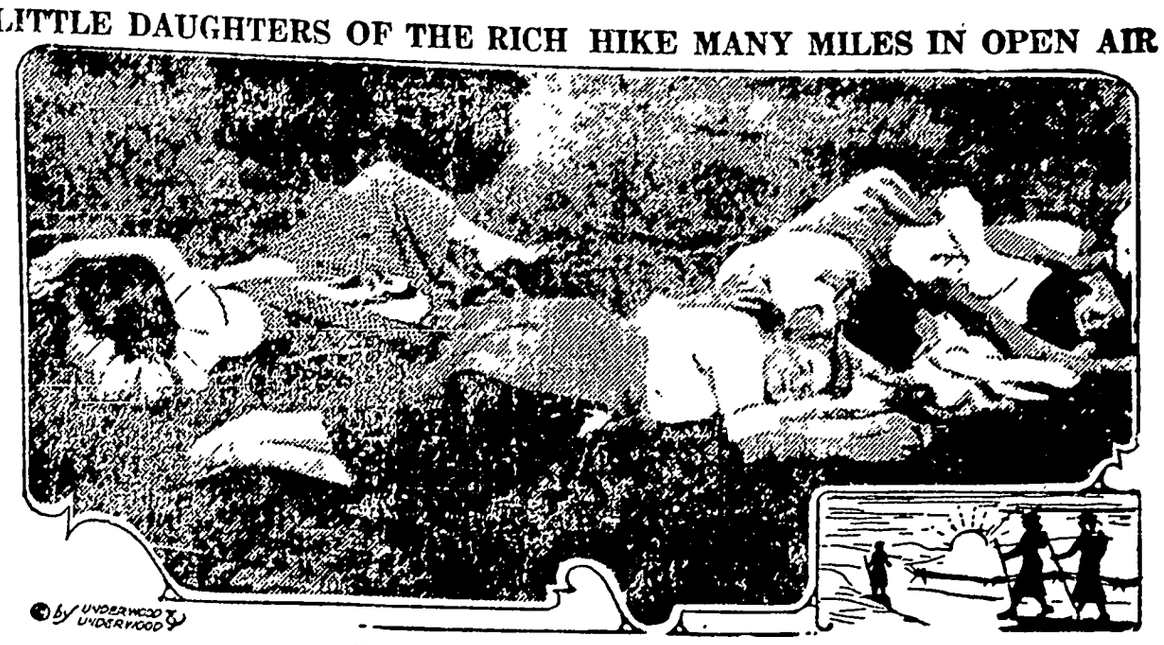
LITTLE DAUGHTERS OF THE RICH HIKE MANY MILES IN OPEN AIR



The young heiress hikers out under the sky.

Five young women, in company with Florence Fleming Noyes, the exponent of esthetic dancing and outdoor life for women, recently walked a distance of almost one hundred miles from South Woodstock, Conn., to Sharon, Mass. The girls are all daughters of prominent millionaires and are interested in the active life of the open air. They traveled through some of the greatest natural beauty of New England and slept every night out under the sky.

THE GREEK PEOPLE.

Washington D. C.—"What manner of man is the modern Greek?" is a question of paramount interest in view of recent developments on the Saloniki front where King Constantine's subjects are hourly expected to be drawn into the all-Europe conflict. A striking pen picture of the habits of thought and life of the modern Hellene is given in today's war geography bulletin of the National Geographic society, based on a communication to the society from George Higgins Moses, formerly United States minister to Greece. Mr. Moses says:

Class Distinctions Unknown.

"The ancient Athenian democracy has projected itself well nigh intact into the life of Greece as it is today. Class distinctions are unknown. Titles of nobility are forbidden by the constitution, even though every native Corfu claims to be a Venetian count. The crown prince is known only as the diadochos, or successor. Neither wealth nor education hinders the association of all upon terms of the most absolute equality.

"While the great ladies of Athens have an active social career Greek women, generally speaking, have no individuality. At parties the women generally sit apart, while in the country they are almost never to be found at table if guests are present, and upon them falls the greater portion of the labor of the household. Following the plow, harvesting, and working upon the roads are common employments for the Greek peasant woman. Unmarried, her parents and her brothers control her conduct, and a husband means merely a change of masters for whom she toils while he sits at ease. An improvement, however, is gradually developing. The Greek, much more than some of his Balkan neighbors, has outgrown the notion that the sole occupation fit for a man is warfare. Through schools endowed and under royal patronage, through other enterprises, and especially through the demands of modern business life, new avenues for employment and advancement are opening for women, and in another generation it is altogether likely that the women of Greece will be found with their sisters of the west, demanding as rights what they now regard as great privileges.

"Education in Greece is over developed at the top. The framework of the public school system is excellent, but the teachers' profession is held in slight repute and fails to attract either men or women of commanding ability.

"The Greeks, externally at least, are a deeply religious people, and the feasts and fasts are rigidly observed. When a Greek fasts he fasts in earnest, almost his sole nourishment being a coarse soup of black beans, palatable and nutritious, but likely to prove most monotonous after 40 days.

Labor Poorly Paid.

"Greek labor, though extremely well organized, is meagerly paid, day laborers receiving no more than three drachmas a day (a little less than 60 cents), while skilled labor in the trades will average hardly more than twice as much. Carpenters, masons and mechanics generally use the most primitive of implements; yet the amount of work which they perform in a day is astonishing. The guilds, or corporations, which correspond to our labor unions, embrace practically all the manual pursuits.

"The Greek of today, especially in the country, is the most hospitable of moderns. The best room in the house, the choicest tidbits at the table, all the resources of the family, indeed, are freely at the disposal of the passing stranger, without thought or desire of payment, and it is only by means of some subterfuge such as asking the whole family to drink one's health, that one is able with difficulty to press money upon a host who has denied himself to make his guest comfortable."

TWO NEW TREATMENTS.

The public press has recently noted two new methods of treatment and that our readers may be informed we furnish additional information concerning them.

Dr. S. J. Meltzer, of the staff of Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, proposes that a solution of adrenalin be injected into the spinal canal as a means of tiding over the climax and possibly as a specific cure in infantile paralysis. Dr. Meltzer's standing is of the best and there is no possibility of an ulterior motive in his recommendation.

Adrenalin is made from the adrenal gland, a gland located in the vicinity of the kidney. Adrenalin is known to be a most effective medicine. It temporarily decreases the size of the blood vessels.

The theory on which Dr. Meltzer recommended the injection of a solution of adrenalin into the spinal canal was that the pressure from the congested blood vessels and the inflammatory swelling in the narrowly confined spinal cord sometimes paralyzed the nerves or respiration and perhaps heart action and thus caused death. By injecting this solution ever four hours this pressure could be kept down and some lives could be saved. He even suggests that the drug may have a more direct action still, but he is not very certain about that point. The New York Throat and Lung hospital is giving the method a trial.

A recent number of the Journal of Experimental Medicine is given over to articles on a proposed cure for consumption. The new remedy is called cyano cuprol. The report is made by Dr. Koga and associates in Japan. The new remedy is a compound of copper and cyanide of potassium. The authors do not give any information as to how the medicine is made. For the time at least it is a secret preparation.

It is injected into the vein. The dose depends on the patient and the stage of his disease. In no instance is more than 8.5 cc., about 127 drops, injected. The injections are to be given at intervals of two weeks. After each injection the patient must have complete mental and physical rest for a day. The remedy has been used on cases of consumption in human beings with satisfactory results.

Koga says that it cures pulmonary and surgical tuberculosis in the first and second stages and benefits cases in the third stage. It acts primarily on the disease and secondarily on the bacillus. He says that the minimum dose is about 18 minims, 1 to 1.2 cc. This remedy is on trial. It will be some months before opinions on it of any value can be formed.

German Colony In East Africa.

From the American Review of Reviews.

German East Africa is in extent about 384,000 square miles, and has now been under German rule for 25 years.

During that period the Germans built the railway from Dar-es-Salaam, on the coast, to Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika, which bisects the colony, and a short line near the British East African boundary from Tanga, on the coast, to Moshi. The latter is opposite the British town of Taveta, where there is a branch railway connecting with the trunk line through British East Africa. It is in this neighborhood that the colonial armies of Britain and Germany began to contend with each other.

A little beyond Moshi there is a Boer colony of "bitter-enders," who emigrated here after the British annexed the Transvaal and Orange Free State. So far as we know, this is the only bonafide white settlement in the colony, apart from the government officials, traders, military, and missionaries. This, however, is not to be wondered at because the country is climatically unsuited to Europeans, or their domestic animals, except in favored parts near the British border. It is otherwise in the higher altitudes and more fertile soil of the highlands of British East Africa.

The colony is unfortunate in having all "the plagues of Egypt" and many more of its own. It is the home of rinderpest, which devastated the cattle fo South Africa until a preventive was found in arsenical dipping which destroys the ticks or parasites which cause the trouble. It is the home of sleeping sickness, which carries off thousands of natives in this and the neighboring Congo Free State. It is the home of the tsetse fly, whose puncture is death to the horse or mule. Even donkeys die mysteriously. Apart from the usual malarial fever and occasional dysentery, Europeans who live long in the country are liable to get the dreaded blackwater fever.

In brief tropical East Africa is only a shade less deadly than tropical West Africa, but the human seems to be able to adapt himself to any climatic conditions—for a time.

So far no payable minerals in any quantity have been found, and transportation away from either of the two railways is limited to human beasts of burden.

Dar-es-Salaam is the principal town and seaport of German East Africa. It is laid out in one long row of whitewashed stucco houses along the shore of the bay. Like Lorenzo Marques (Delagoa Bay), all business is transacted in the early morning and late afternoon, owing to the excessive moist heat.

As a government undertaking, the colony has never paid, although it is Germany's largest and most important one. Even with changed ownership, it holds out no prospect of developing on other lines than those of an important trading center and a magnificent game preserve.

PREVENTION OF DIABETES.

Diabetes is not exactly a disease. In a certain sense it is a symptom. In another sense it is an expression of the fact that the individual concerned can assimilate only a limited amount of sugar and starch. We speak of 150 grain (10 grams) tolerance or 1,500 grain (100 gram) tolerance, or 3,000 grain (200 gram) tolerance, meaning thereby that if the individual should eat more than 150, 1,500 or 3,000 grains of sugar and starches in the 24 hours he would excrete some sugar in the urine. Under these circumstances it is proper to speak of finding sugar in the urine under the head of diabetes.

Every person should have his urine examined for sugar and also for albumin once a year. Fat folks and folks who inherit diabetes should have a urine analysis twice a year at least. Joslin suggests that every person should have an examination on every birthday.

One factor that will prove helpful in controlling diabetes is the increasing tendency of the people to take out insurance and the increasing tendency of insurance companies to periodically examine their policy holders.

Diabetes runs in families. It is inherited in some cases. Jews are very subject to it. Persons who inherit a tendency to diabetes should have the urine examined twice a year. They should guard against obesity and especially against diabetes by eating no candy or other sweets and by limiting the amount of starches and, particularly, breads, cakes and pastries—any food made from flour.

Obesity—Fat people are very prone to diabetes. They should have their urine examined for sugar twice a year. They should experiment to determine the amount of sugar and starch which they can stand and keep always below the limit.

Physical Inactivity and Mental Overwork—Joslin says: "The man who, in middle life, gives up hard physical work and is promoted to an office chair with increased mental worry is exposed to diabetes."

An essential part of the Allen treatment of diabetes is regulated exercise. This is almost as important as a regulated diet.

It follows that one way to prevent diabetes is to keep physically fit, to keep the muscles firm, solid, and well under control of the nerves. In the Allen treatment the patients are directed to take some exercise immediately after eating. It is a matter of common information that when one has eaten heavily he will feel better if he will take a walk in the open air or otherwise exercise. If exercise just after eating helps to cure diabetes, it should help to prevent, and it does.

Joslin says: "It is too early to say whether we shall be able to train the soft muscle diabetic into an athlete, but there is no doubt but that it is worth while to try to do so." Allen says: "It is hoped that an end may be put to the period of the pale, feeble, diabetic dressed in double underwear, hugging the radiator and growing more neurasthenic all the time."

This applies to the prevention of diabetes as well as its cure.

Mental Hygiene—Hodgson says that diabetics should be kept mentally indolent and physically active. A factor in the prevention of diabetes is freedom from worry, great mental excitement and mental overwork.

25 AMERICAN LEPERS DISCOVERED IN JAPAN

Yokohama, Japan, (by mail).—The discovery of about 25 American lepers in different parts of Japan has become a pressing problem for American officials and for the American Association of Japan, which is undertaking to secure their transportation to the American leper home in the Hawaiian islands.

The lepers have made their way here in recent years with the hope that they might be healed at the famous Japanese hot springs, especially those at Kusatsu, which is always crowded with Japanese lepers taking the waters. Gradually they have drifted to missionary leper hospitals or have in other ways become burdens on the community. In view of the excellent asylum at Hawaii the American association is taking active steps to secure their removal.

Leprosy is one of the great questions seeking solution by modern Japan. It is estimated that the lepers of the empire number about 25,000. Five governmental leper asylums were established in 1907, but they accommodate only a few thousand. The remainder are scattered over the country desperately seeking a cure in the hot springs or publicly begging in the market place or before the temples.

At the last session of the diet the Japanese Leprosy Prevention society petitioned for the establishment of a national leprosarium on some island in the Pacific ocean. The cost of the asylum was estimated at $8,000,000, and its maintenance at $250,000 a year. It is believed that at least one-third of the lepers could be housed and treated at once and it was contended by the petitioners that Japan could be cleared of lepers in the course of 10 years.

Indian Commissioner Cato Sells.

From the Rapid City Journal.

Not a person who heard Cato Sells, commissioner of Indian affairs, speak at the Indian school, last evening but came away thrilled, enthused, and one might say electrified by his earnest words in behalf of the Indian.

The writer's first thought was "How did a man with such strong convictions for righteousness ever get the job," with so much political pulling going on, and whatever President Wilson has or has not done for the Mexicans he certainly did his best for the Indians when he persuaded Cato Sells to take the Indian commissionership.

The Infallible Test.

From the Montgomery Advertiser.

"Can he save money?" This was the test which James J. Hill applied to the individual. He practiced himself the severe virtues of life, such as thrift and hard work. He exemplified in his life the success of these virtues when coupled with common sense.

This hard and sturdy common sense, in the opinion of Collier's Weekly, contributed to his wonderful achievements as the master builder of the northwest. We are to remember that while James J. Hill was a money maker, that the making of money was not the greatest of his achievements; more than any other man or combination of men, he built the great empire of the northwest.

Ripe in the wisdom of a long and successful life, he said:

"If you want to know whether you will be a success or not you can find out. The test is easy and infallible: Are you able to save money? If not, drop out—you will lose. You may think not, but you will lose as sure as fate. The seed of success is not in you."

This is the simple "infallible test" of a man who was in every sense a success. Let the young men apply it to himself: "Am I able to save money?"

How Love Happens.

How love happens, need we say?
This none knows—but it is May!
How love happens, need we care?
Sweet May haunts the sunkist air!
How love happens, need we tell?
Love leads on a-down the dell,
All young life and hope to follow
Over hill and through the hollow!

How love happens? Oh, it came
Yesterday and years agone,
Silvery dew and sapphire flame,
Dancing in a league of dawn
Whist! the gossamer skirts were spun
Of the silver of the sun;
Velvet shoon of violets made
For fairy feet in yonder glade!

How love happens? Out with that!
Who would know, when love itself
Has stuck a red rose in its hat
And around a violet smiles, the elf!
Just the heart knows, but it beats
With the honey of such sweets.

How could it tell, if it would—
Take love, then, for bad or good!

MIXING MINORS AND MINERS

Sign Misunderstood by Alkali Ike and Deadwood Dick on Visit to City After Long Absence.

Alkali Ike and Deadwood Dick drifted into a western city the other day with full wallets and a mighty thirst. They had been enforced teetotalers for many moons, so of course they made a beeline for Saloon Row. The sign over the first door they came to staggered them—"No Minors Allowed."

"No miners allowed, eh?" said Alkali. "Well, we'll see about that!" "You bet!" said Deadwood.

So they riddled the sign with bullets, swept through the splintered door, yanked the terrorized barkeep from his hiding place, ordered drinks for the huddled and amazed crowd—and were arrested in the midst of a jollification that was really jolly from their side only.

"Gentlemen," said the judge, after explanations, "I order each of you to go at once and buy a pocket dictionary, that you may find out there are minors and miners. Don't mix them up again. The case is dismissed."

Didn't Want Much.

One Saturday night a lady who possessed a fruit and vegetable shop hurried to serve her last customer, a very red-faced woman.

She asked for a penny's worth of vegetables, and wanted a piece of everything.

When she had been given what she desired, she politely asked if they could be wrapped in a piece of paper and tied with a string.

The shopkeeper turned to her, quite calm, and said:

"Wait a minute, and I will run across to the butcher's for a bone, and I think that will complete your Sunday dinner."

FOREST DESTROYED BY FIRE

Pride of Late King George of Greece Reduced to Ashes—Played Large Part in History.

The wonderful forest of Tatoi, the pride of the late King George of Greece, was destroyed when fire reduced to ashes the summer residence of his son King Constantine. The tens of thousands of dollars spent in cultivating a flourishing pine wood, as an example of what might be done with forestry in barren Attica, have been burned up as completely as if the banknotes themselves had been thrown in the fire.

Tatoi played a large part in the history of Greece. Here the Spartans established themselves in 413 B. C. to cut off the supply of grain and foodstuffs bound into Athens from Eubea, with the purpose of starving out the Athenian population. And in 404 B. C., while Lysander blockaded Athens and the Pireus by sea, the Spartans descended from the vicinity of Tatoi, attacked and forced the capitulation of Athens, ending the Peloponnesian war. The burned forest, laboriously planted and protected, was considered to be a memorial to the past greatness of Greece.

Obliging.

Mrs. Simmons was rather taken aback by learning that her new domestic's name was the same as her own daughter's.

"Your name, Katherine, and my daughter's being the same makes matters somewhat confusing," said Mrs. Simmons. Suppose we change it?"

"Oi don't moind, mum," replied the girl.

"That's very nice," said the mistress. "How do you like, say, the name of Bridget?"

"Well, mum," returned the domestic, "it's not mesilf that's over particular. Oi'm willing to call th' young lady ony name ye'd suggist, mum."

Every citizen of this town is interested directly in its welfare, for his own welfare depends upon the prosperity of the town. For that reason, if for no other, we should do as much as possible of our buying at home this winter and Christmas, and let the mail order houses bleed some other place. Let's keep our money in circulation at home this Christmas. Better still, let's keep it moving around here all the time. We will make its acquaintance oftener ourselves,

The Joe Harlan family left this week for their new home at Menlo, Iowa, much to the regret of their many friends. They have made Klemme their home for the past five years, during which time Mr. Harlan has been working for Frank Gruetzmacher, He goes to Menlo to enter business for himself and his many friends here wish him much success. Clarence Kluckhohn who purchased their home has already moved in and the rooms where they have been living will be occupied by the Cloyd Lawhorn family.

MARRIED AT OMAHA

The Wedding of Miss Bessie Hart, daughter of Manly W Hart of Omaha, Nebraska, to Mr Chas. E. Gibbs took place las Wednesday eve at 8:00 p. m., October 5 at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Joseph Kelly, of the above city. Rev. C. E. Cobbey of the First Christian church read the marriage lines.

The bride wore a gown of white lace with satin bodice and carried a shower boquet of white roses. Miss Vera Kelly, small niece of the bride was her only attendant and she carried the ring in a pink rose.

Miss Grace Pool sang "I Know a Love y Garden," preceding the wedding march which was played by Miss Aileen Wolfe. Following the ceremony Miss Pool and Mr. Raymond Kelly sang "Dawning."

A wedding supper and reception were given by Mrs. Kelly. Only relatives were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Mrs. Gibbs spent some time at the Fontenelle Hotel in Omaha, after which they will be at home near Klemme, Iowa.

Mrs. Gibbs preceeding her marriage was superintendent of a U. S. postal station in Omaha, having the honor of being the only woman ever appointed to that position in Omaha by the U. S. Government.

The groom is the proprietor of the Sterling Stock Farm and one of our progressive and successful young farmers. He has lived in this vicinity practically all his life and his friends are numerous.

The Times takes pleasure in chronicling this happy event and hope that they enjoy a long and happy life filled with an abundance of health and prosperity.

THE BOY, OR THE HOG

For some weeks now farmers all over the states and counties have been flocking to the local fairs, some to exhibit to the public the results of their efforts and others to see and observe and profit by the results achieved by their fellows.

Among the many attractions to be seen at these fairs is the inevitable fat hog. His hogship usually tips the beam around one thousand pounds, and we stand and marvel at the labor and patience it must have required to develop such swinish perfection.

Then if we are thinking men our thoughts will probably pass on to wonder if the owner of this marvel has sons of his own, and as to how great an effort he is making to develop them to the highest type to which they are capable of attaining. The hog's owner has been careful to eliminate from its progenitors all that would tend to take from its full and complete developement. Has he been just as carefal to weed out of his own life habits and traits of character that would militate against the developement of his son?

Often we have seen a boy suceed in life despite the shortcomings of a derelict father, and we have contended ourselves with the simple remark that the boy is a great improvement on the father. The tribute is weak and paltry. Little do we reck of the fight the boy has waged in order to rise above his surroundings and overcome his handicaps.

Environment is miguty and powerful for good or evil. The greatest blessing a boy can have is parents who can point and guide him toward nigher things—higher heights even than those to which they have attained.

At the risk of seeming to preach we wish to say to the fathers of this section that when you look upon the big hog you have seen the ultimate. Nothing further is obtainable unless, possibly, it be a little more of the same porcine perfection. But when you look upon your small son, how little you can see of the limitless possibilites for good and ill that lie in that small mind and heart, and how your care of him is going to mould his life into almost whatever you may will to make it!

Why not think less of the big hog and more of the small boy?

BAYSIDE TO HAVE BIG ATTRACTIONS

The Bayside Amusement Park is a new corporation, the park having been leased for a period of ten years by two wide-awake and progressive spirits and hustling young men, Roy Stanfield and Byron G. Pierce. They have secured several concessions and have plans under way to make the park attractive and a mecca in the summer time for all amusement lovers. An addition will be built to the present bath house. The Manning-Erwin orchestra will conduct the dances.

A Roller Coaster

Work on the new roller coaster will be commenced this fall, putting in 300 stone piers to support the frame work, all to be in readiness at the opening of next season. $10,000 stock has been subscribed, local parties taking one-half and the other half by a Des Moines party who built up Grand View Park in that city and managed Riverview Park also. With this big drawing attraction, Bayside Park will be pretty lively and interesting.—Clear Lake Mirror.

HOW TO KEEP THE BOY ON THE FARM

The answers to this question are as varied as the minds that have advanced them. Some have merit. Some are doubtful. Some are utter nonsense.

The problem, we believe, could be met if fathers of boys on the farms could only be brought to see facts as they are.

We venture to say that more boys leave the farm on account of the deadly monotony and sameness of the average farmer boy's life than from any other cause. The normal boy craves the excitement to be found where humanity herds in crowds. It can't be found on the farm, hence he must go where it is to be found.

And right here is where the average farmer father fails from want of foresight. He uses every means at his command, even to force, in preventing the boy from familiarizing himself with town or city life. The business and social life of the town are cried down as something to be shunned—the surest way in the world to make the boy determined to plumb them to the depths. The boy is held to a monotonous routine on the farm until one of two things usually happens: He either sinks into a listless, spiritless automaton, or he revolts and throws off the shackles altogether.

Why not encourage the boy to familiarize himself with town life to some extent? Our word for it, he would soon lose many of his illusions. Let him go with the young men who are filling positions in town. Impress upon him that these men, instead of living like millionaires, are in reality worse drudges than he; that while he sometimes must work early and late for a very short season, these young men must frequently be at their work before he is out of bed, and must remain there until he is back in bed again; and as to finer clothes, frequently the suits he sees on their backs comprise their entire wardrobe. Let him also learn that while they frequently handle much money, very little of it sticks to their fingers—except with ugly results to himself.

Let the boy come to town. Let him have a taste of town life and make the acquaintance of town boys. Let him learn, as he is bound to do, that not by any means is all gold that glitters. Thus, with the right surroundings and conditions on the farm an occasional dose of town life will not hurt him, and he will soon grow to see that his own life is infinitely to be preferred to that of any town boy of his acquaintance.

JOKE THAT WAS DANGEROUS

Sunday evening some local boys fixed up a dummy man out of a pair of overalls, a jacket and some straw and placed it on the street. Auto drivers coming along would quickly put on the breaks on their machines, stop and make an investigation. A stranger driving a big car nearly wrecked his machine in turning out from what the driver supposed was a man lying directly in the path of his car. We understand that it took considerable pleading both with heart strings and purse strings to persuade the stranger to go his way without consulting the authorities. A serious accident might have resulted from what was intended as an innocent form of amusement,—Graettinger Times.

Under a scorching sun that at times drove the mercury up to 130 degrees Fahrenheit, 2,000 soldiers of the Japanese army, stationed in Formosa and the Pescadores, made a 12-day march in Formosa between July 1 and July 13. Only three cases of sunstroke are reported. The first nine days were spent in marching, and the troops actually covered more than 100 miles. The last three days were spent in maneuvers. With a view to finding the best clothing to protect soldiers from the heat, the soldiers were allowed to wear any costume they pleased. Some wore helmets, some straw hats; some wore an ordinary uniform with a hole on either side, or a knitted undershirt, or a thin kimono; some wore their heavy boots; some tabi. Besides their clothing, the best food and drink for soldiers under these conditions were also studied.

The West Point Uniform.

Helen Nicolay in the Century Magazine.

The color of the West Point uniform records a bit of national sentiment. It is a little sentimental note on the forgotten battle of Chippewa, when there was not enough blue cloth in the country to cover our small army, and the British commander, seeing a gray line of regulars advance, mistook them, to his undoing, for "nothing but a body of Buffalo militia."

DOCTOR SUES CLAY COUNTY ACCOUNT OF SON'S DEATH

Spencer, Ia., Oct. 7.—Holding that Clay county is responsible for the death of his 2-year-old baby girl and injuries to his wife and father and mother, Dr. P P. French, of Rudd, Ia., has filed damage claims in the county auditor's office here amounting to $25,640. It is the largest claim ever filed in the history of the county.

The claim is the result of an automobile accident which occurred on the Spencer-Dickinson county highway about five miles east of this city on the night of July 23, while Dr. Rudd and his family were en route to Lake Okoboji In his petitions the claimant avers that weeds were growing alongside the road and that in attempting to pass another car, with all occupants, was thrown into the ditch. The road, he says, is too narrow at this point to allow two cars to pass.

In the accident Dr. Rudd's baby was so badly injured that she died a few hours later at the Spencer hospital, and his wife was injured internally and has been in a serious condition since. Dr. French sustained a broken arm and other injuries, while his father and mother were both badly cut and bruised.

AMES—Notices indicating that residents of the Fourth ward of Ames will file in the district court of Story county, at Nevada, signed petitions asking for the severance of that portion of Ames from the city proper on or before October 20, have been posted in conspicuous places about the town. Although the question has been under consideration for some time the posting of the notices, accompanied by charts of the section of the city calling for the separation, is the first legal step to be taken by the plaintiffs in the case. The Fourth ward includes Iowa State college campus and practically all of the college property.

CEDAR RAPIDS—After a session which lasted all afternoon, the coroner's jury which is probing the death of Gale Boyer, the 17-year-old boy killed Tuesday night, adjourned for the day. Boyer and several companions took a handcar on the Northwestern road and went to "swipe" watermelons. D. F. Herrington, section foreman, missed the car, and it is alleged he placed eight feet of railroad ties across the rails to intercept the gang on the return trip. When the handcar struck the obstruction Boyer was thrown off, striking on his head. He lived only a short time. Herrington denies placing the ties on the track.

Said to Have Stolen 10 Cars In Capital City—Worked Game at Other Places.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 6.—A. F. Heideman, alias Edward J. Huntley, alias Jack Vanhorn, alias C. B. Lamont, accused of being a daring automobile thief who has worked from coast to coast, is in the county jail.

The cars were taken to the timber in the northwest part of the city, dismantled and deserted. The parts were then sold. When arrested, the prisoner had $350 in his pockets.

It is claimed that Heideman tried to "ditch" automobile accessories which were in his possession when he was taken into custody.

COST IOWA $15,000,000 TO HUSK ITS CORN THIS YEAR

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 6.—Iowa will produce 373,000,000 bushels of corn this year, according to the forecast of the government crop estimates. This will be about 14 per cent of the entire corn crop of the United States. At an average price of 4c a bushel, the pay roll for the husking of this mammoth crop will be $14,920,000 It is estimated that the crop is worth $287,210,000, compared with $215,130,000 last year.

Indications at this time are that men to husk this crop will be hard to get as there is now a scarcity of labor throughout the entire state. In order that the crop may be harvested in good time and no financial losses incurred, the state free employment bureau urges that all farmers who will be in need of men to husk corn and all who are seeking employment in that line of work file applications with the department at once

CRIMINAL ACTION URGED AGAINST RECKLESS AUTOISTS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 6.—Atty. Gen. George Cosson declares that every automobile driver who kills a pedestrian, while speeding or driving his car in a reckless manner, should be prosecuted for manslaughter. Recent accidents should be investigated and, if the driver is found to have been violating traffic laws, evidence should be placed before the grand jury immediately, the state official says.

"Des Moines city officials and officials of municipalities of Iowa," declared Mr Cosson, 'should prosecute criminally every auto driver who operates his car in a reckless manner and injures or kills persons on the street. While I have not investigated any specific case in Des Moines, I know of the general situation, and that many auto owners here violate speed laws and endanger lives by so doing."

Sumner, secretary of the state board of health, yesterday consented to the bringing of a carload of orphans from New York to be placed in good families in Iowa, providing the children are given a clear bill of health from the New York board of health and the United States public health service.

MAN RESTRAINED FROM VISITING ANOTHER'S WIFE

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 5.—The privilege of visiting another man's wife while she is a patient at a hospital is denied Roy Cox in an injunction issued in Judge Charles A. Dudley's court yesterday afternoon.

H. E. Mathews, who secured the injunction, claims his wife has been confined to her bed in the hospital for the last four weeks, and that, in spite of the explicit instructions of attending physicians, Cox has persisted in visiting her. Mathews says these calls have been detrimental to his wife's health.

Cox is the husband of a sister of Mrs. Mathews.

When the brotherinlaw failed to comply with the doctor's instructions, Mathews took the matter into district court and was granted the restraining order late yesterday afternoon.

The injunction not only forbids Cox from seeing Mrs. Mathews while she is in the hospital, but also denies him the privilege of visiting her after she returns to her home Cox is further restrained from interfering in any way with his brotherinlaw's wife.

The treads are held taut by 20 solid rollers, five for each tread, and the bulk of the weight is borne by these rollers

The purpose of the eight 15-foot cog-wheels is to lay a revolving track for the rollers, so that in effect they run on a self laying railway, which is gathered up and relaid continually as the machine advances.

The treads are 10 feet wide and 20 feet apart, so the tank's total width is 40 feet. As its height is about 45 feet, the tank is practically noncapsizable.

The treadmills, from top to bottom, are 17 feet over all.

The tank itself is 185 feet long. Some tanks are said to be over 200 feet in length

Each treadmill covers about 60 feet. This great length enables the tank to leap practically any trench ever built. As long as the front of the treadmill can reach the farther side of the trench before the rear part of the front tread runs off, the machine will not dip.

In the center, above the tank, extends a rigid turret, from the apertures of which extend eight Lewis machine guns. Their muzzles are about 50 feet above the ground; the turret itself juts about 10 feet above the top of the tank, making the total height of the machine some 55 feet!

Black Snakes Beneficent.

In Burlington county, New Jersey, the farmers who, in the erroneous belief that they are a pest, have been killing black snakes, are being urged to conserve them as enemies of the rattlers, which have been unpleasantly numerous this year. The damage done by the non-poisonous reptiles is now recognized to be of slight account in comparison with the good they do. Not only will the black snake fight and best the rattler, but he earns more than his keep by keeping down other pests. It has taken man a long time to identify his friends of the lower orders, and even today many persecuted animals do not receive the credit that is due to them.—New York Sun.

Russian Losses in Two Years Of War 6,000,000 Men, Says Berlin

High Casualties Said to Be Due to Practice of Generals In Driving Their Men Into Battle Ahead of Curtain of Own Artillery Fire.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Oct. 6.—Casualties among the Russian armies during this year's offensive on the eastern front, according to cautious calculations, says the Overseas News Agency, have been at least 1,250,000 officers and men

According to conservative Danish calculations the news agency adds, Russia during the first two years of the war lost considerably more than 6,000 000 men. Wounded men who returned to the front are not included in this estimate

Continuing the Overseas News Agency says:

"The phophecy of David Lloyd-George, the British secretary of war that Russians will fight until death is about to be realized literally. The Russian losses in Galicia recently again reached gigantic figures, which even this populous country cannot bear.

"Russian artillery fires indiscriminately among the troops in order to push them forward and shoots down troops which are retreating. In the battle of Korytniza, which was victorious for the Germans, Russian columns were driven forward by a curtain of fire and whips. Entire Russian waves of men fell under the German artillery and machine gun fire. Dead bodies formed in mountains. After the losses sustained by the Russian emperor guards on the Stokhod river and in the sanguinary engagements at Pustomyty and Kortytniza nothing remained of the emperor guards."

POET TAGORE FLEES FROM ASSASSINATION

Hindu Savant Takes Refuge In Santa Barbara When Plot Is Discovered.

San Francisco, Oct 6 Sir Rabindranath Tagore, Hindu poet and Nobel prize winner, safe in Santa Barbara today whither he fled before a reported plan to assassinate him, left behind him here two fellow countrymen in jail, a canceled engagement and raging discord. All day yesterday municipal and private detectives guarded the Hindu savant in his hotel quarters, were in the wings and on the floor of a theater where he appeared, and escorted him to a night train, which other body guards boarded, accompanying him to Santa Barbara.

The head of a private detective agency said today that there was a well founded plot on the part of Hindu revolutionists to destroy Tagore. The men in jail, charged with battery and assault, are H. Singh Rateshi and Jewan Singh, members of the radical Hindu, or Godar, party. In front of the hotel where Tagore was staying they attacked Prof. Singh Lattu, who came from Stockton to invite Tagore to lecture there, and tore his white turban from his head. Detectives believe that their real object was to reach Tagore.

The high mark on time money in this market yesterday was only 3½ and the low was 3 per cent. Local bankers say that they can get at high as 5½ per cent on time loans in Great Britain.

London, Oct. 6.—The recent crossing of the Danube by Rumanian forces constituted a successful raid, according to a wireless dispatch from Rome today. The Rumanians, says this version of the affair, destroyed Bulgarian depots containing large quantities of army provisions and recrossed the Danube without losing a man.

According to the Bulgarian official reports the Rumanians were badly cut by Bulgarian forces from Rustchuk and Turtukai, which caught the invaders between two fires and compelled their retreat with heavy losses.

GUARDSMAN IS SHOT.

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 6.—Corporal Leopold L. Lovell, of Company K, Second Maine infantry stationed here, was shot and killed at 10 o'clock last night as he walked from a store. Investigation today had not developed who fired the shot. Lovell was from Farmington, Me.

REDMOND OPPOSED TO CONSCRIPTION

Says Government Is Insane to Challenge Conflict Which Inevitably Will Be Result.

Waterford, Ireland, Oct. 6.—In a notable address to his constituents, here this afternoon John Redmond, the Irish nationalist leader in parliament declared that despite the recent rebellion "with all its inevitable aftermath of brutalities, stupidities and inflamed passions" home rule for Ireland is safe if Ireland remains sane.

Mr. Redmond also declared that conscription could never be forced upon Ireland, adding:

"I cannot bring myself to believe that, malign though the influence at work is, the government will be insane enough to challenge a conflict with Ireland on this subject. Conscription for Ireland, far from helping the army and the war, would be the most fatal thing that could happen."

"It is to be resisted in every village in Ireland. Its attempted enforcement would be a scandal which would ring around the world. It would produce no additional men."

Concluding the Irish parliamentary leader said:

"The mere threat is paralyzing recruiting, which, mark you, is not dead as some people say. The latest figures indeed, show that from the date of the rising (Easter Sunday) until September, 6,000 recruits were received.

"This demand for conscription is not a genuine military demand. It is a base political device put forward by men who want to injure and discredit Ireland's political future."

Mr. Redmond said it was absolutely false that he or his colleagues ever favored a scheme providing for a permanent division of the ancient nation. The Lloyd-George plan, which was favored, was definite for the limited period of the war, he continued, its object being to give to 26 counties an opportunity of inducing the other six counties to come in voluntarily after the war by an exhibition of successful, tolerant, sane government in the south and west. The moment an attempt was made to give this arrangement a complexion of permanence, it was rejected.

FIVE ARE INDICTED FOR BLACKMAILING SWINDLE

New York, Oct. 6.—Five men and a woman were indicted here today in the federal grand jury investigation into the operations of the "White slave blackmailing syndicate." They are charged with blackmailing Edward R. West, vice president of the C. D. Gregg Tea and Coffee company of this city and Chicago, out of $15,000. The indictments charge the men with impersonating government officers while the woman's part, it is charged, was to lure West from Chicago to this city.

Mr. West told the grand jury that while he was at a hotel with the woman the men forced their way in and threatened to arrest him for violation of the Mann white slave act, and that they accepted a supposed bribe to let him go.

The woman, Buda Godman, alias Alice Williams, is in custody as are William Butler, Homer T. French and James Christian, all named as defendants. Two other men are fugitives from justice.

CITY OF DUBLIN MAY BORROW FROM AMERICA

Dublin, Oct. 6.—The corporation of Dublin is arranging for a special meeting to consider an offer by the National City bank of New York to make a loan of £1,000,000 to the city for housing operations.

BLODGETT DISQUALIFIED.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 6.—D. T. Blodgett, candidate for supreme court judge, will not get his name on the official ballot, according to a ruling of Judge Frye at Boone yesterday. Today Governor Clarke refused to restore to Blodgett his rights of citizenship in Iowa because he had been sentenced at one time to the state prison at Anamosa.

Paris has the largest steam turbine electric plant in Europe, a street railway power station, producing 120,000 horse power.

Meudon in Wartime.

Meudon, the gay Meudon of trysts and moonlight promenades, has been transformed into a military camp. The station platform is crowded with uniformed soldiers of all branches; men on furlough in their suits of faded blue like dirty water, showing with pride holes torn in their coats by rifle balls, convalescents wearing the old red pantaloons, used only by those behind the fighting line, often with one leg folded up; Zouaves, whose baggy trousers, formerly blood-red, have now changed to an earthy color; Belgians in long brown coats, who never smile, and British Tommies spick and span as if they had just stepped from a bandbox.

The women, in passing, glance at the war crosses and smile.—Mme. Bernardini-Sjoestedt in Cartoons Magazine.

Diplomatic Intercourse.

Col. E. M. House said at a dinner in Washington:

"I sometimes think that diplomacy would be more successful if it were more truthful and frank. The way some diplomats treat one another, they don't get any nearer to real, helpful intercourse than the two celebrities did.

"Two celebrities, one a stutterer and the other deaf, were introduced at a tea. After the tea the stuttering celebrity was asked how he and the deaf one had got on.

"'Oh, we got on fine,' he answered. 'I couldn't talk and he couldn't hear me.'"

Grapes for the King.

It is reported that the king's grapevine at Windsor, in the garden near Cumberland Lodge, is doing well this year and is likely to yield more than 500 bunches. Planted in 1775, it is 210 feet in length and 20 feet in width. The most remarkable vine at Hampton Court, from which this is a cutting. This was planted in 1768 and still yields abundantly.

What Might Happen.

"What would happen," said a summer boarder who is always trying to entertain the company, "if an irresistible force were to meet with an immovable body?"

"I reckon, maybe," replied Farmer Corntossel, "there won't be nigh so many of us left to ask fool questions."

WHITE PINE IS IN PERIL

Blister Rust in the East Has Caused Heavy Ravages in Timber.

The present is a gloomy hour for the forestry enthusiasts, especially in the eastern states, where so much reliance is being placed upon the white pine as the tree par excellence for quickly rehabilitating our shabby woodlands. Last year's discoveries in Massachusetts of the dread blister rust of Europe led other states to investigate within their borders. The active and well organized co-operative effort that is now being made by the federal department of agriculture and the officers of the several states where timber interests are involved indicates the seriousness with which they regard the situation. Since their work for the control of the disease began in the early summer it has become apparent that while Massachusetts is beyond question dangerously infected in certain sections, other states, whose officers regarded their territory as relatively free, are, in fact, no better off than we. All New England is on the fever map, and even Wisconsin and Minnesota investigators have lately turned up infection.

Hope for the successful control of the fungus is not forlorn, considering the plant pathologists who are conducting the campaign. The greatest need of the present hour, however, is a livelier interest on the part of our woodland owners.

The Wind From Maine.

A wind that's from the rocks and sea
And scented by the pine
Sweeps through the sycamores today,
And where sequoias line
The ranks of giant sentinels that guard the western slopes,
The balsam of this briny breeze brings heavy hearts new hopes.

The mountains and the rivers cry the message that is Maine's
To men whose pride was shattered, and their desperation wanes,
Again their hearts are raised to look the future in the face
For Maine has been the clarion that's heartening a race.

'Twas shame that sunk the souls of us to depths we never knew
In days our flag was honored in the harbors where it flew,
When nations paid us homage, for they knew our hands were white,
Ere blood of our own countrymen had stained them like a blight.

And now again our songs we sing of deeds that we must do
To make the dream that passed away
come marvelously true;
For the sturdy souls that breathe the pine have brought to life again
The faith that fills a nation's heart that feels the wind from Maine.

If you had two dollars to invest would you trust it to the business sagacity of Josephus Daniels? Then, why let him handle the millions that are to be spent on the new navy?

Judging by the signs of War Department activity the Administration is cunningly arranging to bring the militiamen home just in time to enable them to vote for Mr. Hughes.

A train of thought on a one-track mind has to be composed of shuttle cars.

Three years ago Woodrow Wilson was explaining that hard times were psychological, but he isn't trying to squirm out of responsibility for the present prosperity.

The disaster to the Memphis caused very little excitement, Americans being used nowadays to seeing the navy on the rocks.

This Democratic Congress has passed into history—profane history.

President Wilson's speech of acceptance could have been phrased even more succinctly in the graphic words of Boss Tweed "What are you going to do about it?"

We see by the interviews with the Mexican commissioners that the campaign slogan this year in the Sonora bandit belt is "Thank God for Woodrow Wilson."

Mr. Wilson's eulogy of Lincoln at Hodgenville was more literary but less sincere than the one he pronounced upon himself at Shadow Lawn.

The new half dollars will have an olive branch on one side and on the other an eagle, in full flight. Wilson money.

Motto of the McAdoo shipping law: "The sun never rises on the American flag."

A Democrat's idea of an ideal watchdog of the Treasury is a Pommeranian.

Mr. Wilson is now busily engaged working the other side of the suffrage street.

The campaign agents who two years ago were busily engaged thanking God for Woodrow Wilson seem to be taking their vacations just now.

A record wasn't the only thing the late Congress broke—there's the Federal Treasury.

Congress didn't want a Tariff Commission composed of $12,000 men, those $7,500 salaries being designed for $1,200 men.

President Wilson's scheme for commissions for everything has been adroitly planned to make three jobs for deserving Democrats grow where only one would grow before.

Vice-President Marshall says Mr. Hughes is an echo of the past. Quite true. Of statesmanship, of patriotic performance and safe legislation.

Betting on Hughes and Wilson is dangerous both to Democrats and Republicans. In one of the New England states such a bet was made a few days ago. The officers heard of it and they arrested the Republican on a charge of robbery and sent the Democrat to an insane asylum. Be careful.

Catarrh in the section of the country is more than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salt which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours about 5 grains of uric acid pass from it 500 grains of acid in the blood, so we can readily understand the importance of keeping the kidneys active.

To obtain this water—you can't drink enough—you can also get from any pharmacist a few ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys and to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys active and clean. Try this, also drink less drinking, and no one can tell what became of your backache.

FINNEGAN'S PHILOSOPHY

Purging the Heart.

"Yes sir. He's like the patriarchs. Which iv them? All iv them. He smites the Civil Service Rock and refreshin' jobs gushes fourth for thursty but dishurvin' Dimycrats. He blows on a horn an' ivrythin' falls for ut. If the people call him iver so soft, Little Samuel had no quieker ear. An' for sacryficin' what's dear to his heart, Abruhim had nawthin' on him. Sure he is Dimocricy's shield an' exceedin' great reward.

"'Tis his Presbytaryan bringin' up, I'm thinkin.' Furst he adopts a policy; thin he thries to justify it, thin he sanctifies it wid a phrase, while a choir iv Dishurvin Dimmycrats sings a hymn. An' there ye are. Justification, Adoption an' Sankty-ficashun.

"The choir med great harmony whin Jim Smith, George Harvey an' Bill Brine was all in ut. But wan be wan their v'ices cracked an' they passed out iv the life iv the great Idaylist.

"Harvey went back to editin' an' Bill Brine wint in search iv the Howly Kale. McCombs was canned, because him an' Billy McAdoo cuddent sing a duet, an' Oscar Underwood was weak on Tariff ragtime. But Wudthrow dicorated thim all. Wid f'what say ye? Wid the Order iv the Double Cross. O—ho. I mind well the time at the Manhattan Club, whin he kissed Brine an' kicked Harvey wid wan motion Now the choir has what Wudthrow calls 'the vital stuffs iv life.' Stone an' McAdoo; Danyiels an' Jim Ham Lewis, wid Redfield for the high falsetto. Wudthrow sits wid his hands crossed while the stuffs sings songs iv praise, an' Col. House winds the Victrola.

"Wudthrow is fond iv music, but Colonel House himself is the quiet man. Faith av he danced a Clog on a Washbi'r ye'd niver hear a sound.

"Well, wan night in August the Colonel come tiptoein' in through the basement dure.

"'How's the game, Colonel?' says Wudthrow. 'So-so,' the Colonel says 'Ye might round up a few more votes says he, scratchin' his ear wid an' absent air.

"'Aint I got the full dinner-pail's?' axes Wudthrow, anxious like. 'Al that's forgot th first two year an a half,' says House pleasantly. 'Aint I kep' em out o' war?' axes Wudthrow. 'Part o' th' time,' says House rubbin his left shin wid th felt-slip on his right foot. 'Aint my voice on greatest liquid asset?' axes Wil earnestly. 'It's some voice,' says House 'but a lot iv suckers can't tell asse fr'm an' li'bility, the Colonel says.'

"'F'what are ye drivin' at,' say Wilson, four flushing a little.

"'Arre ye watchin' the strike?' s'y House. 'Half a millyun votes might be useful,' says House, tiptoein' o through the dure, an' closin' ut behin him.

"Well, Sir, he left Wudthrow sun. in profound midlitashun. At last he spakes. 'I hear,' he says, in a low sweet tone 'that v'ice iv the people, which is to me as the v'ice of a Carnegie Penshun.' 'Oh,' he says thrillin' in ivry nerve, 'must I indade sacryfice wan more idol,' says he, 'on the altar iv me Counthry!' says Wudthrow.

"'Was not the Wan Turn Plank,' he says; 'an' the Sugar Tax,' he says 'an' the Tariff for Rev'noo,' he says; 'an' all me friends, beside' says he, 'sixteen per'fly good Mexie n Policies —was not all thim enough' he axes in agony. 'But I will purge me Heart iv ivry pers'nal, t'ought,' says he, startin' for bed. An' before he retires, he takes a Heart Purge iv his own invinshun the way it 'll wurk while he sleeps. I dinnaw f'what the purge is. 'Tis a secret.

"In the morn h as puzzled. He wanted a gr-reat sacryfise of a pur-rinciple, dear to his heart, but he'd used most iv thim already, an' he felt that this was no time for second hand or slightly damaged sacryfises. So he sends for House. 'Colonel,' says he, 'F'what pur-rinciple d'yr think wud be an' acceptable sacryfise in this gr-reat morel imare ncy?' he axes anxiously.

"'Whisper,' says the Colonel. And he said wan wurd in Wudthrow's ear, and faded silently away through the dure.

"For wan instant Wudthrow stud spellbound. Thin he burrst into a whoop; 'The 'Ram in the Bushes,' cries he wid tears iv j'y.

"T'was an' impressive ceremony whin the sacryfise was solemny-ised at the Capitol.

"The procission started f'om the White House wid the Prisidint walkin' ahead carryin' the Ram in wan hand an' a box iv Safety-First matches in th' other. He was followed by a coon beanin' four gold pans, and behind came four Union Chiefs ridin' on milk white steeds followed be a group iv Railroad Prisidints, Stock Holders, Farmers, Shippers and Consumers, loaded wid chains. After a short sermon to Congress on 'Purgin' the Heart,' the Prisidint laid the Ram on th' altar, an' impressively stabbed it wid the four gold pens while the choir sang Holy, Holy, Holy. The Prisidint handed the gold pens to the four chiefs wid a bow; Jim Ham lit the wood an' wiped up the blood, an' the sacryfise was complete.

"'What was the Ram?' say ye. 'Twas a pet baste Wudthrow used to graze in the White House lawn. T'was th' Idol iv his heart. He named it Arbitrashun. It was the Ram, an' all the people was the goat."

LABOR VOTE NOT DELIVERABLE.

This Is the Outstanding Fact Which Political Philosophers Deduce From the Defeat in Maine of Representative McGillicuddy.

From among the numerous lessons or conclusions which the political philosophers can draw from the Maine election one lesson or conclusion stands out more sharply defined than any other. It jumps at you.

The labor vote, for the sake of which the Politicon Congress tarred and feathered itself with its own hands only a dozen days ago, is not deliverable by the traders who pretended to sell it.

This salient fact of the election is illustrated conspicuously in the Second Congress district. There are few places within the confines of our republic where labor is relatively stronger than in the city of Lewiston, the home city of Representative McGillicuddy, and he has made a specialty of it in his own political practice. In the Second Maine, if anywhere, we should be indications of any return in the shape of votes, for the surrender of Congress to the four Brotherhood leaders. After a campaign which might almost be called desperate in its effort to save McGillicuddy and one Democratic seat in the House from the Republican onset, Mr McGillicuddy was defeated by an adverse plurality of nearly 400, whereas he had been elected to the Sixty-second Congress by a plurality of 1,389 and to the Sixty-third by 1,281.

NOT AN EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Recent Hold-Up Legislation Does Not Shorten Workday a Minute.

As a matter of fact, it is not an eight-hour law at all. It does not curtail the trainmen's workday by a single minute. If an engineer has been receiving $5 for working ten hours a day, this law will raise his pay to $6.25; but it will not shorten his workday even the tenth part of a second. This is no more like the true eight-hour principle than chalk is like cheese.

The reason why people call this an eight-hour law is because it says that in the case of railroad trainmen they shall get their day's pay for the first eight hours' work, and all the rest is to be considered overtime.

Do not tell me that this strike could not have been called off or postponed if President Wilson had shown that he meant business. I do not for one minute believe that those four brotherhood leaders started the blaze going without knowing how to put it out. One of them admitted that he could put it out so far as his own brotherhood was concerned, but that his followers would think that he had gone back on them if he were to do so.—Statement of Congressman A. P. Gardner.

EUROPE'S WAR PROVES PROTECTION IS RIGHT

Elihu Root Shows That the Republican Party's Cardinal Principle Has Won the Only Decisive Battle of the Contest.

WE PROSPER BECAUSE THE HOME MARKET IS OUR OWN

When Peace Comes and Foreign Commercial Confederations Look Hungrily Toward America, We Shall Deserve What Happens to Us If Provision Is Not Made Against Disaster by a Tariff Quite Different From the Underwood Folly.

There is one particular subject with which the United States must deal in order to meet the revulsion in production and trade which will accompany the close of the great war. That is the Tariff. I think there is very general agreement upon that. When the demand for supplies to the armies in the field has ended great numbers of men will return to productive employment in Europe and great numbers of operatives will be thrown out of employment here and will have to find other work. Europe will have little money and be heavily in debt. She will be under strong compulsion to pay her debts by making and selling goods. She will be on a basis of strict economy and high organization and she can make and sell cheaply. The United States will have an abundance of money and vast purchasing power. Our market has always been attractive to European producers. It will be far more attractive after the war. It is highly probable that even England will resort to a protective tariff, so that our production will meet protective barriers in all foreign markets. What are we going to do then? We must do something. We must protect ourselves or we shall become the dumping ground of the world and our workmen will beg in the streets.

Even the Democrats have seen that something must be done, for they have provided a tariff board to ascertain and report the true facts to which a tariff law is to be applied. In Mr. Taft's Administration the Republicans provided for a tariff board to report to the President and it was appointed and doing excellent work. When the Democratic House elected in 1910 came in they starved it out of existence by refusing appropriations. In the last session of the 61st Congress the Republicans passed through both Houses a new bill for a tariff board to report to Congress. There were some slight differences of detail in the two Houses which were agreed upon in conference, but the Democrats filibustered against the final conference report and so killed the bill. So the tariff board was dead—slain by the Democratic party. It has now been resurrected by that party because they see that something must be done about the tariff when the war closes. Now, we can all understand that if the they may put the making of it in the hands of the Democratic party But, can any sane man contemplate that party making a protective tariff? In the first place they can't do it honestly. They don't believe in it. They were born and bred in a different faith. They have been crying so long that protection is an abuse of power and an abomination that they can't reconcile themselves to a protective tariff, and they regard the Underwood tariff as a model. That is what we are to have if the Democrats go back. The Underwood tariff still, with perhaps here and there a slight modification regarding dye stuffs and some other articles which can be shown to gentlemen from Missouri and elsewhere. Well, if there ever was a clumsy, ill conceived misfit law, it is the tariff which bears Mr. Underwood's name. We had already discovered what its effect was when the war in Europe began.

Many mills and factories were closed or running but a part of the time. Great numbers of laborers were thrown out of employment and the market for American products was still further reduced by the destruction of their purchasing power. Enterprise halted, discouraged and apprehensive of the future. New enterprises were no longer attempted. Old plants were no longer enlarged. The Underwood tariff had already failed when the war in Europe began. That war furnished and continues to furnish to American production the most absolute protection because it has to so great a degree stopped production in Europe. So long as the war lasts our producers have practically no competition in our home market, for Europe does not make the goods to sell here. At the same time, while the war lasts our producers have an enormous market in Europe for the things that Europe can't produce in sufficient quantities. When the war is over that condition will cease, and we shall deserve what happens to us if we do not provide against that time by a tariff quite different from the Underwood tariff and made by men who do not consider a tariff for revenue only an article of religious faith.—From the speech of Elihu Root delivered at Carnegie Hall, New York City, October 5, 1916.

One thing we must all admit. The President is never too proud to sidestep.

A surplus of $5,200,000 from the postal service during the fiscal year ending June 30, is reported by Postmaster-General Burleson. With the department more than paying expenses, it would seem that the executive officials could afford to keep on the payroll members of the National Guard, who responded when the President called out the Organized Militia for duty on the border.

President Wilson seems to have founded his diplomacy on a rock which is off its base most of the time.

The Eastern witsmiths persist in referring to the Secretary of the Navy as Miss Josephine Daniels. No wonder the Woman's Party is camping on the trail of the Administration!

Mr. Wilson forgot to mention the pledges of economy in the 1912 platform.

"In his diplomacy," says Ollie James, "the President has sounded a new note." What, another one?

"Let Ray and Ruth think Lawson shot you. He's dead; it can't matter. Duane, the old side of my life is coming back. It's been coming. It'll be here just about when she enters this room. And, by God, I'd change places with Lawson if I could!"

"Glad you—said that, Longstreth," replied Duane. "And sure—Lawson plugged me. It's our secret."

Just then Ray and Ruth entered the room. Duane heard two low cries, so different in tone, and he saw two white faces. Ray came to his side. She lifted a shaking hand to point at the blood upon his breast. White and mute, she gazed from that to her father.

"Papa!" cried Ray, wring her hands "Don't give way," he replied, huskily. "Both you girls will need your nerve. Duane isn't badly hurt, but Floyd is—is dead. Listen. Let me tell it quick. There's been a fight. It—it was Lawson—it was Lawson's gun that shot Duane. Duane let me off. In fact, Ray, he saved me. I'm to divide my property—return so far as possible what I've stolen—leave Texas at once with Duane, under arrest. He says maybe he can get MacNelly, the ranger captain, to let me go. For your sake!"

She stood there, realizing her deliverance, with the dark and tragic glory of her eyes passing from her father to Duane.

"You must rise above this," said Duane to her. "I expected this to ruin you. But your father is alive, he will live it down. I'm sure I can promise you he'll be free. Perhaps back there in Louisiana the dishonor will never be known. This country is far from your old home. And even in San Antonio and Austin a man's evil repute means little. Then the line between a rustler and a rancher is hard to draw in these wild border days. Rustling is stealing cattle, and I once heard a well known rancher say that all rich cattlemen had done a little stealing. Your father drifted out here, and, like a good many others, he succeeded. It's perhaps just as well not to split hairs, to judge him by the law and morality of a civilized country. Some way or other he drifted in with bad men. Maybe a deal that was honest somehow tied his hands. This matter of land, water, a few stray head of stock had to be decided out of court. I'm sure in his case he never realized where he was drifting. Then one thing led to another, until he was face to face with dealing that took on crooked form. To protect himself he bound men to him. And so the gang developed. Many powerful gangs have developed that way out here. He could not control them. He became involved with them. And eventually their dealing became deliberately and boldly dishonest. That meant the inevitable spilling of blood sooner or later, and so he grew into the leader because he was the strongest. Whatever he is to be judged for, I think he could have been infinitely worse."

CHAPTER XXIV

On the morning of the 26th Duane rode into Bradford in time to catch the early train. His wounds did not seriously incapacitate him. Longstreth was with him. And Miss Longstreth and Ruth Herbert would not be left behind. They were all leaving Fairdale forever. Longstreth had turned over the whole of his property to Morton, who was to divide it as he and his comrades believed just. Duane had left Fairdale with his party by night, passed through Sanderson in the early hours of dawn, and reached Bradford as he had planned.

That fateful morning found Duane outwardly calm, but inwardly he was in a tumult. He wanted to rush to Val Verde. Would Captain MacNelly be there with his rangers, as Duane had planned for them to be? Memory of that tawny Poggin returned with strange passion. Duane had borne hours and weeks and months of waiting, had endured the long hours of the outlaw, but now he had no patience. The whistle of the train made him leap.

It was a fast train, yet the ride seemed slow.

Duane, disliking to face Longstreth and the passengers in the car, changed his seat to one behind his prisoner. They had seldom spoken The girls sat in a seat near by and were pale but composed. Occasionally the train halted briefly at a station. The latter half of that ride Duane had observed a wagon road running parallel with the railroad, sometimes right alongside, at others near or far away. When the train was about 20 miles from Val Verde Duane espied a dark group of horsemen trotting eastward. His blood beat like a hammer at his temples. The gang! He thought he recognized the tawny Poggin and felt a strange inward contraction. He thought he recognized the clean cut Blossom Kane, the black bearded giant Boldt, the red faced Panhandle Smith, and Fletcher. There was another man strange to him. Was that Knell? No! it could not have been Knell.

Duane leaned over the seat and touched Longstreth on the shoulder.

"Look!" he whispered. Cheseldine was stiff. He had already seen.

The train flashed by; the outlaw gang receded out of range of sight.

"Did you notice Knell wasn't with them?" whispered Duane.

Duane did not speak to Longstreth again till the train stopped at Val Verde.

They got off the car, and the girls followed as naturally as ordinary travelers. The station was a good deal larger than that at Bradford, and there was considerable action and bustle incident to the arrival of the train.

Duane's sweeping gaze searched faces, rested upon a man who seemed familiar. This fellow's look, too, was that of one who knew Duane, but was waiting for a sign, a cue. Then Duane recognized him — MacNelly, clean shaven. Without mustache he appeared different, younger.

When MacNelly saw that Duane intended to greet him, to meet him, he hurried forward. A keen light flashed from his eyes. He was glad, eager, yet suppressing himself, and the glances he sent back and forth from Duane to Longstreth were questioning, doubtful. Certainly Longstreth did not look the part of an outlaw.

"Duane! Lord, I'm glad to see you," was the captain's greeting. Then at closer look into Duane's face his warmth fled—something he saw there checked his enthusiasm, or at least its utterance.

"MacNelly, shake hands with Cheseldine," said Duane, low voiced.

The ranger captain stood dumb, motionless. But he saw Longstreth's instant action, and awkwardly he reached for the outstretched hand.

"Any of your men down here?" queried Duane, sharply.

"No. They're up town."

"Come. MacNelly, you walk with him. We've ladies in the party. I'll come behind with them."

They set off up town. Longstreth walked as if he were with friends on the way to dinner. The girls were mute. MacNelly walked like a man in a trance. There was not a word spoken in four blocks.

Presently Duane espied a stone building on a corner of the broad street. There was a big sign, "Rancher's Bank."

"There's the hotel," said MacNelly. "Some of my men are there. We've scattered around."

They crossed the street, went through office and lobby, and then Duane asked MacNelly to take them to a private room. Without a word, the captain complied. When they were all inside, Duane closed the door, and, drawing a deep breath as if of relief, he faced them calmly.

"Miss Longstreth, you and Miss Ruth try to make yourselves comfortable now," he said. "And don't be distressed." Then he turned to his captain. "MacNelly, this girl is the daughter of the man I've brought to you, and this one is his niece."

Then Duane briefly related Longstreth's story and, though he did not spare the rustler chief, he was generous.

"When I went after Longstreth," concluded Duane, "it was either to kill him or offer him freedom on conditions. So I chose the latter, for his daughter's sake. He has already disposed of all his property I believe he'll live up to the conditions. He's to leave Texas never to return. The name Cheseldine has been a mystery, and now it'll fade."

A few moments later Duane followed MacNelly to a large room, like a hall, and here were men reading and smoking. Duane knew them—rangers!

MacNelly beckoned to his men.

"Boys, here he is."

"How many men have you?" asked Duane.

"Fifteen."

MacNelly almost embraced Duane, would probably have done so but for the dark grimness that seemed to be coming over the man. Instead he glowed, he sputtered, he tried to talk, to wave his hands. He was beside himself. And his rangers crowded closer, eager, like hounds ready to run. They all talked at once, and the word most significant and frequent in their speech was "outlaws."

MacNelly clapped his fist in his hand. "This'll make the adjutant sick with joy. Maybe we won't have it on the governor! We'll show them about the ranger service. Duane! how'd you ever do it?"

"Now, captain, not the half nor the quarter of this job's done. The gang's coming down the road I saw them from the train. They'll ride into town on the dot—2 30."

"How many?" asked MacNelly.

"Poggin, Blossom Kane, Panhandle Smith, Boldt, Jim Fletcher, and another man I don't know. These are the picked men of Cheseldine's gang. I'll bet they will be the fastest, hardest bunch you rangers ever faced."

"Poggin—that's the hard nut to crack! I've heard their records since I've been in Val Verde. Where's Knell? They say he's a boy, but hell and blazes!"

"Knell's dead."

"Ah!" exclaimed MacNelly, softly. Then he grew business like, cool, and of harder aspect. "Duane, it's your game today. I'm only a ranger under orders. We're all under your orders. We've absolute faith in you. Make your plan quick, so I can go around and post the boys who are not here."

"You understand there's no sense in trying to arrest Poggin, Kane, and that lot?" queried Duane.

"No, I don't understand that," replied MacNelly, bluntly.

"It can't be done. The drop can't be got on such men. If you meet them they shoot, and mighty quick and straight. Poggin! That outlaw has no equal with a gun—unless— He's got to be killed quick. They'll all have to be killed. They're all bad, desperate, know no fear, are lightning in action."

"Very well, Duane; then it's a fight. That'll be easier, perhaps. The boys are spoiling for a fight. Out with your plan, now."

"Put one man at each end of this street, just at the edge of town. Let him hide there with a rifle to block the escape of any outlaw that we might fail to get. I had a good look at the bank building. It's well situated for our purpose. Put four men up in that room over the bank—four men, two at each open window. Let them hide till the game begins. They want to be there so in case these foxy outlaws get wise before they're down on the ground or inside the bank. The rest of your men put inside behind the counters, where they'll hide. Now go over to the bank, spring the thing on the bank officials, and don't let them shut up the bank. You want their aid. Let them make sure of their gold. But the clerks and cashier ought to be at their desks or window when Poggin rides up. He'll glance in before he gets down. They make no mistakes, these fellows. You must be slicker than they are, or lose. When you get the bank people wise, send your men over one by one. No hurry, no excitement, no unusual thing to attract notice in the bank."

"All right. That's great. Tell me, where do you intend to wait?"

Duane heard MacNelly's question and it struck him peculiarly. He had seemed to be planning and speaking mechanically. As he was confronted by the fact it nonplussed him somewhat, and he became thoughtful, with lowered head.

"Where'll you wait?" insisted MacNelly, with keen eyes speculating.

"I'll wait in front—just inside the door," replied Duane, with an effort.

"Why?" demanded the captain.

"Well," began Duane, slowly. "Poggin will get down first and start in. But the others won't be far behind. They'll not get swift till inside. The thing is—they mustn't get clear inside, because the instant they do they'll pull guns. That means death to somebody. If we can, we want to stop them just at the door."

"But will you hide?" asked MacNelly.

"Hide!" The idea had not occurred to Duane.

"There's a wide open doorway, a sort of round hall, a vestibule, with steps leading up to the bank. There's a door in the vestibule, too. It leads somewhere. We can put men in there. You can be there."

Duane was silent.

"See here, Duane," began MacNelly nervously; "you sha'n't take any undue risk here. You'll hide with the rest of us?"

"No!" The word was wrenched from Duane.

MacNelly stared, and then a strange, comprehending light seemed to flit over his face.

"Duane, I can give you no orders today," he said, distinctly. "I am only offering advice. Need you take any more risks? You've done a grand job for the service—already. You've paid me 1,000 times for that pardon. You've redeemed yourself. The governor, the adjutant general—the whole state will rise up and honor you The game's almost up. We'll kill these outlaws, or enough of them to break forever their power. I say, as a ranger, need you take more risk than your captain?"

Still Duane remained silent. He was locked between two forces. And one, a tide that was bursting at its bounds, seemed about to overwhelm him. Finally that side of him, the retreating self, the weaker, found a voice.

"Captain, you want this job to be sure?" he asked.

"Certainly."

"I've told you the way. I alone know the kind of men to be met. Just what I'll do or where I'll be I can't say yet. In meetings like this the moment decides. But I'll be there!"

MacNelly spread wide his hands, looked helplessly at his curious and sympathetic rangers, and shook his head.

"Now that you've done your work—laid the trap—is this strange move of yours going to be fair to Miss Longstreth?" asked MacNelly, in significant low voice.

Like a great tree chopped at the roots Duane vibrated to that. He looked up as if he had seen a ghost.

Mercilessly the ranger captain went on: "You can win her, Duane! Oh, you can't fool me; I was wise in a minute. Fight with us from cover—then go back to her. You will have served the Texas rangers as no other man has. I'll accept your resignation. You'll be free, honored, happy. That girl loves you! I saw it in her eyes. She's—"

But Duane cut him short with a fierce gesture. He lunged up to his feet, and the rangers fell back. Dark, silent, grim as he had been, still there was a transformation singularly more sinister, stranger.

"Enough. I'm done," he said, somberly. "I've planned. Do we agree—or shall I meet Poggin and his gang alone?"

MacNelly cursed and again threw up his hands, this time in baffled chagrin. There was deep regret in his dark eyes as they rested upon Duane.

Duane was left alone.

Never had his mind been so quick, so clear, so wonderful in its understanding of what had heretofore been intricate and elusive impulses of his strange nature. His determination was to meet Poggin; meet him before any one else had a chance—Poggin first—and then the others! He was as unalterable in that decision as if on the instant of its acceptance he had become stone.

Why? Then came realization. He was not a ranger now. He cared nothing for the state. He had no thought of freeing the community of a dangerous outlaw, of ridding the country of an obstacle to its progress and prosperity. He wanted to kill Poggin. It was significant now that he forgot the other outlaws. He was the gunman, the gun thrower, the gun fighter, passionate and terrible. His father's blood, that dark and fierce strain; his mother's spirit, that strong and unquenchable spirit of the surviving pioneer—these had been in him; and the killings, one after another, the wild and haunted years, had made him, absolutely in spite of his will, the gunman. He realized it now, bitterly, hopelessly The thing he had intelligence enough to hate he had become. At last he shuddered under the driving, ruthless, inhuman blood lust of the gunman. Long ago he had seemed to seal in a tomb that horror of his kind—the need, in order to forget the haunting, sleepless presence of his last victim, to go out and kill another. But it was still there in his mind, and now it stalked out, worse, more powerful, magnified by its rest, augmented by the violent passions peculiar and inevitable to that strange, wild product of the Texas frontier—the gun fighter. And those passions were so violent, so raw, so base, so much lower than what ought to have existed in a thinking man. Actual pride of his record! Actual vanity in his speed with a gun! Actual jealousy of any rival!

Duane could not believe it. But there he was, without a choice. What he had feared for years had become a monstrous reality. Respect for himself, blindness, a certain honor that he had clung to while in outlawry—all, like scales, seemed to fall away from him. He stood stripped bare, his soul naked—the soul of Cain. Always since the first brand had been forced and burned upon him he had been ruined. But now with conscience flayed to the quick, yet utterly powerless over this tiger instinct, he was lost. He said it. He admitted it. And at the utter abasement the soul he despised suddenly leaped and quivered with the thought of Ray Longstreth.

Then came agony. As he could not govern all the chances of this fatal meeting—as all his swift and deadly genius must be occupied with Poggin, perhaps in vain—as hard shooting men whom he could not watch would be close behind, this almost certainly must be the end of Buck Duane. That did not matter. But he loved the girl. He wanted her. All her sweetness, her fire, and pleading returned to torture him.

At that moment the door opened, and Ray Longstreth entered.

"Duane," she said, softly. "Captain MacNelly sent me to you."

"But you shouldn't have come," replied Duane.

"As soon as he told me I would have come whether he wished it or not. You left me—all of us—stunned. I had no time to thank you. Oh, I do—with all my soul. It was noble of you. Father is overcome. He didn't expect so much. And he'll be true. But, Duane, I was told to hurry, and here I'm selfishly using time."

"Go, then—and leave me. You mustn't unnerve me now, when there's a desperate game to finish."

"Need it be desperate?" she whispered, coming close to him.

"Yes; it can't be else."

MacNelly had sent her to weaken him; of that Duane was sure. And he felt that she had wanted to come. Her eyes were dark, strained, beautiful, and they shed a light upon Duane he had never seen before.

"You're going to take some mad risk," she said. "Let me persuade you not to. You said—you cared for me—and I—oh, Duane—don't you—know—?"

The low voice, deep, sweet as an old chord, faltered and broke and failed.

Duane sustained a sudden shock and an instant of paralyzed confusion of thought.

She moved, she swept out her hands, and the wonder of her eyes dimmed in a flood of tears.

"My God! You can't care for me?" he cried, hoarsely.

Then she met him, hands outstretched.

"But I do—I do!"

Swift as light Duane caught her and held her to his breast. He stood holding her tight, with the feel of her warm, throbbing breast and the clasp of her arms as flesh and blood realities to fight a terrible fear. He felt her, and for the moment the might of it was stronger than all the demons that possessed him. And he held her as if she had been his soul, his strength on earth, his hope of heaven, against his lips.

The strife of doubt all passed. He found his sight again. And there rushed over him a tide of emotion unutterably sweet and full, strong like an intoxicating wine, deep as his nature, something glorious and terrible as the blaze of the sun to one long in darkness. He had become an outcast, a wanderer, a gunman, a victim of circumstances, he had lost and suffered worse than death in that loss; he had gone down the endless bloody trail, a killer of men, a fugitive whose mind slowly and inevitably closed to all except the instinct to survive and a black despair; and now, wth this woman in his arms, her swelling breast against his, in this moment almost of resurrection, he bent under the storm of passion and joy possible only to him who had endured so much.

"Do you care—a little?" he whispered, unsteadily.

He bent over her, looking deep into the dark wet eyes.

She uttered a low laugh that was half sob, and her arms slipped up to his neck.

"A little! Oh, Duane—Duane—a great deal!"

Their lips met in their first kiss. The sweetness, the fire of her mouth seemed so new, so strange, so irresistible to Duane. His sore and hungry heart throbbed with thick and heavy beats. He felt the outcast's need of love. And he gave up to the enthralling moment. She met him half way, returned kiss for kiss, clasp for clasp, her face scarlet, her eyes closed, till, her passion and strength spent, she fell back upon his shoulder.

Duane suddenly thought she was going to faint. He divined then that she had understood him, would have denied him nothing, not even her life, in that moment. But she was overcome, and he suffered a pang of regret at his unrestraint.

Presently she recovered, and she drew only the closer, and leaned upon him with her face upturned. He felt her hands on his, and they were soft, clinging, strong, like steel under velvet. He felt the rise and fall, the warmth of her breast. A tremor ran over him. He tried to draw back, and if he succeeded a little her form swayed with him, pressing closer. She held her face up, and he was compelled to look. It was wonderful now. white, yet glowing, with the red lips parted, and dark eyes alluring. But that was not all. There was passion, unquenchable spirit, woman's resolve deep and mighty.

"I love you, Duane'" she said. "For my sake don't go out to meet this outlaw face to face. It's something wild in you. Conquer it if you love me."

Duane became suddenly weak, and when he did take her into his arms again he scarcely had strength to lift her to a seat beside him. She seemed more than a dead weight. Her calmness had fled. She was throbbing, palpitating, quivering, with hot wet cheeks and arms that clung to him like vines. She lifted her mouth to him, whispering, "Kiss me!" She meant to change him, hold him.

Duane bent down, and her arms went round his neck and drew him close. With his lips on hers he seemed to float away. That kiss closed his eyes, and he could not lift his head. He sat motionless, holding her, blind and helpless, wrapped in a sweet dark glory She kissed him—one long endless kiss—or else 1,000 times. Her lips, her wet cheeks, her hair, the softness, the fragrance of her, the tender clasp of her arms, the swell of her breast—all these seemed to inclose him.

Duane could not put her from him. He yielded to her lips and arms, watching her, involuntarily returning her caresses, sure now of her intent, fascinated by the sweetness of her, bewildered, almost lost. This was what it was to be loved by a woman. His years of outlawry had blotted out any boyish love he might have known. This was what he had to give up—all this wonder of her sweet person, this strange fire he feared yet loved, this mate his deep and tortured soul recognized. Never until that moment had he devined the meaning of a woman to a man. That meaning was physical inasmuch that he learned what beauty was, what marvel in the touch of quickening flesh; and it was spiritual in that he saw there might have been for him, under happier circumstances, a life of noble deeds lived for such a woman.

"Don't go! Don't go!" she cried, as he started violently.

"I must. Dear, goodby. Remember I loved you!"

He pulled her hands loose from his stepped back.

"Ray, dearest—I believe—I'll come back!" he whispered.

These last words were falsehood.

He reached the door, gave her one last piercing glance, to fix for ever in memory that white face with its dark, staring, tragic eyes.

"Duane!"

He fled with that moan like thunder, death, hell in his ears.

To forget her, to get back his nerve, he forced into mind the imagine of Poggin—Poggin, the tawny haired, the yellow eyed, like a jaguar, with his rippling muscles. He brought back his supreme test. And this abnormal and st sense of the outlaw's wonderful presence, his own unaccountable fear and hate. Yes, Poggin had sent the cold sickness of fear to his marrow. Why, since he hated life so? Poggin was his supreme test. And this abnormal and stupendous instinct, now deep as the very foundation of life, demanded its wild and fatal issue. There was a horrible thrill in his sudden remembrance that Poggin likewise had been taunted in fear of him.

So the dark tide overwhelmed Duane, and when he left the room he was fierce, implacable, steeled to any outdeath, in the thrall of his strange passion.

There was no excitement in the street. He crossed to the bank corner. A clock inside pointed the hour of 2. He went through the door into the vestibule, looked around, passed up the steps into the bank. The clerks were at their desks, apparently busy. But they showed nervousness. The cashier paled at sight of Duane. There were men—the rangers—crouching down behind the low partition. All the windows had been removed from the iron grating before the desks. A customer came in, spoke to the cashier, and was told to come tomorrow.

JAPAN WILL HELP CHINA

Will Float Big Loan Chinese Financiers Failed to Get in This Country.

Japan is preparing to lend $30,000,000 to China. This is the result of the failure of China to float a loan in New York. Like ourselves, the Japanese have made money out of the war and are able to extend credit to other countries This loan will strengthen Japan's influence in China, but we have no right to object. We would not help China. Those who say Japan will dominate China and that trade will follow money are probably right. We can learn something from Japan.

Just as China is within Japan's sphere of influence so is all Latin America within our sphere of influence. We have no designs on our neighbors other than our desire to trade with them and to have peace in this hemisphere. Most of the Latin-American republics need money quite as much as China does. We have more available capital than any other country, perhaps more than all other nations combined. The United States is the only place where sufficient money can be found at present to meet the requirements of Latin America. If we invest money we will secure trade just as we expect Japan to do in China. Instead of weeping about lost opportunities in the Orient let us improve our own in the Americas. No complications with other Great Powers about open doors and spheres of influence need be feared in this hemisphere and our exporters will find fewer difficulties in the languages and trade customs. Losing a chance in China is a good reason for not losing others in the Americas.—New York Commercial.

Couldn't Fool Hiram.

"Look here, Hiram," said Si, "when are you going to pay me that eight dollars for pasturin' your heifer? I've had her now for about ten weeks."

"Why, Si, that critter ain't worth more than ten dollars."

"Well, suppose I keep her for what you owe me?"

"Not by a jugful! Tell you what I'll do; you keep her for two weeks more and you can have her."

Serving a Purpose.

"Doesn't it make you indignant for shout at your boys for disturbing him?"

"It used to," replied the placid woman, "but he doesn't any more. You have no idea how he amuses the children."

Dark Accusation.

"Did you see where a man somewhere accused his wife in court of lighting the gas with two-dollar bills?"

"Well, I don't blame him for getting mad, if she made light of his earnings that way."

Open and Shut.

"Is there an opening here for a bright, energetic young man?"

"Yes; an' close it as you go out."—Judge.

Chauffeur to Joffre.

The Poilu, a lively little newspaper produced in the French trenches, prints this Joffre story:

The generallissimo's chauffeur L——, was chatting with some soldiers.

"Well," they asked him, "what does the general say?"

"Oh, not much; he talks very little."

"But yes—"

"Well, the other day, for instance, in getting into the car, he said: 'Things all right, L——?' 'Yes, general,' I replied."

"And was that all he said?"

"Another time he said to me. 'You have a very pleasing appearance, L——.' 'Yes, general,' I replied."

"But does he never speak about the war?"

"Oh, not often. But yet—the other day he did say to me: 'Ah, my brave L——, when is this war going to end?'"

A Broad Hint.

There was a pretty girl at Brighton to whom a young man was saying good-by.

"Good-by," he said. "Good-by. Tomorrow we shall be miles and miles apart."

The girl looked at the blue sea, and her lip curled.

"Miles and miles, eh?" she said. "Well, we're not very close now."—London Opinion.

Hiding Her Light.

"I notice that your initials are A. B. But why do you always restrict your signature to your initials?"

"My name is rather conspicuous," faltered the girl.

"And what is your first name?"

"Aurora."

"That's a pretty name. Nothing to be ashamed of in that. And what is your middle name?"

"Borealis."

Exactly So.

"How much did the old miser leave behind him?"

"Everything he had."

ie De Marco and Three Others Captured Following Holdup and Murder In New Jersey.

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.—Subjected to e third degree at detective headquarrs for hours, Lillie De Marco, the al-year old girl chief of a band of bbers who yesterday held up the au-bile of A. J. Rider, president of the w Jersey Cranberry Growers' asso-ation at Athion, N. J., a desolate t 10 miles from Hammonton, N. J., wounded him, his daughter and an-her man and killed his brother, Hen-B. Rider, of Howell, Mich., made mazing admissions at noon today, cording to Captain Tate, of the de-ctive bureau.

The girl admitted that she and three en companions had motored from this ty and were at Athion, N. J., at the me of the shooting. She admitted she e had heard several shots after the hauffeur of the automobile had stopped is car not far from the spot where a umber of men, said to have been asked, held up Rider's car in an at-empt to steal the pay roll of $5,000 be-ng taken to the 300 employes at Rid-r's cranberry bogs.

Guiseppo Russo, an intimate friend f the De Marco girl, the police say, rank Vessela, the chauffeur and Frank adona, the three other prisoners held connection with the crime were multaneously grilled today and admitted ey had taken an early morning ride rom this city to Hammonton. They lso admitted they had been at the pot indicated by the DeMarco girl.

The circumstances of the tracing and apture in this city read like fiction. Following the hold up, the bandits dis-ppeared into the woods, where they are said to have hidden their automo-ile. Fate decreed that one of the li-ense tags should fall from the car as hey fled. This was recovered by a cit-zen and turned over to detectives who arrived on the scene from Mount Holly, N. J. The Philadelphia police, with this clue, made the arrest late last night.

PEACE TALK IS REVIVED

Gerard on Way From Berlin With Request to Wilson to Use Good Offices, Is Report.

New York, Oct. 6.—The New York Evening Post today publishes a story saying that it has been learned from a trustworthy source that Ambassador James W. Gerard, now on his way back from Germany, will lay before President Wilson a request that the president use his good offices in suing for peace with the allies.

"Germany has definitely decided to apply to President Wilson," the article reads, "to use his good offices in suing for peace with the allies. This was learned today from sources in a position to have absolutely trustworthy information on these matters.

"It is understood that Ambassador James W. Gerard, who is on his way over here, will lay the kaiser's request before President Wilson within a week. * * * It is a fact, however positively it may have been denied officially, that the possibility of President Wilson acting as mediator has been discussed by German officials with Ambassador Gerard. It is therefore by no means surprising that the reports now take definite shape in connection with Mr. Gerard's trip to this country."

Ambassador Gerard is on board the steamship Frederik VIII, due in New York about Tuesday next.

McCORMICK IS SUED BY JEREMIAH O'LEARY

Head of Truth Society Would Find Out If "Hyphenate" Is Libelous Term.

New York, Oct. 7.—Vance C. McCormick, chairman of the democratic national committee, announced that he had been served with a summons of a suit of $50,000 brought against him by Jeremiah A. O'Leary, president of the American Truth society. Mr. McCormick said he had not been apprised, however, of the charges upon which the suit was based.

Mr. O'Leary declared that he instituted the action to find out first whether hyphenism, as it is called, is libelous and, second, whether it is consistent with Americanism.

Mr. O'Leary said he resented a statement attributed to Mr. McCormick criticising him for sending an "insulting message" to President Wilson. In that message Mr. O'Leary criticised the president for not enforcing American rights against Great Britain, and informed Mr. Wilson that he would not vote for the reelection of the president. Mr. Wilson replied that he would "feel deeply mortified to have you (Mr. O'Leary) or anybody like you, vote for me," adding: "since you have access to many disloyal Americans and I have not I will ask you to convey this message to them."

BOARD IS FAVORABLE

Washington, D. C., Oct. 6.—That the new eight-hour commission named by President Wilson will make the most favorable report possible on workings of the law is the comment here. General Goethals, before congress acted, issued an eight-hour order for canal zone trainmen. Interstate Commerce Commissioner Clark, an Iowa man, was grand chief of the conductors, and George Ruble is an administration man.

THE BEST MAN

CHAPTER I.

Cyril Gordon had been seated at his desk but 10 minutes and was deep in the morning's mail when there came an urgent message from his chief, summoning him to an immediate audience in the inner office.

The chief had keen blue eyes and shaggy eyebrows. He never wasted words; yet these words when spoken had more weight than of most other men in Washington

There was the briefest of good-morning gleams in his nod and glance, but he only said

"Gordon, can you take the Pennsylvania train for New York that leaves the station in 32 minutes?"

The young man was used to abrupt questions from his chief, but he caught his breath, mentally surveying his day as it had been planned

"Why, sir, I suppose I could—if it is necessary——" He hesitated.

"It is necessary," said the chief curtly, as if that settled the matter

"But—half an hour!" ejaculated Gordon in dismay. "I could hardly get to my rooms and back to the station. I don't see how—— Isn't there a train a little later?"

"Later train won't do. Call up your man on the 'phone. Tell him to pack your bag and meet you at the station in 20 minutes. You'll need evening clothes. Can you depend on your man to get your things quickly without fail?"

There was that in the tone of the chief that caused Gordon to make no further demur.

"Sure!" he responded with his usual business like tone, as he strode to the 'phone. His daze was passing off. "Evening clothes?" he questioned curiously, as if he might not have heard aright.

"Yes, evening clothes," was the curt answer, "and everything you'll need for daytime for a respectable gentleman of leisure—a tourist, you understand."

Gordon perceived that he was being given a mission of trust and importance, not unmixed with mystery perhaps. He was new in the secret service, and it had been his ambition to rise in his chief's good graces. He rang the telephone bell furiously and called up the number of his own apartments, giving his man orders in a breezy, decisive tone that caused a look of satisfaction to settle about the fine wrinkles of the chief's eyes.

Gordon's watch was out and he was telling his man on just what car he must leave the apartments for the station. The chief noted it was two cars ahead of what would have been necessary. His gray head gave an almost imperceptible nod of commendation, and his eyes showed that he was content with his selection of a man

"Now, sir," said Gordon, as he hung up the receiver, "I'm ready for orders."

"Well, you are to go to New York, and take a cab for the Cosmopolis hotel—your room there is already secured by wire. Your name is John Burnham. The name of the hotel and the number of your room are on this memorandum. You will find awaiting you an invitation to dine this evening with a Mr Holman, who knows of you as an expert in code reading. Our men met him on the train an hour ago and arranged that he should invite you. He didn't know whom they represented, of course. He has already tried to 'phone you at the hotel about coming to dinner tonight. He knows you are expected there before evening. Here is a letter of introduction to him from a man he knows. Our men got that also. It is genuine, of course.

"Last night a message of national importance, written in cipher, was stolen from one of our men before it had been read. This is now in the hands of Holman, who is hoping to have you decipher it for him and a few guests who will be present at dinner They wish to use it for their own purposes. Your commission is to get hold of the message and bring it to us as soon as possible. Another message of very different import, written upon the same kind of paper, is in this envelope, with a translation for you to use in case you have to substitute a message You will have to use your own wits and judgment. The main thing is, get the paper, and get back with it, with as little delay as possible. Undoubtedly your life will be in danger should it be discovered that you have made off with it. Spare no care to protect yourself and the message, at all hazards. Remember, I said, and the message, young man! It means much to the country

"In this envelope is money—all you will probably need. Telegraph or 'phone to this address if you are in trouble Draw on us for more, if necessary, also through this same address Here is the code you can use in case you find it necessary to telegraph. Your ticket is already bought. I have sent Clarkson to the station for it, and he will meet you at the train You can give him instructions in case you find you have forgotten anything. Take your mail with you, and telegraph back order to your stenographer. I think that is all. Oh, yes, tonight, while you are at dinner, you will be called to he 'phone by one of our men. If you are in trouble, this may give you opportunity to get away, and put us wise. You will find a motor at the door now, waiting to take you to the station. If your man doesn't get there with your things, take the train, anyway, and buy some more when you get to New York. Don't turn aside from your commission for anything. Don't let anything hinder you! Make it a matter of life and death! Good morning and good luck!"

The chief held out a big, hairy hand that was surprisingly warm and soft considering the hardness of his face and voice, and the young man grasped it, feeling as if he were suddenly being plunged into waves of an unknown depth and he would fain hold to this strong hand.

He went out of the office quietly enough, and the keen old eyes watched him knowingly, understanding the beating of the heart under Gordon's well fitting business coat, the mingled elation and dread over the commission. But there had been no hesitancy, no question of acceptance, when the nature of the commission was made known. The young man was "game." He would do. Not even an eyelash had flickered at the hint of danger. The chief felt he would be faithful even in the face of possible death.

Gordon's man came rushing into the station just after he reached there himself. Clarkson was already there with the ticket. Gordon had time to scribble a message to Julia Bentley, whose perfumed scrawl he had read on the way down. Julia had bidden him to her presence that evening. He could not tell whether he was relieved or sorry to tell her he could not come. It began to look to him a good deal as if he would ask Julia Bentley to marry him some day, when she got tired of playing all the others off against him, and he could make up his mind to surrender his freedom to any woman.

He bought a paper and settled himself comfortably in the parlor car, but his interest was not in the paper. His strange commission engaged all his thoughts. He took out the envelope containing instructions and went over the matter, looking curiously at the cipher message and its translation, which, however, told him nothing It was the old chief's way to keep the business himself until such time as he chose to explain Doubtless it was safer for both message and messenger that he did not know the full import of what he was undertaking

Gordon carefully noted down everything that his chief had told him, comparing it with the written instructions in the envelope, arranged in his mind just how he would proceed when he reached New York, tried to think out a good plan for recovering the stolen message, but could not, and so decided to trust the inspiration of the moment. Then it occurred to him to clear his overcoat pockets of any letters or other telltale articles and stow them in his suit case. He might have to leave his overcoat behind him. So it would be well to have no clues for anyone to follow.

Having arranged these matters, and prepared a few letters with notes for his stenographer, to be mailed back to her from Philadelphia, he reread Julia Bentley's note. When every angular line of her tall script was imprinted on his memory, he tore the perfumed note into tiny pieces and dropped them from the car window

The question was, did he or did he not want to ask Julia Bentley to become his wife? He had no doubt as to what her answer would be. Julia had made it pretty plain to him that she would rather have him than any of her other admirers' though she did like to keep them all attendant upon her Well, that was her right so long as she was unmarried He had no fault to find with her She was a fine girl, and everybody liked her Also, she was of a good family, and with a modest fortune in her own right Everybody was taking it for granted that they liked each other It was time he was married and had a real home, he supposed, whatever that was—that seemed to have so great a charm for all his friends. To his eyes, it had as yet taken on no alluring mirage effect. He had never known a real home, more than his quiet bachelor apartments were to him now, where his man ordered everything as he was told, and the meals were sent up when wanted He had money enough from his inheritance to make things more than comfortable, and he was deeply interested in the profession he had chosen

Still, if he was ever going to marry, it was high time, of course. But did he want Julia? He could not quite make it seem pleasant to think of her in his rooms when he came home at night tired; she would always be wanting to go to her endless theater parties and receptions and dances; always be demanding his attention. She was bright and handsome and well dressed, but he had never made love to her. He could not quite imagine himself doing so. How did men make love, anyway? Could one call it love when it was "made" love? These questions followed one another idly through his brain as the landscape whirled past him. If he had stayed at home he would have spent the evening with Julia, as she requested in her note, and there would probably have been a quiet half-hour after other callers had gone when he would have stayed as he had been doing of late, and tried to find out whether he really cared for her or not.

Suppose, for instance, they were married, and she sat beside him now Would any glad thrill fill his heart as he looked at her beautiful face and realized that she was his? He tried to look over toward the next chair and imagine that the tired, fat old lady with the double chin and the youthful purple hat was Julia, but that would not work. He whirled his chair about and tried it on an empty chair. That went better; but still no thrill of joy lifted him out of his sordid self. He could not help thinking about little trying details. The way Julia looked when she was vexed. Did one mind that in the woman one loved? The way she ordered her coachman about. Would she ever speak so to her husband? She had a charming smile, but her frown was—well—unbecoming to say the least.

He tried to keep up the fallacy of her presence. He bought a magazine that he knew she liked, and read a story to her (in imagination). He could easily tell how her black eyes would snap at certain phrases she disliked. He knew just what her comment would be upon the heroine's conduct. It was an old disputed point between them. He knew how she would criticize the hero, and somehow he felt himself in the hero's place every time she did it. The story had not been a success, and he felt a weariness as he laid the magazine aside at the call for dinner from the dining car.

Before he had finished his luncheon he had begun to feel that though Julia might think now that she would like to marry him, the truth about it was that she would not enjoy the actual life together any better than he would. Were all marriages like that? Did people lose the glamour and just settle down to endure each other's faults and make the most of each other's pleasant side, and not have anything more? Or was he getting cynical? Had he lived alone too long, as his friends sometimes told him, and so was losing the ability really to love anybody but himself? He knit his brows, and got up whistling to go out and see why the train had stopped so long in this little country settlement.

It was just beyond Princeton, and they were not far now from New York. It would be most annoying to be delayed so near to his destination. He was anxious to get things in train for his evening of hard work. It was necessary to find out how the land lay as soon as possible.

It appeared that there was a wrecked freight ahead of them, and there would be delay. No one knew just how long; it would depend on how soon the wrecking train arrived to help.

Gordon walked nervously up and down the grass at the side of the track, looking anxiously each way for sign of the wrecking train. The thought of Julia did occur to him, but he put it impatiently away, for he knew just how poorly Julia would bear a delay on a journey even in his company. He had been with her once when the engine got off the track on a short trip down to a Virginia house-party, and she was the most impatient creature alive, although it mattered not one whit to any of the rest of the party whether they made merry on the train or at their friend's house. And yet, if Julia were anything at all to him, would not he like the thought of her companionship now?

A great white dog hobbled up to him and fawned upon him as he turned to go back to the train, and he laid his hand kindly upon the animal's head, and noted the wistful eyes upon his face. He was a noble dog, and Gordon stood for a moment fondling him. Then he turned impatiently and tramped back to the car again. But when he reached the steps he found that the dog had followed him.

Gordon frowned, half in annoyance, half in amusement, and sitting down on a log by the wayside he took the dog's pink nozzle into his hands, caressing the white fur above it gently.

The dog whined happily, and Gordon meditated. How long would the train wait? Would he miss getting to New York in time for the dinner? Would he miss the chance to rise in his chief's good graces? The chief would expect him to get to New York some other way if the train were delayed How long ought he to wait on possibilities?

All at once he saw the conductor and trainmen coming back hurriedly. Evidently the train was about to start. With a final kindly stroke of the white head, he called a workmen nearby, handed him half a dollar to hold the dog, and sprang on board.

He had scarcely settled himself into his chair, however, before the dog came rushing up the aisle from the other end of the car, and precipitated himself muddily and noisily upon him.

With haste and perturbation Gordan hurried the dog to the door and tried to fling him off, but the poor creature pulled back and clung to the platform yelping piteously.

Just then the conductor came from the other car and looked at him curiously.

"No dogs allowed in these cars," he said gruffly.

Well, if you know how to enforce that rule I wish you would," said Gordon "I'm sure I don't know what to do with him."

"Where has he been since you left Washington?" asked the grim conductor with suspicion in his eyes.

"I certainly haven't had him secreted about me, a dog of that size," remarked the young man dryly. "Besides, he isn't my dog. I never saw him before till he followed me at the station. I'm as anxious to be rid of him as he is to stay."

The conductor eyed the young man keenly, and then allowed a grim sense of humor to appear in one corner of his mouth.

"Got a chain or a rope for him?" he asked more sympathetically

"Well, no," remarked the unhappy attache of the dog. "Not having had an appointment with the dog I didn't provide myself with a leash for him."

"Take him into the baggage car," said the conductor briefly, and slammed his way into the next car.

There seemed nothing else to be done, but it was most annoying to be thus forced on the notice of his fellow travelers, when his commission required that he be as inconspicuous as possible.

At Jersey City he hoped to escape and leave the dog to the tender mercies of the baggage man, but that official was craftily waiting for him and handed the animal over to his unwilling master with a satisfaction ill proportioned to the fee he had received for caring for him.

Then began a series of misfortunes. Disappointment and suspicion stalked beside him, and behind him a voice continually whispered his chief's last injunction: "Don't let anything hinder you!"

Frantically he tried first one place and then another, but all to no effect. Nobody apparently wanted to care for a stray white dog, and his very haste aroused suspicion. Once he came near being arrested as a dog thief. He could not get rid of that dog! Yet he must not let him follow him! Would he have to have the animal sent home to Washington as the only solution of the problem? Then a queer fancy seized him that just in some such way had Miss Julia Bentley been shadowing his days for nearly three years now; and he had actually this very day been considering calmly whether he might not have to marry her, just because she was so persistent in her taking possession of him. Not that she was unladylike, of course; no, indeed! She was stately and beautiful and had never offended. But she had always quietly, persistently, taken it for granted that he would be her attendant whenever she chose; and she always chose whenever he was in the least inclined to enjoy any other woman's company.

He frowned at himself. Was there something weak about his character that a woman or a dog could so easily master him? Would any other employe in the office, once trusted with his great commission, have allowed it to be hindered by a dog?

War and Insanity.

From the Chicago Evening Post.

Dr. William Graham, superintendent of the Belfast district asylum, Ireland, says "insanity has greatly lessened during the war period." His statement is sustained by official statistics and by the observation of other British alienists.

The cynic might be tempted to remark that the madmen are at the front, and any aberrant minds left at home seem sane in contrast with the denizens of Europe's trenches; but the cynic's comment is not the real explanation.

Dr. Graham elaborates his statement by saying it is especially noticeable that there are many fewer cases of insanity among women. On the surface this may appear surprising. The grief and anxiety to which a multitude of wives and mothers have been subjected might have been expected to unbalance many minds; that such has not been true may be accepted as sustaining the theory that feminine insanity is largely due to the treadmill pressure of domestic routine, with its innumerable and ceaseless small annoyances and vexations. From this servitude thousands of women have been liberated by the war; they have escaped to a freedom of life and an economic independence denied them in the days of peace. Bigger burdens have been thrust upon them, great sorrows have come to them, but they have had room and liberty to bear and face them.

It is the cramped, narrowed, prodded mind that goes distraught. Health and sanity are to be found in freedom, space and adequate occupation. The lesson is one not merely for Europe, but for all countries; not merely for the mental welfare of women, but for that of men. An enlightened civilization, organized to afford ample opportunity for all and freeing men and women alike from the cumulative pressure of life's nagging ills, will soon lessen the number of asylums necessary to care for its insane.

CHINA WANTS OUR GOODS

American Manufacturers Are Meeting Favorable Reception at Hands of Orientals.

The Chinese are beginning distinctly to favor American goods and regard America as a model from a manufacturing as well as governmental viewpoint, according to Maurice Benjamin, general manager of the Oliver Import and Export company, Shanghai, China. In spite of the famine in freight, he says, American manufacturers are not only gradually finding their way into China, but are being sought by the Orientals.

"The tremendous disturbances in Europe have not failed to leave traces in China," he said. "In this the high freight rates have played no small part. China wonders why so large a nation as America should have no mercantile marine. In some lines where only $10 per ton was paid before the war for transportation from the United States west coast to China, as much as $40 per ton has recently been paid.

"I believe the day is not far distant when we will see a new China. When the 400,000,000 people there begin to want machinery, railways and other requirements of civilization, America will benefit. It is a common error to think that the Chinese are too inveterately conservative to adopt Western civilization. The cost of living of Chinese in towns where there are Europeans has probably doubled in the last few years."

The Formula Failed.

Willie had disobeyed again, and his mother had sent for a switch, declaring that she meant to "wear him out."

"Now, Willie," she demanded very solemnly, "do you know what I'm going to do with this switch?"

"Yes'm," he answered promptly, "you're going to shake it at me and say, 'Willie Parsons, if you ever do that again I'll switch you good!'"

But she didn't.—Christian Herald.

When Work Is Hard

That kidney troubles are so common is due to the strain put upon the kidneys in so many occupations, such as:

Jarring and jolting on railroads, etc.
Cramp and strain as in barbering, moulding, heavy lifting, etc.
Exposure to changes of temperature in iron furnaces, refrigerators, etc.
Dampness as in tanneries, quarries, mines, etc.
Inhaling poisonous fumes in painting, printing and chemical shops.

Doan's Kidney Pills are fine for strengthening weak kidneys.

An Iowa Case

O. W. Emery, retired farmer, West Decorah, Iowa, says: "My back got so bad I couldn't get much rest and often had to be propped up with pillows. The pain was terrible and it seemed as if my kidneys were being torn loose. The kidney secretions were painful in passage and I lost weight until I was but a shadow of my former self. Doan's Kidney Pills restored me to good health and I haven't had any kidney trouble since."

Women Once Invalids

Now in Good Health Through Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Say it is Household Necessity. Doctor Called it a Miracle.

All women ought to know the wonderful effects of taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound even on those who seem hopelessly ill. Here are three actual cases:

Harrisburg, Penn.—"When I was single I suffered a great deal from female weakness because my work compelled me to stand all day. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for that and was made stronger by its use. After I was married I took the Compound again for a female trouble and after three months I passed what the doctor called a growth. He said it was a miracle that it came away as one generally goes under the knife to have them removed. I never want to be without your Compound in the house."—Mrs. Frank Knobl, 1642 Fulton St., Harrisburg, Penn.

Hardly Able to Move.

Albert Lea, Minn.—"For about a year I had sharp pains across my back and hips and was hardly able to move around the house. My head would ache and I was dizzy and had no appetite. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, I am feeling stronger than for years. I have a little boy eight months old and am doing my work all alone. I would not be without your remedies in the house as there are none like them."—Mrs. F. E. Yost, 611 Water St., Albert Lea, Minn.

Three Doctors Gave Her Up.

Pittsburg, Penn.—"Your medicine has helped me wonderfully. When I was a girl 18 years old I was always sickly and delicate and suffered from irregularities. Three doctors gave me up and said I would go into consumption. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and with the third bottle began to feel better. I soon became regular and I got strong and shortly after I was married. Now I have two nice stout healthy children and am able to work hard every day."—Mrs. Clementina Duerring, 34 Gardner St., Troy Hill, Pittsburg, Penn.

Don't forget that Christmas days are again drawing near. Don't forget that merchants in this town have the goods that you want to buy for those Christmas days. Don't forget that every dollar you spend with a local merchant remains in local circulation and enriches the community just that much. Don't forget that every dollar you spend outside of this town remains outside and decreases the money in local circulation just that much. Don't forget that an advertisement of a local merchant in this paper is an indication that the merchant is prepared to "make good" or he would not resort to publicity in soliciting your trade. Don't forget the good advertiser is generally a "live wire," and that live wires are better than dead ones.

COMMUNITY LOYALTY

Have you ever stopped to consider the fact that loyalty to community interests is the highest type of patriotism? Show us the man who is loyal and true to every interest of his own community, and we will show you in that same individual a man in whom his country can repose absolute confidence in an emergency that calls for his allegiance.

On the other hand, the man who is careless and unconcerned for the interests of his community is more than apt to display the same spirit of indifference toward his government or his state should any serious danger threaten either.

One of the most commendable traits of the old Scotch Highlanders was their loyalty to their own clan. Good or bad, right or wrong, the clan had their first allegiance. The life and services of each member were always cheerfully placed at the disposal of the clan.

Try to imagine an entire state composed of innumerable communities welded and cemented into a symetrical whole, each striving to excel the others, but each, from its own local loyalty, developing a broader and deeeper loyalty that reaches out and embraces the whole.

Utopia, you say? By no means Merely what could and would be the result if we could only be brought to see that we owe allegiance to our own people, but that the prosperity of others is in no wise a detriment to us but rather a help; that if each community could develop itself to the utmost—physically, mentally and morally—none would need be envious of others, neither would any need do aught to detract from another's interests.

Let us develop community loyalty to the full—the highest possible form of patriotism.

FACTS YOU MAY NOT KNOW

That agreements of sale or purchase powers of attorney authorizing another to sell or any other contract regarding real estate must be in writing. No verbal agreements are binding.

That if Smith succeeds by fraud or misrepresentation in buying a farm from Jones at less than one half of its value, Jones may, by refunding the purchase price, annul the sale.

That one who pays the taxes on the property of another acquires no other right on same than a lein on the property for the repayment of the amount paid.

That an option on a piece of property whereby the owner binds himself to sell, but the holder of the option is not bound to buy, as was unknown to Louisiana law until the year 1910 when the legislature passed an act which makes such a contract valid.

That after a lease is signed, no agreement to repair, paint, etc., not embodied in the lease, can be enforced.

That all movable property whether belonging to the tenant, or not, except the property of a sub-tenant who has paid his rent, found in a leased house, can be siezed for the unpaid rent.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

When J. O. Curwood writes a story about the wilderness he knows, about the grandeur and the glory of Arctic woods and Arctic snows, about adventures super-human, the epic struggles of the strong, why does he drag in lovely woman, where cultured females don't belong? Why must there be a lot of wooing, the wearied reader's soul to vex, and why are lovers billing cooing, when they're in snow up to their necks? Alas, the moldy superstition that love must light up every tale, whate'er the scene or the conditions—the iceburg or the forest trail

There was one dauntless story teller, who laughed the ancient rule to scorn—that gifted Robert Louis feller—and "Treasure Island" then was born; there are no misfit damsels in it, no lovers wailing in the sun; and when the readers once begin it, they do not eat until they're done.

The publishers, to Robert Louis, when they beheld the manuscript, no doubt exclaimed, "Great Scott! Beshew us! Your intellect has surely slipped! The sales would never pay the carriage; the whole book world would stand aghast; there's not a word of love or marriage in this romance, from first to last! Ring in some maidens, blithe and merry, and let John Silver marry one; then it will be delightful, very, and we will sell it by the ton."

There's Randall Parrish who is writing some splendid stories of the days when whites and Indians were fighting in dark and solemn ways If he'd defy the old tradition that love must cumber every tale, we'd have the book for which we're wishing—an epic of the lonely trail.

But no; to scenes all red and gory, he introduces Sarah Jane; she hangs around throughout the story and fills me with a pale pink pain. Where blood is deep and scraps are sorest she with the hero gaily flirts, and though a hundred leagues of forest she trails her long bedragged skirts I bless the woman and her daughter, they are the savor of this life; but they are fishes out of water in Berserk tales of force and strife---By Walt Mason From Judge.

That as between seller and buyer, a title deed needs only to be in writing and can be enforced against the seller whether it has been acknowledged before a notary, or recorded or no. To be protected against the claims of third parties, however, a title deed should be recorded.

NEW LAW ... ABSENT VOTER

Those Away From Home May Vote by Mail and Have It Counted

This year is the first time in the history of the American republic that a voter could vote and have his vote counted without appearing in person at the proper polling place and casting his vote after he has taken time to register. The law is termed "the absentee voters' law," and was enacted in deference to a demand that has been insistent for a number of years that men should not be debarred the privilege of expressing their choice for national, state, county and township officers just because their vocation kept them away from home on election day.

In preparation for the election November 7, S. Allen, Secretary of State, is calling the attention of the proper officials to the laws governing the printing of the ballots, registration and the absent voters' law.

Traveling men and others who will be away from home on election day are planning on voting by mail. The absent voters' law will for the first time in Iowa be given a full test. It might have been used in the primary last June, but only a few took advantage of it.

In cities of 3,500 population or over, new registration books must be made up this year. The old books will be thrown away. Voters in order to cast a ballot at the November election must register. The time of registering again.

Registration boards will be in session October 26, 27 and 28 in every voting precinct from 8 a. m. to 9 p. m. for the purpose of registering voters. The boards will be in session again Saturday, November 4.

Absent voters' ballots can be secured by applying to the county auditor not earlier than October 24 and not later than November 4. Each absent voter must secure a ballot from the auditor of the county in which he resides. The auditor has a regulation form of application for the ballot, which is to be filled out.

The law makes no provision for registering by mail. All electors must register again in their voting precinct some time before election, if they expect to vote in person or by mail, the state officials say.

Persons who vote by mail will fill out their ballots in the presence of some official authorized to administer oaths, but in a manner so that the official shall not know how the ballot is marked. The ballot then shall be placed in an envelope and sealed by the official.

The envelope may then be mailed or delivered in person to the county auditor, and the auditor on election day shall see that the ballot is placed in the ballot box in the proper precinct.

ANNUAL S. S. CONVENTION

The 36th annual convention of the Hancock county Sunday Schools will be held at the Congregational church in Garner November 15 and 16.

Every S. S. in the county should be well represented at this convention.

A helpful and interesting program has been planned. Two of our state workers and many of the more progressive S. S. workers in our own county will have a part in it.

Start to make your plans now. The schools that send delegates to these conventions are the schools that will grow.

HERE'S LIV... FARMAN

Kepler's Farm But He's Still Live One

Once in a while the law of environment goes smash.

Three cemeteries border three sides of the 80 acre farm of W. T. Kepler, Scott county, near Davenport. But Mr. Kepler is not a dead one. On the contrary, he is one of the livest of the live farmers of Scott county.

Mr. Kepler keeps a herd of 20 Holsteins and supplies from 225 to 250 customers. Twelve of his cows are on test in the Davenport Cow Test association. These averaged 180 lbs. of butterfat in the first six months they were put to test. Three of them had been giving milk for six months previously and one was only a heifer.

An up-to-date dairy barn, silo and alfalfa is the Kepler recipe for success in dairying. He has a $400 hollow block silo 14 ft. in diameter and 32 ft. high. He prevents spoiling in the silo by seeding oats on top and commencing to feed soon after it is filled. "I couldn't get along without my silo" he says.

His cows get a regular ration of alfalfa, ensilage, cotton seed meal, bran and Schumacher feed and occasionally some oats and corn and cob meal.

Co-operation, too is one of Mr. Kepler's articles of faith. He is a member of the Davenport Cow Test association, the Davenport Milk Man's association and other organizations. He attended Iowa State college for three and a half years, taking the dairy husbandry course.

SAYS HE'll EXCEPT WAGER

The Des Moines Register reported that a Dyersville man named J. H. Williams has "called the offer of Julius Kunz and other Wesley politicians, to wager $1000 on Harding's election.

Mr Williams said he saw the offer in a Dubuque Times-Journal editorial. He wrote the Register as follows:

"I will take that bet. If this committee (of Wesley citizens) will send me proof that the thousand is deposited in any bank in Kossuth county, then I will deposit same sum in same bank."

Mr. Williams has found out by this time that he was not dealing with a set of bluffers. Over the telephone recently Mr. Kunz has said that he wired Mr Williams saying that the Wesley "committee" had deposited the thousand in the First National Bank of Wesley, and that the bank was waiting to receive Mr. Williams' thousand.

The "committee also wired Mr. Williams that it had another thousand to put up on the same terms.

(Later) Williams has put up the thousand in a Wesley bank.

AUCTIONEER LOCATES HERE

B. A. Reemstma, an experienced auctioneer from Aplington, Iowa, has located in Klemme and is now ready to book sales. Mr. Reemstma, beside his practical experience is a graduate of the Jones National School of Auctioneering of Chicago, and will prove a very capable man for anyone desiring the services of a first-class auctioneer. The territory for an auctioneer here is very large and we believe he should get a large number of sales. Anyone desiring the services of an auctioneer should see Mr. Reemtsma before they make arrangements elsewhere. He will cry the Arvidson sale which will be held in town, Saturday. See his card elsewhere in this issue.

GOOD WORDS FOR HARDING

Harding is a good citizen. He is more than that, he is a model citizen. He is liked by everybody in Sioux City outside of one newspayer office and a few homes in which a distorted comprehension of the policies of the day has led to his misjudging. His note is good at any bank and his credit at any store. His family life is ideal. His neighbors both esteem and like him. His personal habits are beyond criticism. Incidentally he is a good Methodist, as Methodists go.—Sioux City Journal.

Sheffield Press: With 272 cars in line the town of Kensett, about 35 miles north of here, won the car load of road oil offered as first prize for the town having the largest number of cars in line when the Jefferson Highway Sociabili tour arrived Geneva, Minn., won the second prize which was the flag carried by the flag car during the run.

There is a precedent for the curious case of the ship's papers of the Marie Quesada thrown overboard by the captain and found by some Brazilians in the stomach of a shark, reported a short time ago. A case occurred in 1799, recorded by the Dictionary of National Biography, in the article on Michael Fitton. Fitton, while in command of the Ferret in the West Indies, caught a shark and found in its stomach the papers of the American brig Nancy. Acting on the information of the papers, the brig was captured by Fitton's subordinate, Whylie, in command of the Sparrow cutter. The papers are still preserved in the Museum of the Royal United Service institution.

Henry C. Belter, of Pittsburgh, Pa., bought the George McGuire farm, which was cleared by Captain Michael McGuire, a veteran of the revolutionary war and a pioneer of the Allegheny mountains, and this is the first time in 134 years the property has passed from the possession of members of the McGuire family.

FUNK WANTS CHANGES IN COMPENSATION LAW

Suggests Increase In Maximum and Minimum Allowance For Injured Workmen.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 21.—Of many recommendations for strengthening the workmen's compensation law of Iowa, contained in the biennial report filed with the governor by A. B. Funk, industrial commissioner, perhaps the most important to the thousands of wage earners of Iowa, is the provision urging that the minimum compensation for injured workmen under the law be increased from $5 to $6 a week and that the maximum be increased from $10 to $12 a week.

In the two years' period from July 1, 1914, to July 1, 1916, there were 31,742 persons injured in industrial accidents in Iowa, the commissioner reports.

Of this number of persons injured, only 6,869 drew compensation under the workmen's compensation law. The remaining accidents were not of a serious nature.

The important recommendations for changes in the workmen's compensation law made by the commissioner are:

That provision be made for appointment of a deputy commissioner.

That the law be amended to aid in curing the evils of noninsurance.

That the minimum compensation be increased to $6 and the maximum to $12 a week.

That the period for medical relief be increased from two to four weeks.

That in cases of prolonged disability, the injured workman in the fourth, fifht and sixth weeks receive compensation for the first and second week. (At present no compensation is paid for the first two weeks of disability.)

That the way of appealing to the district court from arbitration ruling be made more clear.

That additional safeguards be provided in the case of lump sum settlements.

Provision that earnings shall not be conclusive in fixing the liability for permanent disability.

Provision making the loss of hearing compensable as specific partial permanent disability.

Exempt arbitration proceedings from the rules of common law as to evidence.

Exempt employers from reporting accidents in which persons injured are disabled for not more than one day.

Require all employers who reject the compensation law and who fail to insure, to post notice of such failure.

In asking for a deputy commissioner, Mr. Funk states that the work of the industrial commission has grown so that it is impossible for one commissioner to conduct all of the arbitrations arising out of the operation of the law.

The commissioner finds that the failure of employers to insure is one of the most serious problems in Iowa. In many cases when an employe is injured, it is discovered that the employer has not taken out industrial insurance and that the employer is not responsible financially The injured workman then fails to collect anything for injuries received.

EMPLOYE OF CLARINDA BANK CHARGED WITH EMBEZZLEMENT

Brent has given bond for his appearance in court for trial.

MURPHY CLAIMS PUBLISHER APPROVED ROAST OF OTT

Dubuque, Ia., Oct. 21.—Attorney P. J Nelson, representing R. Louis Murphy, collector of internal revenue for Iowa, defendant in a suit brought by the Telegraph-Herald, a daily newspaper published in this city, in making his opening statement to the jury in district court yesterday caused a titter to go around the court room when he told the jury that he would show that Mr. P. J. Quigley, owner of the paper, had admonished Mr. Murphy, who was at that time editor of the paper, to give a certain party "h—l" in an editorial, the same editorial later resulting in a libel suit which with interest and court fees and costs has cost the newspaper over $6,000.

The Telegraph-Herald is seeking to recover the $6,000 from Mr. Murphy and base their claims on the contention that he wrote the editorial and caused it to be published without the knowledge of the owners of the paper. The libed suit in question was brought by J J. Ott, at that time (1914) a candidate for mayor of Dubuque, following the publication of the alleged libelous editorial.

Attorney Nelson stated yesterday that he would bring evidence into court to show that Mr. Quigley, owner of the paper, read the editorial over slowly in front of Mr. Murphy and another reliable person, and then remarked: "That's right, Louie, give him h—l."

JAVA IS INSPIRED BY PROGRESS OF JAPANESE

The Hague, Netherlands, (by mail).—Java is turning its gaze on the enormous modern industrial development in Japan, and asking why, with its 30,000,000 industrious people, it should not emulate Japan. The Dutch minister for the colonies charged Henri Hubert van Kol, socialist member of the first chamber of parliament, with an inquiry into Japan's industrial evolution, and Mr. Van Kol's report strongly urges that the Japanese government's many sided activities in encouraging and fostering the large industries shall be adopted and improved upon by Dutch authorities in Java.

Mr. Van Kol shows that, while in 1890 Japan's export of industrial products formed 18 per cent of the whole, in 1902 this had risen to 38 per cent and in 1913 to 45 per cent; whereas agricultural exports declined from 51.6 per cent to 37.8 and 35.7.

His main recommendation to the Netherlands government is that a central bureau for native industry shall be established in Java, following the example of Japan, which body would further industrial development by the gathering of data, by subsidies, erection of model factories and the like, and incidentally by an inquiry into the possibility of silk culture in the Dutch East Indies.

The theory of racial incapacity of adjustment to industrial conditions has been exploded, says Mr. Van Kol, by the experience with the Japanese. Indeed, he regards conditions in Java and the qualities of the Javanese, "the most docile people on earth," as in many respects particularly favorable to industrial development.

BLUFFS AUTHORITIES NAB ALLEGED AUTO BOOTLEGGERS

Council Bluffs, Ia., Oct. 20.—With the arrest of Emil Huard and A. Brilles, two young men who declared Des Moines to be their home, officials at Oakland believe they have put a crimp in an organized band of automobile bootleggers who have been transporting their liquor by auto from Omaha to Des Moines, in order to avoid the publicity that results from the law requiring common carriers to keep a record of liquor shipments.

Last Thursday evening a car with an elaborate cargo of the delicious nectar from Nebraska became stalled near Oakland, and a second car had to be summoned before it was finally towed into town and necessary repairs made. The one car finally got away all right, but it was headed off at Atlantic by telephone, and the car and cargo were both secured by the officers, though the driver got away.

The other car was compelled to halt in Oakland Friday morning while payment for the repairs was arranged, and the officers pounced upon it, and arrested two men occupying it. They gave the names of Huard and Brilles when arraigned before Mayor W. S. Powell, and arranged to give $200 cash bond when they waived to the grand jury. Bonds have been given and both men are at large now.

The car at Oakland had aboard when officers took possession 136 half pint bottles and 259 pint bottles, all filed with whisky, while that at Atlantic had about 600 bottles, making altogether about 1,000 bottles of whisky that the officers are holding.

SUFF BALLOTS MUST BE RETAINED UNTIL DECEMBER 5

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 20.—W. S. Allen, secretary of state, yesterday sent letters to county auditors of the state advising them that ballots cast at the primary June 5 may be destroyed 10 days before the general election, to be held November 7.

However, the ballots cast June 5 on the constitutional amendment for woman suffrage must be held for six months after the date of the election, the secretary has ruled. These ballots must not be destroyed before December 5, the auditors are being advised.

This warning is given owing to the fact that there is still a possibility that the equal suffrage faction may contest the election at which the suffrage amendment was lost. If no contest develops, auditors are authorized to burn the amendment ballots in December.

The ballots cast at the presidential preference primary last April may be thrown into the furnace 10 days before the election, following the same rule as the ballots of the June primary.

KEOKUK TEMP BARS HAD VERY PRETENTIOUS TITLES

Des Moines, Oct. 20.—"Houses of public entertainment," was the title under which the city of Keokuk licensed alleged temperance bars to operate on a tax of $75 a month, the state special agents reported yesterday to Attorney General George Cosson in giving details of the raid on these establishments on Monday.

The "houses of public entertainment were paying the city $900 a year for permission to operate. This is more than the saloons paid as mulct tax in some of the "wet" cities of Iowa before the repeal of the mulct law

The special agents raided 12 of the Keokuk joints on Monday. In the 12 places they reported finding beer on tap. Dozens of bottles of all kinds of liquor were taken from the establishments. The confiscated booze filled several wagons.

The 12 men arrested on charges of illegal sale of booze will be arraigned in court as soon as the cases can be prepared. The state will also ask for injunctions against the properties, as soon as the papers can be prepared.

SAM KING NOT REFORMED BY THREE TERMS IN PRISON

He served four years Immediately on being released he broke into another dwelling and was sent back in 1908 to serve 10 years

With good time off, he was released a short time ago. He went to Washington county and for the fourth time he broke into a building and was sent up for a term not to exceed 10 years.

The authorities have not been able to reform King. He is now 35 years of age. Each time he secures his freedom he follows up his old trade of burglary.

SPECIAL AGENT FINDS BOOZE IN TEMP BARS AT KEOKUK

Keokuk, Ia., Oct. 19.—Six special agents operating under the direction of Attorney General George Cosson raided temperance bars in Keokuk, making many arrests and confiscating a large amount of liquor.

The Keokuk temp bars were licensed by the city at a rate of $75 a year. The attorney general suspected that many of these establishments were being run for the sale of liquor. He detailed special agents to work in the city. They secured evidence on which prosecutions will be based.

If the usual custom is followed Attorney General Cosson will bring action for injunctions against each of the properties where liquor was being sold illegally and each operator of a bar will be prosecuted criminally. In addition the liquor will be condemned and destroyed.

This is the third clean up of Mississippi river cities of Iowa. The special agents just finished securing injunctions against nearly 30 places in Davenport, and prosecuting criminally the operators of temp bars who were found selling real liquor.

PROOF SYSTEM IS SOUND, HE CLAIM

John Skelton Williams Upon What Reserve Bank Plan Has Done to Aid Farmers.

INTEREST RATES STABL

Comptroller Declares Decentralization of Currency Has Given Everybody Chance For Credit.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 21.—John Skelton Williams, comptroller of currency speaking here today before the Farmers' National congress described the relation of the federal reserve law to the farmer and closed with a personal statement brought out by President Wilson's recent allusion to attacks on the comptroller.

Gives Farmers Chance.

"I know that I have been held up as a kind of ogre, a rawhead and bloody bones, a terror to the banking and financial interests of the country. It may be the best answer to that may be found in the records and undisputed facts, that the national banks of the country today are stronger and in better condition than ever before; that they are more numerous than when I became comptroller and more prosperous and show a smaller proportion of failures and losses than ever known in their history; and my office is receiving a steady stream of applications for charters for new national banks and for permission to increase the capital of the existing banks."

Mr. Williams said the new federal reserve law "will forbid the grasping from using for their own advantage the necessities of their neighbors, and that it puts the farmer on the same plane as the business man.

"The farmer," he said, "is enabled to borrow according to his industry and commercial standing because his bank know how and where to get the money It will not be possible to have the money supply locked in the great centers for speculation or gambling purposes, while the real producers and legitimate productive commerce is pinched or denied, perhaps just at the time of greatest need

Cries of back to the farm, he said, were futile without promise of comfort and prosperity.

"Put money or opportunity to use on it," he said, "on the farms and the people will go to them fast enough and stay with them. This is precisely what the federal reserve system is doing on large measure and we hope the rural credits system will do in even larger measure."

Money Decentralized.

He told of the decentralization of huge accumulations of money from a few great centers and its transfer to the federal reserve banks—"12 reservoirs from which pipe lines already reach to nearly 8,000 banks, available to every reliable farmer, storekeeper or business man."

"God Almighty alone," he said, "knows how many strong men have had strength, hope and power sapped by unfair interest rates, how many promising boys and girls deprived of opportunity and driven to worthlessness and crime by the same direful inexorable power."

"This is the first time since the beginning of the national banking system, half a century ago," Comptroller Williams said, "that the farmer has been able to borrow on the security of his farm from any national bank." He added that there had been "a general collapse in interest charges in the sections of the country where abuse was the greatest and a general disposition by banks in all sections to live within the law."

Banks that had been charging some loans up to 50 and 60 per cent were not limiting charges to the rate permitted by their state laws, the comptroller said.

Fewer Gowns Are Bought Now

From the New York Herald.

"The tendency to the wearing of clothing by American women, a remarkable and newly developed economy in the matter of toilet expenditures, and the increasing prominence of the motor car in American social activities are the reasons assigned by Mme. Simcox for a voluntary petition in bankruptcy made by Simcox, Inc. The firm will discontinue its business at 535 Fifth avenue.

"The business of making clothes, gowns," Mme. Simcox said, "is not as it has been in many years. As it clothing, which is worn to a greater extent than ever before, has made inroads upon the gown making business, but I think there is a tendency economy in toilette that is quite among American women.

"Nowadays a trip to some point the city is a regular feature of the week's social activities, and upon trips a single gown is enough, although a convenient arrangement of course affects the dressmaking situation quite vitally."

SEIZE MAN WITH BIG KNIFE TRYING TO REACH WILSON

Pittsburgh, Oct. 20.—While President Wilson was being driven through the streets of Pittsburgh this afternoon a man, apparently a workman, leaped onto the running board of the president's automobile. He was promptly knocked off by secret service men. The man chased the president's car a block before he was arrested by local detectives.

Whether or not the prisoner, who gave the name of Richard Cullon, 22, a machinist of this city, intended to assassinate the president has not been determined. On his way to the police station he told the police that he was not at all satisfied with President Wilson's conduct of the European war.

In the bag he carried was a knife with a blade five inches long a bottle of liquid the police are endeavoring to analyze. Also in the bag were several wood chisels. The prisoner is held by the police for observation.

LAWLESSNESS IN GRECIAN CAPITAL

Reservists Taking Things In Their Own Hands—No Effort Being Made to Restrain Them.

London, Oct. 21.—Extremely turbulent conditions in Athens on Wednesday night are reported in a dispatch from Reuters' correspondent at the Greek capital sent that evening. Greek reservists have taken the law in their own hands despite the presence of strong entente detachments of marines who are given virtually no assistance by the Greek authorities in maintaining orders.

The dispatch declares:

"Tonight it is evident that the reservists are out of hand, for despite the fact that strong cavalry forces are escorting the French and Greek marines and soldiers spread about everywhere the reservists assembled in groups, have taken the law into their own hands and the Greek forces for the maintenance of order do not dispose of them.

"The chief of the French police control has informed the newspapers of the anti-Venezilos forces that beginning tomorrow the French will exercise a newspaper sensorship and that newspapers printing anti-entente articles run the risk of suspension."

Twenty-five officers and 600 men of the Athens garrison have gone over to the national movement and left for Saloniki, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Athens.

Newspapers announce, adds the message, that Janina, in Greek Epireus, also has gone over to the revolutionists, but official confirmation of this is lacking.

The foregoing although bringing the news of developments in Athens only up to Wednesday night is the latest report to be received on the situation there.

Attempts made by British detachments to advance last night north of Courcelette and east of LeSars, the statement adds, failed.

In the last great attack against the German positions in the Somme region the British used several tanks and three of them were destroyed by the German artillery fire, the statement declares.

ARMY AERIAL BRANCH WILL BE DEVELOPED

200 New Aeroplanes and Numerous Dirigibles Will Be Provided.

Washington, Oct. 20.—Army aviation officers are preparing to carry their campaign for the development of the air service in the field of balloons and other air craft.

Maj. Charles D. F. Chandler, of the signal corps, who has had many years of practical experience with balloons, has been appointed head of a new division created in the aviation section of the signal corps. All matters pertaining to free and captive balloons, dirigibles, hydrogen generating plants and the like will, hereafter, be under his charge. He is now in New York assembling a staff of officers to aid him, preparatory to the establishment of a school for the training of officers and men for the balloon service similar to the aeroplane stations. Bids have been advertised for two spherical and two kite balloons, which will be the first equipment for the new branch of the aviation service. With the funds for aviation work made available by congress, it is planned to add additional balloons or dirigibles as rapidly as the men to handle and care for them can be trained.

The balloon school probably will be established at Fort Omaha, Neb., or possibly at Akron, Ohio, where it is expected the first balloon equipment for the army will be equipped.

The army has just advertised for 200 new aeroplanes.

Authorization was given by Lieutenant Colonel Squier, chief of the aviation section of the army signal corps, for the complete equipment of two additional aero squadrons for the regular army. When the material, consisting of $200,000 for each squadron, has been delivered at San Antonio, Tex., the regular army flying service will have been trebled. Orders for enlistment of 1,391 men for the new squadrons have gone out and selection of officers is being considered.

The squadrons will be organized by Maj. Benjamin D. Foulois, commander of the first aero squadron, who has been detached to visit aero manufacturing plants.

Each squadron will have 12 aeroplanes of types required by regulations just compiled. It will have in addition 25 motor trucks and other equipment.

HAVE ENTENTE SCARED, GERMAN PRESS THINKS

Berlin, Oct. 20.—(by wireless to Sayville)—"That the entente is fearful of the effect of German submarine operations is regarded by the German press as clearly proved by the continuous agitation on the part of the entente press in an effort to induce the taking of measures by the United States against German submarine warfare near American waters," says an Overseas News agency announcement today.

"It is pointed out by the German newspapers that submarine U-53 carried on cruiser warfare and operated more than 40 miles from the coast of the United States, while British cruisers closely approached the coast at the three-mile distance in seeking to destroy without warning a German commercial submarine that was sailing. The question asked by the press is: 'Is it the Germans or the British who make war before the gates of the United States?' The newspaper observes further that submarine activity is exclusively a German-American and not a British matter."

FAMILIES OF BREMEN CREW HAVE LOST HOPE

London, Oct. 20.—An Exchange dispatch from Amsterdam says that a telegram received there from Bremen confirms the report that the German Ocean Navigation company has received no news from the commercial submarine, Bremen, and that she is regarded as lost. Great anxiety prevails among the families of the crew, virtually all of whom reside in Bremen, and it is expected difficulty will be experienced in obtaining crews for other commercial submarines which may undertake trans-Atlantic voyages.

According to this information the sailing of the Deutschland on another voyage across the Atlantic has been canceled.

A QUESTION OF CITIZENSHIP

Just at this time the question of neutrality is claiming much attention, and the matter of the attitude of our government toward the warring nations of the Old World is one of deep concern. And owing to the fact that our government has had to settle some knotty international disputes arising from the war, a rather mixed up condition of affairs is prevailing in this country.

The disputes with Germany and with England have developed a pro-German and an anti-German element, a pro-British and an anti-British. We are told that we must concede every claim of Germany or lose the sympathy of the German-Americans. We are also told we must conciliate Britian or alienate a large Anglo-American element.

Now the thought that naturally occurs to the patriotic American is: What is the attitude of these various elements toward our government? Are they American citizens or aliens? That is the question to be settled.

If this pro-German or pro British element with whose vengeance we are threatened, are aliens—not American citizens—then their likes and dislikes are of small concern to us. If they do not like our attitud let them go back to their own country.

If, on the other hand, they are American citizens, then another and very large question arises. Are they citizens for revenue only—holding citizenship for the material good to be derived therefrom while their hearts and affections are with the old country? Then the sooner they come out in the open the better for this country. Are they here to cull the sweets of the land and refuse to take the bitter? Is it their intention to enjoy the protection of our laws and our institutions while their hearts are with those who may at any day become our enemies?

To the man who has crossed the waters to cast his lot in America citizenship should be the most priceless of his possessions—is so to the man who is worthy of it. He should be as the bride who leaves her father's house to cast her lot with her chosen mate—for good or ill.

The man who takes citizenship should do so for good or for ill. One sentiment, and only one, should fire the heart of every American, native or naturalized, and that should be "My country—may she always be right; but my country right or wrong."

And, with due respect to the opinions of our political jingoes, we believe this is the sentiment of the great mass of our foreign born citizens. We can not believe they are more solicitous for the welfare of the land they have left than for the land they have left than for the land that has afforded them a home and plenty. Naturally, fond memories cluster around the old home, but the allegiance of their manhood lies here.

And, should the occasion call for it we beleive that allegiance will hold firm.

PUNISHMENT NOT REFORMATIVE

Edward E. Dudding of Huntington, W. Va., himself an ex convict claims to have secured employment for three thousand ex-convicts. He also claims that of that number less than one hundred have "fallen down" on their jobs.

Mr. Dudding has gotten hold of the right wire in twentieth century reform.

Strange that otherwise kind hearted and human people will persist in "punishing" the criminal, even after he has paid the uttermost farthing of his penalty.

Why can not we all see that the logical end of law is not to punish but to reform the evil doer?

Pause a moment and consider that word "punish." Doesn't it smack too much of vengeance? And who ever heard of vengeance reforming a transgressor? Perhaps when the vengeance has so completely broken the poor wretch that he has lost the power of resentment we may consider him reformed, but God save us from such reformation.

As men of enlightment and mercy, we should look on the law machinery of the land merely as the means by which untoward circumstances have warped and twisted out of its original symmetry. The very idea of punishment is repugnant to the soul of the merciful men, and should have no place in our scheme of life.

We insist that the idea of punishment as applied to the evil-doer is unworthy of the enlightened citizenship of this great country.

Reform the evil-doer, re-make the warped and twisted character; restrain, if necessary, the incurable vicious, but punish—never.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD MEDDLER

Most neighborhoods have her. She is the most noticeable feature on the landscape. She is always on the job. It matters not that the job is self-assumed, she never sleeps on it.

She is frequently the widow of some man whom the community held in high esteem. In a moment of fatal weakness he annexed her to his life, and very soon that life became worthless to him and he was glad to lay it down.

Since worrying him into his grave, her ambition seems to be to send him plenty of company for fear he may become lonesome, deprived as he is of her presence.

Nothing is begun, carried on or completed without her meddlesome interference. She knows the full family history of every man, woman and child for miles around, and if an ill-timed breath of scandal is needed to forever wither and destroy a promising career, she furnishing it with glee.

Having long since parted with any youthful charms she may have once possessed, the possession of attractiveness in the young people seems to fill her withered heart with gall. The boys of the community are all trifling and vicious, the girls weak and silly. Their manners and faith is are no better, and really one cannot imagine what the world is coming to.

No affair of community or private life is too big or too little for her meddlesome tongue to dip into. She annoys us, but we tolerate her. She nags us, but we bear it. At times she almost drives us crazy, but we endure it.

And there is no remedy, no recourse.

Yes, there is one. Dr. Ossler suggested it, and was frowned out of court. But, honestly, when contemplating the tyrannical rule of this neighborhood meddler we sometimes wonder if the world wis not too severe on the doctor.

Isn't it sublimely wonderful, the affection Mr. Hughes and Mr. Wilson are publicly lavishing upon each other

GIRLS HAVE "JUST CLAIM" ON ... AT RAPIDS DRUGGI

Culture is the faculty of reading books with appeal just as much when perused from the last page to the beginning.

It is the ability, in a man, to wear delicate whiskers and talk indeterminate things about incomprehensible topics.

In a woman it is the ability to wear flowing garments and speak softly and knowingly about airy sympeoms of inplicable impossibilities.

The great charm about this kind of culture is that neither the talker nor the talkee need bother to try to understand what is said.

Yet both are benefitted, for each feels himself or herself understood at last.

Culture, therefore, is bestowed upon people in the proportions each is best able to carry.

The common or garden variety of culture, which has to do with a gentle regard for the thoughts, opinions and wishes of others, and with an ordinary enjoyment of the human side of books, pictures and the world in general, is too easily attained to be of interest to the folk who adopt the other form of culture.—From Judge.

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the juice of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also drink plenty of water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

The defense which Secretary of War Newton D Baker offered for Mr Wilson's Mexican policies found quick response from patriotic Americans but hardly the response Mr Baker could have wished for.

In a speech in Jersey City the Secretary likened the Mexican revolutionists to the Continentals who fought with Washington He admitted the Mexicans were a rascally lot but said their actions were those of all rebels The patriots of the American Revolution looted churches and drove ministers from them on their famous march to Valley Forge, he added

Whereas it is reported in The New York Tribune this morning that Secretary of War Baker, at a public meeting held in Jersey City last night used the following language reflecting upon the character of the members of Washington's army at Valley Forge, and likened them to the present Mexican revolutionists

"'I know that the Mexicans do not respect American life and property said Mr Baker. 'I know that they do not pay their debts that they are ragamuffins that they desecrate church property that their cause is good and that they are generally worthless But people never respect those things in revolutions. We did not respect them in our Civil War Washington's soldiers in the march to Valley Forge stole everything they could lay their hands on; took the silver vessels out of the churches and sold them to buy drink They drove ministers out of the churches That money was worthless and they were just as bad characters as the Mexicans.

The objections I have to labor unions is that they drag the highest man to the level of the lowest. I must demur with the labor unions when they say "you must award the dull the same as you award those with special gifts."—Speech in People's Forum, New Rochelle, Feb. 25, 1906.

What Hughes Said About Unions and Workmen.

There are some who regard organized labor as a source of strife and menace of difficulty. It is a shocking thought that the wage earners of the country, who by their daily toil make possible the industrial prestige of which we boast, should be subjected through ignorance or indifference to unnecessary peril The interests of labor are the interests of all the people, and the protection of the wage earner in the security of his life and health by every practical means is one of the most sacred trusts of society.—Speech, Exposition of Safety Devices and Industrial Hygiene, Jan. 28, 1907.

I believe in a six-day working week. So do you. But do you know that the men who are making a six-day week a possibility and an eventual fixture, are these men (labor representatives) and their associates? I long ago came to the conclusion that the labor unions are going to solve the Sunday labor question to the best interest of the country. Join hands with them and you will double your results, while halving your labor.—Address to preachers and labor representatives in Executive Chamber, Albany, 1908.

THE COUNTRY MUST INSURE ITSELF AGAINST INCAPACITY.

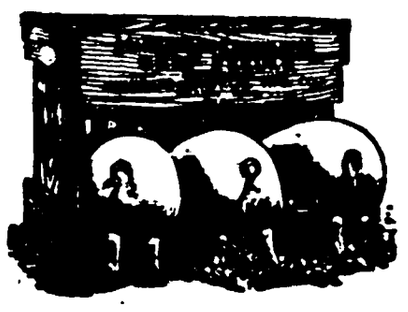
In his vigorous speech at Philadelphia on Monday night Mr. Hughes made an observation that should keep his countrymen thinking soberly every day until election morning, the seventh of November.

"We cannot say now in what particular sort of mess we shall find. things in March next."

Here is room for disquieting speculation. The Government is in feeble hands. It is never prepared to act. In emergencies it does not know what to do, or how to begin. It is the sport of circumstances. It waits for something to turn up with a guilty feeling of helplessness to deal with untoward events. Mr. Wilson, inconstant and vacillating himself and unable to learn from experience, can obtain neither inspiration nor support from his Cabinet which is the weakest that any President has ever gathered together since the Civil war. The policy of the Democratic Administration is not so much watchful as fearful waiting. It is flabby, timid, procrastinating, always undecided.

So anything may happen to the nation, any disaster, any disgrace. Mr. Hughes is right: we don't know "in what particular sort of mess we shall find things in March next." The country is helpless to prevent blunders and imbecilities which may involve it in an unwelcome war or tarnish its honor; but the people can see to it that an American President with character and stamina as well as with brains is in the White House on March 4 to pilot the country through the rapids, and the people can give him a Republican Congress to provide the legislation he asks for to carry out his policies. The people can be in no doubt that the Cabinet Charles Evans Hughes selects will contain only able and efficient men, the best the country affords.—New York Sun.

Agricultural Colleges and Standard Hog Regulator



A few years ago when the Purdue, Indiana, Agriculture College ran a special train through the state, one of the professors in charge delivered a lecture at Peru, Indiana, on Hogs.

During his talk he discussed hog preparations and condemned one that is generally known to contain high a percentage of filler. A Standard Hog Regulator customer in the crowd asked him about Standard. He replied, "We consider Standard Hog Regulator to be of the best commercial hog preparations on the market.——At the Ames, Iowa, Agricultural College no advertising is accepted for publication in their college paper, "The Iowa Agriculturist," until it is past upon by a Board of Censors, consisting of the heads of all departments. The fact that Standard Hog Regulator is advertised regularly in this publication shows that it is considered an article of merit.——For the sake of your hogs, feed them Standard Hog Regulator.——Standard Hog Regulator is advertised in the official paper of the Nebraska Agricultural College and it has been fed at the experimental station and in large quantities on an experimental farm that is used by the college where the hogs are daily under observation.

The spell of breathlessness was broken. The guests relaxed and went on with their dinner.

Gordon, meanwhile, tried coolly to keep up a pretense of eating, the paper held in one hand while he seemed to be studying it. Once he turned it over and looked on the back. There was a large crossmark in red ink at the upper end. He looked at it curiously and then instinctively at his host.

"That is my own mark," said Mr. Holman. "I put it there to distinguish it from other papers." He was smiling politely, but he might as well have said, "I put it there to identify it in case of theft," for every one at the table, unless it might be his wife, understood that that was what he meant Gordon felt it and was conscious of the other paper in his vest-pocket. The way was going to be most difficult.

Among the articles in the envelope which the chief had given him before his departure from Washington were a pair of shell-rimmed eye-glasses, a false mustache, a goatee, and a pair of eyebrows. He had laughed at the suggestion of high-tragedy contained in the disguise, but had brought them with him for a possible emergency. The eye-glasses were tucked into the vest-pocket beside the duplicate paper. He bethought himself of them now. Could he, under cover of taking them out, manage to exchange the papers? And if he should, how about that red-ink mark across the back? Would any one notice its absence? It was well to exchange the papers as soon as possible before the writing had been studied by those at the table, for he knew that the other message, though resembling this one in general words, differed enough to attract the attention of a close observer. Dared he risk their noticing the absence of the red cross on the back?

Slowly cautiously, under cover of the conversation, he managed to get that duplicate paper out of his pocket and under the napkin in his lap. This he did with one hand, all the time ostentatiously holding the code message in the other hand, with its back to the people at the table. This hand meanwhile also held his coat lapel out that he might the more easily search his vest-pockets for the glasses. It all looked natural. The hostess was engaged in a whispered conversation with the maid at the moment. The host and other guests were finishing the exceedingly delicious patties on their plates, and the precious code message was safely in evidence, red cross and all. They saw no reason to be suspicious about the stranger's hunt for his glasses.

"Oh, here they are!" he said, quite unconcernedly, and put on the glasses to look more closely at the paper, spreading it smoothly on the table cloth before him, and wondering how he should get it into his lap in place of the one that now lay quietly under his napkin

The host and the guests politely refrained from talking to Gordon and told each other incidents of the day in low tones that indicated the non-importance of what they were saying, while they waited for the real business of the hour

Then the butler removed the plates, pausing beside Gordon waiting punctilliously with his silver tray to brush away the crumbs.

This was just what Gordon waited for It had come to him as the only way Courteously he drew aside, lifting the paper from the table and putting it in his lap, for just the instant while the butler did his work, but in that instant the paper with the red cross was slipped under the napkin, and the other paper took its place upon the table, back down so that its lack of a red cross could not be noted.

So far, so good, but how long could this be kept up" And the paper under the napkin—how was it to be got into his pocket? His hands were like ice now, and his brain seemed to be at boiling heat as he sat back and realized that the deed was done, and could no be undone If any one should pick up that paper from the table and discover the lack of the red mark, it would be all up with him. He looked up for an instant to meet the gaze of the six men upon him. They had nothing better to do now than to look at him until the next course arrived. He realized that not one of them would have mercy upon him if they knew what he had done, not one unless it might be the tired, old-looking one, and he would not dare interfere.

Still Gordon was enabled to smile, and to say some pleasant nothings to his hostess when she passed him the salted almonds. His hand lay carelessly guarding the secret of the paper on the table, innocently, as though it just happened that he laid it on the paper.

Sitting thus with the real paper in his lap under his large damask napkin, the false paper under his hand on the table where he from time to time perused it, and his eye-glasses which made him look most distinguished still on his nose, he heard the distant telephone bell ring.

He remembered the words of his chief and sat rigid. From his position he could see the tall clock in the hall, and its gilded hands pointed to ten minutes before seven. It was about the time his chief had said he would be called on the telephone. What should he do with the two papers?

He had but an instant to think until the well trained butler returned and announced that some one wished to speak with Mr. Burnham on the telephone. His resolve was taken. He would have to leave the substitute paper on the table. To carry it away with him might arouse suspicion, and, moreover, he could not easily manage both without being noticed. The real paper must be put safely away at all hazards, and he must take the chance that the absence of the red mark would remain unnoticed until his return.

Deliberately he laid a heavy silver spoon across one edge of the paper on the table, and an ice cream fork across the other, as if to hold it in place until his return: Then, rising with apologies, he gathered his napkin, paper, and all in his hand, holding it against his coat most naturally, as if he had forgotten that he had it, and made his way into the front hall, where in an alcove was the telephone. As he passed the hat-rack he swept his coat and hat off with his free hand, and bore them with him, devoutly hoping that he was not being watched from the dining room. Could he possibly get from the telephone out the front door without being seen? Hastily he hid the cipher message in an inner pocket. The napkin he tropped on the little telephone table, and taking up the receiver he spoke: "Hello! Yes! Oh, good evening! You don't say so! How did that happen?" He made his voice purposely clear, that it might be heard in the dining room if anyone was listening. Then glancing in that direction he saw, to his horror, his host lean over and lift the cipher paper he had left on the table and hand it to the guest on his right.

The messenger at the other end had given his sentences agreed upon and he had replied according to the sentences laid down by the chief in his instructions; the other end had said good-bye and hung up, but Gordon's voice spoke, cool and clear in the little alcove, despite his excitement. "All right. Certainly, I can take time to write it down. Wait until I get my pencil. Now, I'm ready. Have you it there? I'll wait a minute until you get it." His heart beat wildly. The blood surged through his ears like rushing waters. Would they look for the little red mark? The soft clink of spoons and dishes and the murmur of conversation was still going on, but there was no doubt but that it was a matter of a few seconds before his theft would be discovered. He must make an instant dash for liberty while he yet could. Cautiously, stealthily, like a shadow from the alcove, one eye on the dining room, he stole to the door and turned the knob. Yet even as he did so he saw his recent host rise excitedly from his seat and fairly snatch the paper from the man who held it. His last glimpse of the room where he had bue threo minutes before been enjoying the hospitality of the house was a vision of the entire company starting up and pointing to himself even as he slid from sight. There was no longer need for silence. He had been discovered and must fight for his life. He shut the door quickly, his nerves so tense that it seemed as if something must break soon; opened and slammed the outer door, and was out in the great whirling city under the flare of electric lamps with only the chance of a second of time before his pursuers would be upon him.

He came down the steps with the air of one who could scarcely take time to touch his feet to the ground, but must fly.

CHAPTER III.

Almost in front of the house stood a closed carriage with two fine horses, but the coachman was looking up anxiously toward the next building. The sound of the closing door drew the man's attention, and, catching Gordon's eye, he made as if to jump down and throw open the door of the carriage. Quick as a flash, Gordon saw he had been mistaken for the man the carriage awaited, and he determined to make use of the circumstance.

"Don't get down," he called to the man, taking chances. "It's very late already. I'll open the door. Drive for all you're worth." He jumped in and slammed the carriage door behind him, and in a second more the horses were flying down the street. A glance from the back window showed an excited group of his fellow-guests standing at the open door of the mansion he had just left pointing toward his carriage and widely gesticulating. He surmised that his host was already at the telephone calling for his own private detective.

Gordon could scarcely believe his sense that he had accomplished his mission and flight so far, and yet he knew his situation was most pecarious. Where he was going he neither knew nor cared. When he was sure he was far enough from the house he would call to the driver and give him directions, but first he must make sure that the precious paper was safely stowed away, in case he should be caught and searched. They might be coming after him with motorcycles in a minute or two.

Carefully rolling the paper into a tiny compass, he slipped it into a hollow gold case which was among the things in the envelope the chief had given him. There was a fine chain attached to the case, and the whole looked innocently like a gold pencil. The chain he slipped about his neck, dropping the case down inside his collar. That done he breathed more freely. Only from his dead body should they take that away. Then he hastily put on the false eyebrows, mustache and goatee which had been provided for his disguise, and pulling on a pair of light gloves he felt more fit to evade detection.

He was just beginning to think what he should say to the driver about taking him to the station, for it was important that he get out of the city at once, when, glancing out of the window to see what part of the city he was being taken through, he became aware of an auto close beside the carriage keeping pace with it, and two men stretching their necks as if to look into the carriage window at him. He withdrew to the shadow instantly so that they could not see him, but the one quick glance he had had made him sure that one of his pursuers was the short thick set man with the cruel jaw who had sat across from him at the dinner table a few minutes before. If this were so he had practically no chance at all of escape, for what was a carriage against a swift moving car and what was he against a whole city full of strangers and enemies? If he attempted to drop from the carriage on the other side and escape into the darkness he had but a chance of 1,000 at not being seen, and he could not hope to hide and get away in this unknown part of the city. Yet he must take his chance somehow, for the carriage must sooner or later get somewhere and he be obliged to face his pursuers.

To make matters worse, just at the instant when he had decided to jump at the next dark place and was measuring the distance with his eye, his hand even being outstretched to grasp the door handle, a blustering, boisterous motorcycle burst into full bloom just where he intended to jump, and the man who rode it was in uniform. He dodged back into the darkness of the carriage again that he might not be seen, and the motorcycle came so near that its rider turned a white face and looked in. He felt that his time had come, and his cause was lost. It had not yet occurred to him that the men who were pursuing would hardly be likely to call in municipal aid in their search, lest their own duplicity would be discovered. He reasoned that he was dealing with desperate men who would stop at nothing to get back the original cipher paper, and stop his mouth. He was well aware that only death would be considered a sufficient silencer for him after what he had seen at Mr. Holman's dinner table, for the evidence he could give would involve the honor of every man who had sat there! He saw in a flash that the two henchmen whom he was sure were even now riding in the car on his right had been at the table for the purpose of silencing him if he showed any signs of giving trouble. The wonder was that any of them dared call in a stranger on a matter of such grave import, which meant ruin to them all if they were found out, but probably they had reasoned that every man had his price and had intended to offer him a share of the booty. It was likely that the chief had caused it to be understood by them that he was the right kind of man for their purpose. Yet, of course, they had taken precautions, and now they had him well caught, an auto on one side, a motorcycle on the other, and no telling how many more behind! He had been a fool to get into this carriage. He might have known it would only trap him to his death. There seemed absolutely no chance for escape now—yet he must fight to the last. He put his hand on his revolver to make sure it was easy to get at, tried to think whether it would not be better to chew up and swallow that cipher message rather than to run the risk of its falling again into the hands of the enemy; decided that he must carry it intact to his chief if possible; and finally that he must make a dash for safety at once, when just then the carriage turned briskly into a wide driveway, and the attendant auto and motorcycle dropped behind as if puzzled at the move. The carriage stopped short and a bright light from an open doorway was flung into his face. There seemed to be high stone walls on one side and the lighted doorway on the other hand evidently led into a great stone building. He could hear the puffing of the car and cycle just behind. A wild notion that the carriage had been placed in front of the house to trap him in case he tried to escape, and that he had been brought to prison, flitted through his mand.

His hand was on his revolver as the coachman jumped down to fling open the carriage door, for he intended to fight for his liberty to the last.

He glanced back through the carriage window, and the lights of the auto glared in his face. The short, thick set man was getting out of the car, and the motorcyclist had stood his machine up against the wall and was coming toward the carriage. Escape was going to be practically impossible. A wild thought of dashing out the opposite door of his carriage, boldly seizing the motorcycle and making off on it passed through his mind, and then the door on his left was flung open and the carriage was immediately surrounded by six excited men in evening dress, all talking at once. "Here you are at last!" they chorused.

"Where is the best man?" shouted some one from the doorway. "Hasn't he come, either?" And as if in answer one of the men by the carriage door wheeled and called excitedly: "Yes, he's come! Tell him—tell Jeff—tell him he's come." Then turning once more to Gordon he seized him by the arm and cried: "Come on quickly! There isn't a minute to wait. The organist is fairly frantic. Everybody has been just as nervous as could be. We couldn't very well go on without you—you know. But don't let that worry you. It's all right now you've come. Forget it, old man, and hustle." Dimly Gordon perceived above the sound of subdued hubbub that an organ was playing, and even as he listened it burst into the joyous notes of the wedding march. It dawned upon him that this was not a prison to which he had come but a church—not a court room but a wedding, and, horror of horrors! they took him for the best man. His disguise had been his undoing. How was he to get out of this scrape? And with his pursuers just behind!

"Let me explain——" he began, and wondered what he could explain.

"There's no time for explanations now, man. I tell you the organ has begun the march. We're expected to be marching down that middle aisle this very minute and Jeff is waiting for us in the chapel. I sent the signal to the bride and another to the organist the minute we sighted you. Come on! Everybody knows your boat was late in coming in. You don't need to explain a thing till afterwards."

At that moment one of the ushers moved aside and the short, thick set man stepped between, the light shining fully upon his face, and Gordon knew him positively for the man who had sat opposite him at the table a few minutes before. He was peering eagerly into the carriage door and Gordon saw his only escape was into the church. With his heart pounding like a trip hammer he yielded himself to the six ushers, who swept the little pursuer aside as if he had been a fly and literally bore Gordon up the steps and into the church door.

A burst of music filled his senses, and dazzling lights, glimpses of flowers, palms and beautiful garments bewildered him. His one thought was for escape from his pursuers. Would they follow him into the church and drag him out in the presence of all these people, or would they be thrown off the track for a little while and give him opportunity yet to get away? He looked around wildly for a place of exit, but he was in the hands of the insistent ushers. One of them chattered to him in a low, growling whisper, such as men use on solemn occasion:

"It must have been rough on you, being anxious like this about getting here, but never mind now. It'll go all right. Come on. Here's your cue and there stands Jefferson over there. You and he go in with the minister, you know. The groom and the best man, you understand, they'll tell you when. Jeff has the ring, all right, so you won't need to bother about that. There's absolutely nothing for you to do but stand where you're put and go out when the rest do. You needn't feel a bit nervous."

Was it possible that these crazy people didn't recognize their mistake even yet here in the bright light? Couldn't they see his mustache was stuck on and one eyebrow was crooked? Didn't they know their best man well enough to recognize his voice? Surely, surely, some one would discover the mistake soon—that man Jeff over there who was eyeing him so intently. He would be sure to know this was not his friend. Yet every minute that they continued to think so was a distinct gain for Gordon. puzzling his pursuers and giving himself time to think and plan and study his strange surroundings.

And now they were drawing him forward and a turn of his head gave him a vision of the stubbed head of the thick set man peering in at the chapel door and and watching him eagerly. He must fool him if possible.

"But I don't know anything about the arrangements," faltered Gordon reflecting that the best man might not be very well known to the ushers and perhaps he resembled him. It was not the first time he had been taken for another man—and with his present makeup and all, perhaps it was natural. Could he possibly hope to bluff it out for a few minutes until the ceremony was over and then escape? It would of course be the best way imaginable to throw that impudent little man in the doorway off his track. If the real best man would only stay away long enough it would not be a difficult part to play. The original man might turn up after he was gone and create a pleasant little mystery, but nobody would be injured thereby. All this passed through his mind while the usher kept up his sepulchral whisper:

"Why, there are just the usual arrangements, you know—nothing new. You and Jeff go in after the ushers have reached the back of the church and opened the door. Then you just stand there till Celia and her uncle come up the aisle. Then follows the ceremony—very brief. Celia had all that repeating after the minister cut out on account of not being able to rehearse. It's to be just the simplest service, not the usual lengthy affair. Don't worry, you'll be all right, old man. Hurry! they're calling you. Leave your hat right here. Now I must go. Keep cool. It'll soon be over."

The breathless usher hurried through the door and settled into a sort of exalted hobble to the time of the wonderful Lohengrin music. Gordon turned, thinking even yet to make a possible escape, but the eagle eye of his pursuer was upon him and the man Jefferson was by his side.

"Here we are!" he said, eagerly grabbing Gordon's hat and coat and dumping them on a chair. "I'll look after everything. Just come along. It's time we went in. The doctor is motioning for us. Awfully glad to see you at last. Too bad you had to rush so. How many years is it since I saw you? Ten! You've changed some, but you're looking fine and dandy. No need to worry about anything. It'll soon be over and the knot tied."

Mechanically Gordon fell into place beside the man Jefferson, who was a pleasant faced youth, well groomed and handsome. Looking furtively at his finely cut, happy features, Gordon wondered if he would feel as glad as this youth seemed to be, when he walked down the aisle to meet his bride. How, by the way, would he feel if he were going to be married now—going into the face of this great company of well dressed people to meet Miss Julia Bentley and be joined to her for life? Instinctively his soul shrank within him at the thought.

But now the door was wide open, the organ pealing its best, and he suddenly became aware of many eyes, and of wondering how long his eyebrows would withstand the perspiration that was trickling softly down his forehead. His mustache—ridiculous appendage! why had he not removed it?—was it awry? Dared he put up his hand to see? His gloves! Would any one notice that they were not as strictly fresh as a best man's gloves should be? Then he took his first step to the music, and it was like being pulled from a delicious morning nap and plunged into a tub of icy water.

He walked with feet that suddenly weighed like lead, across a church that looked to be miles in width, in the face of swarms of curious eyes. He tried to reflect that these people were all strangers to him, that they were not looking at him, anyway, but at the bridegroom by his side, and that it mattered very little what he did so long as he kept still and braved it out, if only the real best man didn't turn up until he was well out of the church. Then he could vanish in the dark, and go by some back way to a car or a taxicab and so to the station. The thought of the paper inside the gold pencil case filled him with a sort of elation. If only he could get out of this dreadful church, he would probably get away safely. Perhaps even the incident of the wedding might prove to be his protection, for they would never seek him in a crowded church at a fashionable wedding.

The man by his side managed him admirably, giving him a whispered hint, a shove, or a push now and then, and getting him into the proper position. It seemed as if the best man had to occupy the most trying spot in all the church; but, as they put him there, of course it was all right. He glanced furtively over the faces near the front, and they all looked quite satisfied, as if everything were going as it should, so he settled down to his fate, his white, strained face partly hidden by the abundant display of mustache and eyebrow. People whispered softly how handsome he looked, and some suggested that he was not so stout as when they had last seen him, 10 years before. His stay in a foreign land must have done him good. One woman went so far as to tell her daughter that he was far more distinguished looking than she had ever thought he could become, but it was wonderful what a stay in a foreign land would do to improve a person.

The music stole onward, and slowly, gracefully, like the opening of buds into flowers, the bridal party inched along up the middle aisle until at last the bride in all the mystery of her white veil arrived, and all the maidens in their flowers and many colored gauzes were suitably disposedabout her.

The feeble old man on whose arm the bride had leaned as she came up the aisle dropped out of the procession, melting into one of the front seats, and Gordon found himself standing beside the bride. He felt sure there must be something wrong about it, and looked at his young guide with an attempt to change places with him, but the man named Jefferson held him in place with a warning eye. "You're all right. Just stay where you are," he whispered softly, and Gordon stayed, reflecting on the strange fashions of weddings, and wondering why he had never before taken notice of just how a wedding party came in and stood and got out again. If he was only out of this how glad he would be. It seemed one had to be a pretty all around man to be a member of the secret service.

The organ had hushed its voice to a sort of exultant sobbing, filled with dreams of flowers and joys, and hints of sorrow; and the minister in a voice both impressive and musical began the ceremony. Gordon stood doggedly and wondered if that really was one eyebrow coming down over his eye, or only a drop of perspiration.

Another full second passed, and he decided that if he ever got out of this situation alive he would never, no, never, no, never, get married himself.

During the next second that crawled by he became supremely conscious of the creature in white by his side. A desire possessed him to look at her and see if she were like Julia Bentley. It was like a nightmare haunting his dreams that she was Julia Bentley somehow transported to New York and being married to him willy-nilly. He could not shake it off, and the other eyebrow began to feel shaky. He was sure it was sailing down over his eye. If he only dared press its adhesive lining a little tighter to his flesh!

Some time during the situation there came a prayer, interminable to his excited imagination, as all the other ceremonies.

GETTING GOOD

Dr. Gibbs, of England, tells us 95 per cent of the teeth are carious, at least in highly civilized countries. The percentage among native races is only 5 per cent, while the Maoris of New Zealand have only 1 per cent carious teeth.

Decay in teeth is not exactly new. Occasionally a tooth showing decay is dug up in some prehistoric ruin. While this is true enough, we find that among the earlier peoples decayed teeth were the exception and sound teeth the rule. Among present day people the rule is reversed.

It is the opinion of most experts that not all the brushing and washing will serve to reverse our rule. They help, but they do not go far enough. The same criticism applies to school dental clinics. Dr. Ottolengin, of New York, insists upon that point. He says there are not enough dentists in any city to clean and fill all the teeth of school children of that city, even though each dentist gave to it all of his time.

The far reaching remedy which Dr. Gibbs proposes—and I think most physicians and dentists agree with him—is that decay is due to improper diet, and the remedy is in the first few days of life. The baby must be breast fed, since breast fed babies develop better jaws and teeth than bottle fed babies. The next time for a change from present methods is weaning time, or the time of the prepare-to-wean.

The size and shape of the teeth suggest that the baby should gnaw and tear. Comparative anatomy shows that the shape of the jaw and teeth is a most accurate index to the food of an animal. The plain teaching of comparative anatomy is that a baby should gnaw bones and bite on hard toast, zwieback and such foods. The instinct of the baby points in the same direction.

When the child gets a little older he should have meat, both lean and fat, and hard foods which require much biting, gnawing and chewing.

"The pap fed child quickly becomes a bolter and will grumble if he has to eat a crust."

More important than what to eat is what not to eat. Above all, children must not be allowed to develop a sweet tooth. The less candy they eat the better teeth they will have. It is very much better for them to eat hard baked oatmeal cakes and hard cooked cereals without cream or sugar than to eat the porridge, gruel and other soft kinds. Children need either sweets or fats, but the need, as between the two, is interchangeable. If a child over 18 months and older is given plenty of butter, gravy and fat meat he will not crave sweets.

To clean the teeth of a child chewing hard food is superior to the toothbrush and dental floss. Eating fruit, and especially apples, furnishes needed sugar in a wholesome form and cleans the teeth very satisfactorily. Especially is it advisable to close the evening meal with some mouth cleansing food rather than a porridge which soils it.

Child Wives in Canada.

From the Manitoba Free Press.

That in the Ruthenian settlements between the lakes north of Teulon and in the Ethelbert districts, tuberculosis is rampant and infant mortality rife, were among the statements made by R. W. Murchie, who returned from a six weeks' social survey of this district.

"Marriage of girls under 14 is common, and under 18 the general thing," he said, 'and that to men very much older than themselves. In cases where the girl has been in English speaking districts, she objects strenuously, but in most cases she obeys her father's command in the matter."

The women work in the fields, very often carrying their infant children, and so have no time or strength to keep house, he said. One meal a day, or at the most two were cooked. For the others they came in and ate a chunk of bread and perhaps some fat. A room 10x12 feet would have a window of 18 inches, and even this was penned up in the winter.

"Tuberculosis is reaping such a harvest," Mr. Murchie said, "that actually the people despite their enormous families are in danger of extinction."

This Season's Stage Humor.

From the Pittsburgh Post.

Comedians with a show in Pittsburgh have been amusing their audiences with the following dialogue:

"Did I tell you about my brudder? No? Vhell, he is a pillet on a steamboat."

"A pillet? You mean he gives pills when you're seasick and saws off your leg before he pulls it."

"No, no—you mean a sturgeon. My brudder is one of tnose men what has a nice furnished room up on the deck and pulls the lever."

"You mean the liver?"

"No, I don't. I mean the lever—a crank, don't you know, which you pull to make the boat go when she don't want to."

"Look here, Honus. Here have I a letter from my uncle which is up in Wilmerding. My, but it is cold up there! I got cold trying to read what he says. Yes, it is so cold up there even the language is frozen as it falls from your lips."

"What do you do then?"

"Why, you have to pick it up and take it home and fry it to see what you said."

"How long have you had the letter?"

"Two weeks. I have only just opened it."

"How did you do it?"

"With a pair of deuces, I think."

"What did your uncle say?"

"Listen while I read:

"'My Dear Nephew: I have sent home my overcoat by express, because I don't need it any more where I am. I cut the buttons off to save weight. P. S.—You will find them in the pocket.'

"Why, you said it was so cold up there. Why don't he need his overcoat?"

"Hush, while I read. He says: 'When I was killed'——"

"'When he was killed?' Then he was dead already when he wrote that? Where did you get that letter from?"

"Oh, that's all right. I got it from the dead letter office."

The Sugar Famine.

From the Montgomery Advertiser.

It is announced that we are face to face with a sugar famine. Even raw sugar, meaning brown sugar, is scarce.

Well, we judge from the doctor's orders whenever he visits a patient that people consume too much sugar anyway. It is now too late to drink ice tea, so we can eliminate that refreshing drink from consideration. Parents of the present generation more often than not drank their coffee straight; in hard times plain old sugar cane molasses has been converted into sweetening for coffee for those who couldn't stand it bitter.

Too much candy and too much cake are probably eaten, especially by children. It is said that too much sugar rots the teeth.

So, it is possible to figure out just how much better off we are without sugar than we would be if we faced a salt famine.

Most foods contain sugar in greater or less degree, anyway. Then it's a campaign year, with plenty of sweet talk flowing from the mouths of politicians. By the way, what has become of the sugar industry that was "ruined" by the Underwood tariff?

Dr. Miller [illegible] of malaria on this tract without any great expenditure of money

Dr. Miller says, in the Railway Surgical Journal, that their plan has "decreased my work in treating native case of malaria 40 per cent It has improved the working efficiency of the tenantry approximately 25 per cent"

For the employer this is a good investment. The conditions should attract the cream of the labor The physician should not complain where his work is lessened 40 per cent

These are some of the methods employed. The use of patent chill tonics is not allowed. By curing the symptoms of malaria—the chills—but not the disease, chill tonics cause hematuria and chronic malaria. Dr Miller says: "Hemaglobinuria (also called hematuria), the scourge of the delta 20 years ago, is now but rarely seen. This is almost entirely due to the discontinuance of the use of chill tonics."

The importance of remaining indoors at night is impressed on the people. "The house of each white employe is thoroughly screened with 16 or 18 mesh wire. Every bed in the tenant houses has a bar, that does not open on the side, of 16 mesh. Each manager is supplied with three grain quinine capsules, compound cathartic pills, epsom salts, and castor oil, and instructed in their use. In 1915 the force used 50,250 quinine capsules, 480 six-ounce bottles of epsom salts, and 19,000 cathartic pills.

To prevent malaria they gave 15 grains of quinine at bed time for two nights each week during the flight of anopheline mosquitoes. The first flight of anopheline mosquitoes in that locality occurs in May, the last in October or November, with the first good frost. There is no reason for giving prophylactic quinine when there are no mosquitoes to infect—that is, from the last of October until May 1

To thoroughly cure a case of malaria they follow this plan. The patient, if an adult, is given epsom salts; if a child, castor oil. This is followed by five three-grain quinine capsules given at bed time. The quinine is repeated every night for four nights. Then it is given two nights a week for six weeks. Late in the fall the dose of quinine is followed by a dose of dilute muriatic acid in water—one drop of the acid for each grain of quinine.

The company employs a sanatorian, who advises as to breeding places for mosquitoes, draining, oiling and screening.

Malaria is doubly important just now since mosquitoes will soon disappear and human carriers will be the sole source of malaria. Last year blood examinations of employes showed that 10 per cent of 1,200 to 1,600 employes were malarial. These examinations were made in the winter. None complained of malaria, or even suspected that they had it. This winter, through having treated the cases more thoroughly, they expect to find fewer carriers. The carriers found will be given quinine by injection.

Submarines and Airships.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

By the sinking of the Cunard steamer Franconia, a liner of 25,000 tons, and four other vessels upon the same day, attention becomes focussed on the fact that diver warfare is being pursued as energetically as ever. For a time there was a lull, which was variously explained, the Germans stating that it was in deference to American demands, and the British claiming that it was due to the capture of so many submarines. The probabilities are that there was never any cessation of submarine activity and that what seemed so was the failure to torpedo any big battleship or merchant steamer.

There was doubtless greater caution exercised because of the danger of sinking vessels containing American passengers, but when there was no such hazard no mercy was shown. As a British transport, the Franconia would not be likely to have any neutrals aboard and, accordingly, she was sent to the bottom without shortshift.

It is also true that the British have netted a considerable number of divers. The mere fact that the voyage of the Deutschland has not been repeated is reasonable proof that submarining is not an altogether safe enterprise and that many divers must be captured. There is no reason why Britain should record every capture, while, in the nature of things, the Germans would not give publicity to such losses.

For all that, there is no circumstance of the war more striking than the enormous losses which have been inflicted by submarines upon belligerent and neutral shipping. Indeed, it has been said that one of the very strong reasons why the allies will not consider peace proposals is that if the war were to end tomorrow Germany, with comparatively light losses to her shipping, would be able to start out with a great advantage in ocean carrying. England would have to start building vessels, as France would have to start building her factories, while German ships and German shops would be ready for action.

As against the enormous tonnage destroyed, and soldiers on transports and warships killed, the losses inflicted by the airships have been trifling. To sink either a war or merchant craft is to weaken the fighting strength of a belligerent, but to bombard houses and kill noncombatants, often women and children, is to accomplish virtually nothing of any significance in the conflict. As destructive agencies, airships have never been worth their cost of construction, but they have played a most important part in the work of observation. It is not too much to say that they have completely revolutionised warfare both on land and sea. On land they have made it impossible to move whole armies secretly, which such success as Germany achieved in the North sea battle was largely due to aircraft informing the kaiser's high seas fleet that a detached British naval division was in a certain direction, as they also gave warning of the approach of Admiral Jellicoe and his string of dreadnaughts.

Airships are still valuable, chiefly as scouts, but the submarines are the real fighters.

Mark Twain a Billiardist.

In the October instalment of "Boys' Life of Mark Twain," which is running serially in St. Nicholas, Albert Bigelow Paine, it is stated, will tell how he came to know the great humorist and how his acquaintance ripened into the closest friendship and led to his undertaking the task of writing Clemens's official biography. Clemens himself, before he met Mr. Paine, had formed a rather high opinion of the latter's capabilities as a biographical writer from his "Life of Thomas Nast," when the project of his own biography was suggested to him he accepted the idea with all the enthusiasm of a boy, having himself already completed a few chapters of reminiscences. All his manuscripts, letters, diaries, and other papers were placed at Mr. Paine's disposal, and Mark Twain himself spent all his mornings during a long period dictating descriptions of his early life to a stenographer in Mr. Paine's employ. The dictation went on intermittently according to Mr. Paine until Mark Twain conceived the passion for billiard playing which occupied him almost from dawn till dusk during the later years.

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a godsend to me for I would have been in my grave today but for it. I would tell all women suffering as I was to try your valuable remedy."—Mrs. Wm. Oldtime Musical Watch.

An extraordinary timepiece has come into the possession of a jeweler living in Chillicothe, O., who is said to have got it on a recent visit to London. It is a watch of the antique class, made in Paris 125 years ago at a time when musical watches were much in vogue among the well-to-do classes. It is a fine specimen of the handmade article, and besides playing beautiful melodies strikes the hours and quarters. The dial is noteworthy on account of its rare and exquisite enamel work on beautifully chased gold. It is looked upon as a article of great value.

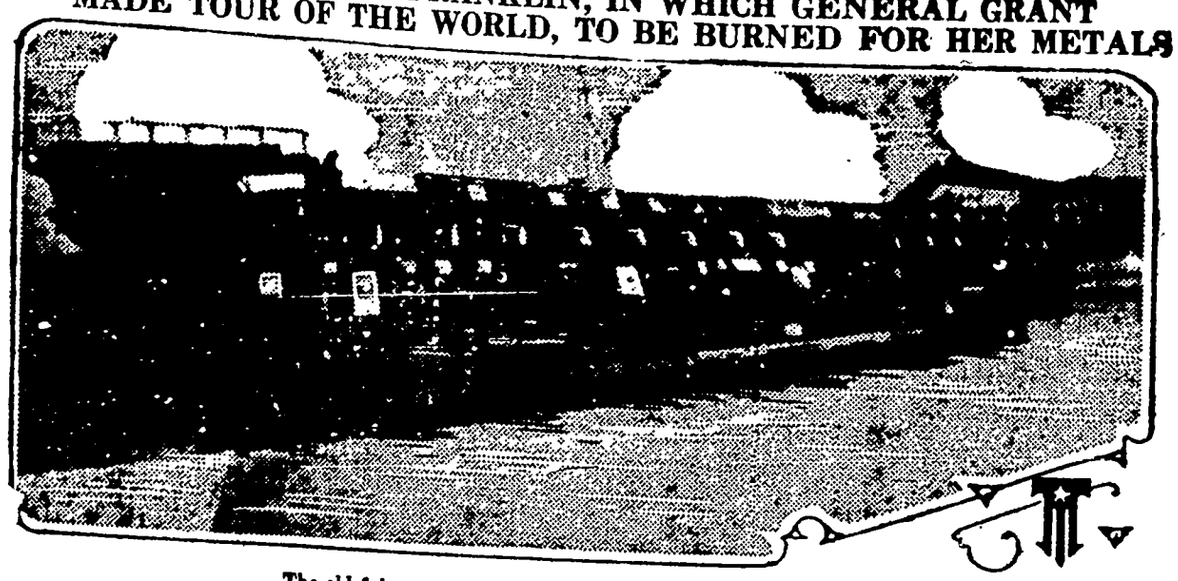
OLD WOODEN FRIGATE FRANKLIN, IN WHICH GENERAL GRANT MADE TOUR OF THE WORLD, TO BE BURNED FOR HER METALS



The old frigate Franklin on the beach at Eastport, Maine.

The old wooden frigate Franklin, on which General Grant made his tour of the world, was recently towed from Norfolk, Va., to Eastport, Maine, where she is now being stripped and will soon be burned for her metals. The Franklin, built in 1855 at Kittery, Me., was once known as the fastest wooden sailing warship afloat and was the pride of the U. S. navy. She was sold by the government to her present owners for $16,766.

SIAM SEEKING FACTS ABOUT HOW TO LIVE

Brother of King In America to Learn Hygiene and Sanitation Measures.

Gloucester, Mass., (by mail)—The kingdom of Siam, which through occasional bouts with its neighbors in the southeast corner of Asia, long has maintained its right to be known as "The Country of the Tai" (the free), now seeks a new independence—that founded upon hygienic living. For aid in freeing itself from the diseases of the tropics it turns to the new world

This is the mission to the United States of Mahidlo, prince of Songkla, brother of Vajiravudh, king of Siam of the North and South, sovereign of the Laos and Malays, who has arrived in this country and taken temporary residence at this old fishing port

The prince has a vision of a new Siam when the public health will be the serious concern of the government, the care of the body taught in the schools, sanitary living made compulsory, preventable diseases prevented, and with state control of marriages to make impossible the union of those not physically fit.

The prince has begun a course leading to a certificate in public health and embracing studies at Harvard university and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The certificate presupposes knowledge of anatomy, physiology, pathology, biological chemistry, sanitary biology, preventive medicine and hygiene, demography, vital statistics and sanitary engineering

Just now the sixth son of his late Majesty Chulalongkorn is stopping with his suite at a cottage at Bass Rocks, where he talked with youthful frankness—he is 24 years of age—but modestly, of his plans and ambitions. The prince is quite democratic and said this was in keeping with the spirit of Siam, which, while in theory an absolute autocracy, was in reality more democratic than some constitutional monarchies. Siam has no written constitution. The king's word is the law

"I am not likely to reach the throne, but that does not worry me," he said by way of introduction. "My ambition is to lead a life of usefulness I could live comfortably and honored as his majesty's brother, but I think it is very silly that I should be honored simply because I happen to be who I am. If I am to be honored I wish it to be because I have earned my honors."

During 10 years of study in England and Germany the prince pondered on how he could best serve his country, and finally decided that the people of Siam needed more than anything else an enlightened application of the laws of hygiene. America, where could be experienced a wide range of climatic conditions along with its higher institutions of learning, afforded him opportunities, he thought, the equal of which could be found in no other country.

"I am a lieutenant in the navy, now on reserve, but saving life is more to my taste than taking it. I believe in an efficient army and navy, sufficient only for defensive purposes and beyond that I prefer to see the public money invested in public works. I would rather build hospitals than warships. I have chosen the study of hygiene because I think it will give me the widest opportunity to be useful"

Drainage has been a serious problem in Siam because of the level character of the lower districts, where near the mouth of the river Menam Chao Phy stands the beautiful capital of Bangkok, with its population of more than 500,000. In lower Siam the rivers and intersecting canals have been the chief sewers and flushed by the rise and fall of the tides.

The king, who as the crown prince, visited the United States a few years ago, before his coronation in 1910, has worked out a great water supply and drainage system. The Menan Chao Phya has been tapped at various points north of Bangkok and the water carried through canals to pumping stations, where it is raised to two great reservoirs from which it has a natural flow to the capital. At the reservoirs the water is filtered, thus affording a pure supply. At the same time the water supply has made possible an effective sewerage system which is being gradually extended. The killing of cattle for food is done under strict supervision at government abbatoirs and other safeguards against epidemics have been taken.

"However, in recent years," said the prince, "the plague has been brought into Siam by Chinese, while cholera, beri beri, and other tropical and communicable diseases are altogether too common. The infant mortality is distressingly great. I hope to fit myself to cope with these problems or at least to lay the foundation for the work. Perhaps in 50 years there will be a healthy Siam."

The prince has advanced ideas on the subject of social problems. He is particularly interested in the relation of the use of alcohol to disease. In Siam the manufacture and sale of spirits is a state monopoly and the national drink, rice liquor, may not contain more than 26 per cent alcohol. He would further restrict the use of intoxicants and in this reform he would begin among the noblemen.

"I came here," continued the prince, "both because I believe I can learn most here and because we need American sympathy and help. We now have a few students in this country, but the fact is hardly known to you. If we did not regularly send students to London, Berlin and Paris, those governments would be highly offended. We wish Americans to pay a little attention to Siam. We want to trade with you, particularly to get your agricultural implements and we want you to take an interest in us."

King Vajiravudh is the only independent Buddhist sovereign in the world and as such is regarded as the chief champion of the religion of the Buddha. Nevertheless no foreigners are more welcome to Siam than American missionaries, according to the prince.

They have done wonderful things for us. They come not to make money, but to spend it. They do not quarrel over the manner in which the sacrament shall be administered. They teach, they administer to the sick, they build hospitals and schools. The Presbyterian board has aided greatly our educational authorities.

"The work of the missionaries from America is constructive. They submit cheerfully to our laws. They do not interfere in our politics. They teach the young to be clean, honest and patriotic—not to the United States, but patriotic to Siam We owe a great debt to the American missionaries. Their deeds are the kind that will live after them, a constant inspiration for good."

Slightly built, gentle in manner, and in speech, the prince of Songkla has the fervor of the reformer, but at the same time he impresses one as possessing the saving grace of practical common sense

How to Cut the Death Rate.

From the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

While Europe is showing in a most convincing way how to increase the death rate, in America a concerted effort is being made by health authorities in every state in the Union to fight not only the spread of malignant diseases but sickness of all kinds.

It is encouraging to announce that their efforts have been crowned with marked success

Death rates are decreasing wherever the mandates of hygiene and sanitary science are obeyed

This is the conclusion reached by experts employed in efforts to keep large communities free from an abnormal amount of sickness.

The sanitary laws and ordinances in existence in every community should be rigidly enforced by public authorities. Where such ordinances are not sweeping enough they should be amended, and where a lack of law handicaps the health authorities, then local or state legislative bodies should enact the necessary measures to give them a full legal right to carry on the work of the department of health

Such menaces to health as impure food, polluted water, unclean streets, weed-grown lots, decaying garbage, bad drainage, foul air in dwellings and contagion are still keeping the death rate high—higher, very much, than it ought to be, and this is too frequently due to the fact that laws covering these evils are not strictly enforced. If such laws are not observed there is utterly no use in keeping them on the statute books, and the public can look for and expect a high rate of mortality.

It has been shown, beyond all shadow of doubt, that the highest percentage of deaths is attributable directly to diseases which medical science know is to be preventable.

One statistician finds that a study of causes of death shows that in general but 4 per cent die from old age, 4 per cent more from violence, while 92 per cent die from diseases which, in nearly every instance, might have been prevented by the exercise of proper caution.

Of this last group this same authority claims that it is his opinion that the greater number of such deaths have been due directly to an unhealthy environment. It is also true that a lack of attention to hygiene in industrial centers where large groups of men and women are employed is the direct cause of swelling the mortality lists.

How the Savings Bank Helps.

Savings Bank Centennial Series.

The savings bank has been likened to a reservoir into which flow the little streams, to be assembled into one mass, out of which flows the larger stream, powerful because of its volume. The savings bank bestows its greatest benefits upon the individual and the community by this reservoir process. Scattered dollars are impotent dollars. Assembled dollars are powerful dollars. A thousand dollars divided among 1,000 different men are of little consequence to the possessor or to the body as a whole, but when the $1,000 are the property of one individual, they become of vastly more power than the sum total of the individual units. The congregated fund moves in one direction, and has a common aim, whereas the scattered dollars all have different ends and aims.

The beneficial work of the savings bank can best be seen by a simple illustration, drawn from actual fact and in process in savings banks every day. Let us assume that 100 people have deposited $10 each in a savings bank, thereby making a fund of $1,000 under the control of the banker One of the members of the group wishes to erect a house, having the land paid for He applies to the bank for a loan of $1,000 and is granted the use of the money deposited by the other members of the group. The carpenters, masons, plumbers, painters, etc., are employed and the fund begins to do its work. Each workman depends for his pay upon the savings bank, which will make advances from time to time as the work progresses. Not alone the men who are directly employed, but the material dealer who furnishes the brick, stone and mortar, the lumberman and the iron worker—wherever material is produced or manufactured the stimulus of this operation is felt.

The bulk of the money goes to labor, to be spent for food, clothing, shelter and amusement, and all the industries that cater to the wants of man feel the benefits It passes from hand to hand, down through the courses of society until eventually it finds its way back into some bank for a similar operation.

When a school district issues a block of bonds to build a new school house, a city for street pavements, sewers, water, parks, etc., the same results follow—labor gets the benefit And from the portion that is not used for immediate satisfaction of the wants of men, a portion finds its way back into the bank to be united with other thrift dollars to benefit the masses.

When it is remembered that a single savings bank in New York has on its books today over 7,000 open mortgage loans, representing $40,000,000 thus placed in circulation, the far reaching effects of the savings bank will become manifest.

We might well claim the savings bank to be a builder of cities, for it has, for a century, been assembling money from the many to lend to the few, to be passed out again through the pay envelope for the benefit of the many.

Every time you enter a well kept home, cross a well paved street, walk in the park, draw a cup of water, send your children to school—yea, it may be test open your pay envelope you may owe a debt of gratitude to some savings bank for furnishing the money that made all these things possible. You can best pay your debt by joining "the army of the contented" who use the savings bank as the reservoir to store their savings, to be passed out again with the savings of others for the benefit of mankind.

Bandits and the New Feminism.

From the New York World.

Is any prestige now left to the west as the home of the holdup and the congenial field of highwaymanry? If so, it must pass to the east in view of the daring attack of highwaymen on the occupants of a touring car near Hammonton, N. J. In this descent of masked men on a motor party carrying a payroll, not only were wild west records beaten in the savagery of the assault and the bravery of the defense, but all the traditions of outlawry were shattered. For a girl of 19 led the bandits, according to report, and another young woman drove the car through the hail of bullets.

Hats off, ye knights of the road, Apache Kids and Deadwood Dicks! Your trade has been feminized; a mere slip of a girl has outdone you. And old-time drivers of overland mail coaches may well do honor to the young woman at the wheel who put the car at top speed when the ambush was discovered and dashed on by the bandit gang, with her companions dropping under fire and herself wounded.

Here was feminism for you, of a kind to convert Jesse James to votes for women. It has been left to woman's superior hand to stage a holdup more thrilling than anything in the palmy days beyond the Missouri, more exciting than anything in the movies. As for the heroine of the car, let us hear no more of the question of woman's fitness to drive an automobile. What man could have acquitted himself as well?

"Help Me to Play the Game, Oh Lord!"

From the Fargo Courier-News.

"Some day I know the evening sun will sink adown its golden lane into the west, but I'll have read the Greatest Poem of All, and sought the solace of eternal rest. The little children still will play about, their laughter yet will rise upon the air, but I, who love them so, will never see, and nevermore for earthly things will care. Teach me, O Lord, before that time shall come, to know Thy love holds sway o'er everything, that Thou art watching all the paths we trod, from humblest laborer unto greatest King. O Lord, the way is sometimes hard, the thing I think a gift is oft a curse, but though I stumble, still I rise again, and keep on going, if for good or worse. Help me to learn the beauties of Thy world, the good that lies within my fellowmen, and that as Thou hast willed so shall it be, help me to play the game, Oh Lord.—Amen."

Thus sings Elwin Hunt, the new Kansas poet. A sermon and a prayer. A classic in words of one syllable. A song for the everyday man and woman. A tear quencher and a softener of hard work. Aye, help us all to play the game, oh Lord!

Juvenile Logic.

From the Indianapolis Star.

It was at a private entertainment, and a lady had just risen from the piano.

"Would you like to be able to sing and play as I do, dear?" she queried of a little 5-year-old miss.

"No, ma'am," was the unexpected reply.

"And why not?" asked the lady.

"'Cause," explained the small observer, "I wouldn't like to have people say such horrid things about me."

Less Crowded.

From Life.

Willis—Were you at the lecture last evening?

Gillis—Yes.

Willis—Wasn't that awful? The idea of 5,000 people jammed and squeezed into that little hall.

Gillis—On the contrary, I thought it was quite a relief after being out on the municipal golf links all afternoon.

Thrifty.

From the Chicago Herald.

It is said that Scottish humor is an electric spark that flies back and forth between the two extremes of whisky and religion. But the following anecdote is Scottish, without touching either extreme. A wife was asked by her husband what kind of a bonnet she would like him to bring her frae Glasgow, and she replied:

"Weel, ye'd best make it a straw bunnet, Jock, and when I'm done wi' it I'll feed it to the coo."

The Best Road of All.

I like a road that leads away to prospects white and fair,
A road that is an ordered road, like a nun's evening prayer;
But, best of all, I love a road that leads to God knows where.

You come upon it suddenly—you can not seek it out;
It's like a secret still unheard and never noised about;
But when you see it, gone at once is every lurking doubt.

It winds beside some rushing stream where aspens lightly quiver;
It follows many a broken field by many a shining river;
It seems to lead you on and on, forever and forever.

You tramp along its dusty way, beneath its shadowy trees,
And hear beside you chattering birds or happy booming bees,
And all around you golden sounds, the green leaves' litanies.

And here's a hedge, and there's a cot; and then—strange, sudden turns;
A dip, a rise, a little glimpse where the red sunset burns;
A bit of sky at eventime, the scent of hidden ferns.

A winding road, loitering road, a finger mark of God
Traced when the Maker of the world leaned over ways untrod.
See! Here he smiles his glowing smile, and lo, the goldenrod!

For a road that wanders straight; the king's highway is fair,
And lovely are the sheltered lanes that take you here and there;
But best of all the road that leads to God knows where.

—Charles Hanson Towne, in the Saturday Evening Post.

May Develop Irish Coal Mines.

The idea that Ireland will never become a mining country of any account is not the view of the Newry Urban council, which at their last meeting considered the proposals made by the Irish Association of Gas Managers at Dublin, in view of the present condition of the Irish coal supply. If not relieved, the gas managers said, the smaller gas works must be shut down and the government should be urged to provide an adequate supply of coal at reasonable rates. The Newry council approved this opinion and passed a special resolution to be presented to the British executive stating that the time was opportune for the development of the large and valuable coal measures which undoubtedly exist in Ireland.

Cardui Wins Suit.

After a trial in the United States District Court of Chicago, before Judge Carpenter and a federal jury, the jury found the American Medical Association guilty of libeling Cardui, the woman's tonic, which they had denounced as a "nostrum."

This is a vindication of the medicine and a proof that it has merit, which was recognized by a jury after a trial of three months, one of the longest civil cases on record.

Many doctors and chemists testified on both sides and the evidence totaled nearly four million words.

Their Privilege.

"Look here!" carped a muddy motorist, halting his muddy car in front of where Mr. Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge was situated, draped over his own fence. "Are those infernal young savages, just around the corner there, your children?"

"I reckon," was the nonchalant reply. "What have they been doing?"

"Doing! Why, ten or a dozen of them were playing in a mudhole, and when I came along the whole squad lined up and threw mud at me as fast as they could sling it. Look at me! Look at my car—"

"Aw, well, what can I do about it? This is presidential year, and they've got a right to sling all the mud they—yaw-w-w-wn!—want to."—Kansas City Star.

Metal Tent Supports.

Those fond of camping out will be glad to hear of a new contrivance consisting of a combined tent frame and cot, which dispenses with cumbersome poles and simplifies the question of how to move one's sleeping accommodation from place to place. The new tent supports are of light angle iron, and the longer pieces as well as those forming the cots which go with each tent are jointed so that they may be folded up when necessary. The frames of the cots are suspended from the uprights by two coil springs, used for the same purpose as springs in the ordinary house-bed. During the day the cots can be folded up against the tent frame and well out of the road, by releasing one of the springs at each end.

Tables Turned.

"You say the poor thing is unhappy?" asked the woman who listens eagerly.

"Yes," replied the woman who talks. "She has one of those ambitious husbands who wants her to go into politics, so that he can become socially prominent."

WORSE THAN THE SLIPPER

Punishment Meted Out to Indian Boys Certainly of the Most Strenuous Nature.

My grandmother had 12 children, and one uncle undertook to teach me the art of worship. He used to lead me to the sand banks of the Missouri river, where he would set fire to a pile of driftwood, and then, taking me by the hand, sing sacred songs to the fire and river. In the meantime he threw into them offerings of tobacco, red feathers, and sometimes oak twigs. I never knew the meaning of these offerings, but I always felt that some living thing actuated both the fire and the river. Another uncle came to visit us periodically, and every time he came my brother or I suffered at his hands. Sometimes he would rush to the spring, carrying me horizontally under his arm, and would plunge my head into the water until I almost suffocated. His common form of discipline was to let me hang by my hands on the crossposes of the wigwam until my arms ached. My body writhed before I dropped. This uncle seemed to like best to command my older brother to tie my hands and feet with a rope. Then he would order me to resist—an ordeal that would make us both cry. In the winter he would also sometimes roll us in snow naked. The punishment of Indian children is usually in the hands of some uncle rather than the parents. Our punishments were inflicted generally because we had disobeyed grandmother by failing to get wood at evening, had resisted fasting, had fought some Indian boys, or had cried without sufficient cause.—Southern Workman.

Want Hens in English Parks.

In the hope of saving a large part of the $40,000,000 spent every year for foreign eggs, an agitation is on foot to throw open London parks for poultry breeding. The scheme is receiving serious consideration from the authorities because it is one of the latest war-time economies suggested on a large scale. The promoters of the idea have asked for part of one park to start with. The plan provides for a site of about three acres and accommodation for 600 hens. The leading poultry breeders of the country will be invited to send six selected fowls of the same breed and strain. Scientific feeding tests are to be made. All the eggs will go to the wounded soldiers, and prizes will be awarded to the owners of the hens laying the most eggs.

A one inch pipe is being layed from there to the school house. The ditcher used by Mr. Greiman is one of his own patent and sure digs a fine ditch and a lot of it in one day. E. H. Ridder had charge of the laying of the mains and they were layed as fast as the ditch was dug. About Auto Repairs

The cost of maintaining a car depends mainly upon two people, the man who runs it and the mechanic who does the repair work. A careful driver will have but few repairs in his expense bill, if he goes to the right mechanic. An inexperienced or incompetent repair man will "fiddle around" for hours trying to locate the trouble, and you pay the fiddler. The experienced repair man knows at once where the trouble lies, and applies the remedy. When you bring your car to this shop it will be repaired by an EXPERIENCED and COMPETENT operator.

The Best Car

Many manufacturers and agents claim that theirs is the best car for general all around use, but it remains for the CHEVROLET to demonstrate the fact that it actually IS THE BEST CAR for general use. The elements entering into this fact are too numerous to be explained in an advertisement, but if you will call and see us and take a ride in one of our Model 490 CHEVROLETS we can then satisfy your desire for information on every point. There is more service to the dollar of expense in the CHEVROLET than there is in any other car made.

FATAL AUTO ACCIDENT

Mrs. L. E. Dow, of Sheffield, who was visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Mussman, at Germania, was called home last week on account of an auto accident to her husband. We have since learned that he was not badly injured. As these people are well known here we clip the following extract from an article in the Clarion Clipper regarding the affair: "Auto speeding has again claimed toll in this vicinity, when Monday afternoon a Studebaker Six being driven by L. E. Dow, of Sheffield, and Fred Whitney, also of that place, overturned at a point just east of the Chas Stevens place. The car was being driven at a rapid rate, and was enroute from Clarion to Elm Lake when the accident occured. It seemed that the driver lost control and the big machine left the road, turning over twice. Whitney was thrown headforemost to the hard road, and his skull fractured. He was otherwise bruised. A doctor was at once summoned, and as soon as possible the injured men were brought to Sheffield and every attention given them. Whitney never came to, and passed away at 4:30 Tuesday morning. He was a single man of about 30 years of age, and was associated with his father in the restaurant business at Sheffield. He was a popular young man, and for many years was one of the well known ball players of this section."

Elmer Dow is a former Klemme boy and his many friends are glad that he escaped so luckily. Mr Whitney is also known by some of our citizens having played ball here on numerous occasions, the last time about two years ago when he played third base here with Sheffield. He is a fine fellow and will sincerely missed by a host of friends

FARM SALE ADVERTISING

A recent issue of the Jefferson, Iowa Bee contained a total of 640 inches of Farm Sale Advertising, the largest amount of this class of advertising ever published in any Iowa newspaper. The Gridden Graphic says in commenting of the above fact:

"The progressive farmers of that district are learning the value of printers' ink in selling the prospective buyer about their sales. It was but a few years ago when a farmer thought he was getting extravagent if he spent $2 for newspaper space for his public sale besides the usual 100 bills. Now he considers the bills worth little and realizes that from $10 to $20 spent on newspapers is one of the best investments he can make. One ext a bidder at his sale often pays the bill several times over."

THE TABLES TURNED

It is nothing at all for lifelong republicans and democrats to bolt the gubernatorial ticket in Iowa this year, but it has remained for the editor of the Farnhamville Index to bolt the Methodist church for political reasons. Here's Brother Harbinger's bolting declaration in full: "The editor of this paper is a republican, has been practically all his life. He also is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, but when the leaders of that church or any other church denomination attempt to dictate to him, by passing resolutions in their annual confabs, as to whom he shall vote for, he is going to be just like thousands of others whose spiritual welfares are being looked after by the preachers. He is going to kick over the church traces. When a lot of hardheaded preachers get their noses hooked together and their minds "set" on one particular idea or notion, no argument is strong enough to change their plans. Mountains of evidence might be furnished them regarding their favorite political candidate, but they refuse to read it, to heed it, or believe it."

BRITT TO HAVE BAND

Arrangements have been made to retain the services of a band leader in Britt during the winter months, who will instruct the members of the new band two evenings a week and hold a rehearsal of the band once a week. The juniors played in the street and at the Coliseum last Wednesday evening. Considering the fact that nearly every member of the junior band was a beginner only about ten weeks ago, their music was fine and received much applause and commendation. Mr. Jeffers has given a good demonstration of his ability, not only to bring out a new band, but to put an old band in excellent shape. With him at the head of the bands this winter will insure Britt having a first class band of about forty pieces to commence the street concert work early next spring.—Britt Tribune.

FARM HOUSE DESTROYED BY FIRE

Early yesterday morning the house on the Weiland farm northeast of his home place was completely destroyed by fire together with all its contents. The farm is occupied by Mr. Weiland's two sons, Will and Pat.

The fire originated from an overheated stove. Mr. Weiland got up about 4:30 am and started a fire and then went back to bed. When discovered the fire had gained such headway that nothing could be saved.—Britt Tribune.

HELP FOR WORKING WOMEN

Some Have to Keep on Until They Almost Drop. How Mrs. Conley Got Help.

Here is a letter from a woman who had to work, but was too weak and suffered too much to continue. How she regained health:—

Frankfort, Ky.—"I suffered so much with female weakness that I could not do my own work, had to hire it done. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I tried it. I took three bottles and I found it to be all you claim. Now I feel as well as ever I did and am able to do all my own work again. I recommend it to any woman suffering from female weakness. You may publish my letter if you wish."—Mrs. JAMES CONLEY, 516 St. Clair St., Frankfort, Ky.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

All women are invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special advice,—it will be confidential.

SARDINIA'S SAINTS' DAYS

Each Village Has Its Annual Festival, When It Celebrates the Birthday of Its Patron.

Each "pease" or village of Sardinia has its annual festival to celebrate the birthday of its own particular saint or some other church feast. The most renowned of these is the "festa" of Saint Efisio, the national feast of the island. The ceremony is in the form of a procession from Cagliari, the chief city of Pula, a village nine miles away, with the return to Cagliari. The saint was an official in the army of Diocletian, and for his conversion to the Christianity was beheaded at Pula.

Yearly on May 1 the procession leaves and returns on the evening of May 4. It is composed of a cavalcade of horsemen, all in the costume of the ancient Sardinian militia, escorting the image of the saint, which is preceded by musicians playing the launeddas, an instrument made of three or four reeds of different lengths and resembling the pipe of ancient times.

Under cover of the hush and the supposedly bowed heads, Gordon turned desparately toward the bride. He must see her and drive this phantasm from his brain. He turned, half expecting to see Julia's tall, handsome form, though telling himself he was a fool, and wondering why he so dreaded the idea. Then his gaze was held fascinated.

She was a little creature, slender and young and very beautiful, with a beauty which a deathly pallor only enhanced. Her face was delicately cut, and set in a frame of fine dark hair, the whole made most expuisite by the mist of white tulle that breathed itself about her like real mist over a flower. But the lovely head drooped, the coral lips had a look of unutterable sadness, and the long lashes swept over white cheeks. He could not take his eyes from her now that he had looked. How lovely, and how fitting for the delightful youth by his side! Now that he though of it she was like him, only smaller and more delicate, of course. A sudden fierce, ridiculous feeling of envy filled Gordon's heart. Why couldn't he have known and loved a girl like that? Why had Julia Bentley been forever in his pathway as the girl laid out for his choice?

He looked at her with such intensity that a couple of dear old sisters who listened to the prayer with their eyes open, whispered one to the other: "Just see him look at her! How he must love her! Wasn't it beautiful that he should come right from the steamer to the church and never see her till now, for the first time in 10 long years. It's so romantic!"

"Yes," whispered the other; "and I believe it'll last. He looks at her that way. Only I do dislike that way of arranging the hair on his face. But then it's foreign I suppose. He'll probably get over it if they stay in this country."

A severe old lady in the seat in front turned a reprimanding chin toward them and they subsided. Still Gordon continued to gaze.

Then the bride became aware of his look, raised her eyes, and—they were full of tears!

They gave him one reproachful glance that shot through his soul like a sword, and her lashes drooped again. By some mysterious control over the law of gravity, the tears remained unshed, and the man's gaze was turned aside, but that look had done its mighty work.

All the experiences of the day rushed over him and seemed to culminate in that one look. It was as if the reproach of all things had come upon him. The hurt in the white dog's eyes had touched him, the perfect courage in the appeal of the child's eyes had called forth his deepest sympathy, but the tears of this exquisite woman wrung his heart. He saw now that the appeal of the dog and the child had been the opening wedge for the look of a woman, which tore self from him and flung it at her feet for her to walk upon, and when the prayer was ended he found that he was trembling.

He looked vindictively at the innocent youth beside him, as the soft rustle of the audience and the little breath of relief from the bridal party betokened the next stage in the ceremony. What had this innocent looking youth done to cause tears in those lovely eyes? Was she marrying him against her will? He was only a boy, any way. What right had he to suppose he could care for a delicate creature like that? He was making her cry already, and he seemed to be utterly unconscious of it. What could be the matter? Gordon felt a desire to kick him.

Then it occurred to him that inadvertently he might have been the cause of her tears, he, supposedly the best man, who had been late, and held up the wedding no knowing how long. Of course it wasn't really his fault, but by proxy it was, for he naw was masquerading as that unlucky best man, and she was very likely reproaching him for what she supposed was his stupidity. He had heard that women cried sometimes from vexation, disappointment or excitement.

Yet in his heart of hearts he could not set those tears, that look, down to so trivial a cause. They had reached his very soul, and he felt there was something deeper there than mere vexation. There had been bitter reproach for a deep wrong done. The glance had told him that. All the manhood in him rose to defend her against whoever had hurt her. He longed to get one more look into her eyes to make quite sure, and then, if there was still appeal there, his soul must answer it.

For the moment his commission, his ridiculous situation, the real peril to his life and true were forgotten.

The man Jefferson had produced a ring and was nudging him. It appeared that the best man had some part to play with that ring. He dimly remembered somewhere hearing that the best man must hand the ring to the bridegroom at the proper moment, but it was absurd for them to go through the farce of doing that when the bridegroom already held the golden circlet in his fingers! Why did he not step up like a man and put it upon the outstretched hand; that little white hand just in front of him there, so timidly held out with its glove fingers tucked back, like a dove crept out from its covert unwillingly?

But that Jefferson man still held out the ring stupidly to him, and evidently expected him to take it. Silly youth! There was nothing for it but to take it and hand it back, of course. He must do as he was told and hasten that awful ceremony to its interminable close. To took the ring and held it out, but the young man did not take it again. Instead he whisperedd, "Put it on her finger!"

Gordon frowned. Could he be hearing aright? Why didn't the fellow put the ring on his own bride? If he were being married, he would knock any man down that bared to put his wife's wedding ring on for him. Could that be the silly custom now, to have the best man put the bride's ring on? How unutterably out of place! But he must not make a scene, of course.

The little timid hand, so slender and white, came a shade nearer as if to help, and the ring finger separated itself from the others.

He looked at the smooth circlet. It seemed too tiny for any woman's finger. Then reverently, he slipped it on, with a strange, inexpressible longing to touch the little hand. While he was thinking himself all kinds of a fool, and was enjoying one of his intermittent visions of Julia Bentley's expressive countenance interpolated on the present scene, a strange thing happened.

There had been some low murmurs and motions which he had not noticed because he thought his part of this very uncomfortable affair was about concluded, when, lo and behold, the minister and the young man by his side began fumbling for his hand, and among them they managed to bring it into position and place in its astonished grasp the little timid hand that he had just crowned with its ring.

As his fingers closed over the bride's hand, there was such reverence, such tenderness in his touch that the girl's eyes were raised once more to his face, this time with the conquered tears in retreat, but all the pain and appeal still there. He looked and involuntarily he pressed her hand the closer, as if to promise aforetime whatever she would ask. Then, with her hand in his, and with the realization that they two were detached as it were from the rest of the wedding party, standing in a little centre of their own, his senses came back to him, and he perceived as in a flash of understanding that it was they who were being married!

There had been some terrible, unexplainable mistake, and he was stupidly standing in another man's place, taking life vows upon himself! The thing had passed from an adventure of little moment into a matter of a life tragedy, two life tragedies perhaps! What should he do?

With the question came the words, "I pronounce you husband and wife," and "let no man put asunder."

CHAPTER IV.

What had he done? Was it some great unnamed, unheard of crime he had unconsciously committed? Could any one understand or excuse such asinine stupidity? Could he ever hold up his head again, though he fled to the most distant part of the globe? Was there nothing the could save the situation? Now, before they left the church, could he not declare the truth, and set things right, undo the words that had been spoken in the presence of all these witnesses, and send out to find the real bridegroom? Surely neither law nor gospel could endorse a bond made in the ignorance of either participant. It would, of course, be a terrible thing for the bride, but better now than later. Besides, he was pledged by that hand clasp to answer the appeal in her eyes and protect her. This, then, was what it had meant!

But his commission! What of that? "A matter of life and death!" Ah! but this was more than life or death!

While these rapid thoughts were flashing through his brain, the benediction was being pronounced, and with the last word the organ pealed forth its triumphant lay. The audience stirred ex triumphant lay. The audience stirred excitedly, anticipating the final view of the wedding procession.

The bride turned to take her boquet from the maid of honor, and the movement broke the spell under which Gordon had been held.

He turned to the young man by his side and spoke hurriedly in a low tone.

"An awful mistake has been made," he said, and the organ drowned every thing but the word "mistake." "I don't know what to do," he went on. But young Jefferson hastened to reasurre him joyously:

"Not a bit of it, old chap. Nobody noticed that hitch about the ring. It was only a second. Everything went off slick. You haven't anything more to do now but take my sister out. Look alive, there! She looks as if she might be going to faint! She hasn't been a bit well all day! Steady her, quick, can't you? She'll stick it out till she gets to the air, but hurry, for goodness' sake!"

Gordon turned in alarm. Already the frail white bride had a claim on him. His first duty was to get her out of this crowd. Perhaps, after all, she had discovered that he was not the right man, and that was the meaning of her tears and appeal. Yet she had held her own and allowed things to go through to the finish, and perhaps he had no right to reveal to the assembled multitudes what she evidently wanted kept quiet. He must wait till he could ask her. He must do as this other man said—this brother of hers—who was of course the best man. Oh, fool, and blind! Why had he not understood at the beginning and got himself out of his fix before it was too late? And what should he do when he reached the door? How could he ever explain? His commission! He dared not breathe a word of that? What explanation could he possibly offer for his—his—yes—his criminal conduct? Why, no such thing was ever heard of in the history of mankind as that which had happened to him. From start to finish it was—it—was——He could not think of words to express what it was.

He was by this time meandering jerkily down the aisle, attempting to keep time to the music and look the part that she evidently expected him to play; but his eyes were upon her face, which was whiter now and, if possible, lovlier, than before.

"Oh, just see how devoted he is," murmured the eldest of the two dear old sisters, and he caught the sense of her words as he passed; and wondered down the aisle with the terrible eyes of scorn upon him, he seemed to feel the presence of Miss Julia Bentley leading onward toward the church door; but he would not take his eyes from that sweet, sad face of the white bride on his own arm to look. He somehow knew that if he could hold out until he reached that door without looking up, her power over him would be exercised forever.

Out into the vacant vestibule, under the tented canopy, alone together for the moment, he felt her gentle weight grow heavy on his arm, and knew her footsteps were lagging. Instinctively, lest others should gather around them, he almost lifted her and bore her down the carpeted steps, through the covered pathway to the luxurious motor car waiting with open door, and placed her on the cushions. Some one closed the car door and almost immediately they were in motion.

She settled back with a half sigh, as if she could not have borne one instant more of strain, then sitting opposite he adjusted the window to give her air. She seemed grateful but said nothing. Her eyes were closed wearily, and the whole droop of her figure showed utter exhaustion. It seemed a desecration to speak to her, yet he must have some kind of an understanding before they reached their destination.

"An explanation is due to you——" he began, without knowing just what he was going to say, but she put out her hand with a weary protest.

"Oh, please don't!" she pleaded. "I know—the boat was late! It doesn't matter in the least."

He sat back appalled! She did not herself know then that she had married the wrong man!

"But you don't understand," he protested.

"Never mind," she moaned. "I don't want to understand. Nothing can change things. Only let me be quiet till we get to the house, or I never can go through with the rest of it."

Her words ended with almost a sob, and he sat silent for an instant, with a mingling of emotions, uppermost of which was a desire to take the little, white, shrinking girl into his arms and comfort her, "Nothing can change things!" That sounded as though she did know but. thought it too late to undo the great mistake now that it had been made. He must let her know that he had not understood until the cermony was over. While he sat helplessly looking at her in the dimness of the car where she looked so small and sad and misty huddle beside her great boquet, she opened her eyes and looked at him. She seemed to understand that he was about to speak again. By the great arc light they were passing he saw there there were tears in her eyes again, and her voice held a childlike pleading as she uttered one word:

"Don't!"

It hurt him like a knife, he knew not why. But he could not resist the appeal. Duty or no duty, he could not disobey her command.

"Very well." He said it quietly, almost tenderly, and sat back with folded arms. After all, what explanation could he give her that she would believe? He might not breathe a word of his commission or the message. What other reason could he give for his extraordinary appearance at her wedding and by her side?

The promise in his voice seemed to give her relief. She breathed a sigh of relief and closed her eyes. He must just keep still and have his eyes open for a chance to escape when the carriage reached its destination.

Thus silently they threaded through unknown streets, strange thoughts in the heart of each. The bride was struggling with her heavy burden, and the man was trying to think his way ouf of the maze of perplexity into which he had unwittingly wandered. He tried to set his thoughts in order and find out just what to do. First of all, of course, came his commission, but somehow every time the little white bride opposite took first place in his mind. Could he serve both? What would serve both, and what would serve either? As for himself, he was free to confess that there was no room left in the present situation for even a consideration of his own interests.

Whatever there was of good in him must go now to set matters right in which he had greatly blundered. He must do the best he could for the girl who had so strangely crossed his pathway, and get back to his commission. But when he tried to realize the importance of his commission and set it over against the interests of the girl bride, his mind became confused. What should he do! He could not think of slipping away and leaving her without further words, even if an opportunity offered itself. Perhaps he was wrong. Doubless his many friends might tell him so if they were consulted, but he did not intend to consult them. He intended to see this troubled soul to some place of safety, and look out for his commission as best he could afterward. One thing he did not fully realize, and that was that Miss Julia Bentley's vision troubled him no longer. He was free. There was only one woman in the whole wide world that gave him any concern, and that was the little sorrowful creature who sat opposite to him, and to whom he had just been married.

Just been married! He! The thought brought with it a thrill of wonder, and a something else that was not unpleasant. What if he really had? Of course he had not. Of course such a thing could not hold good. But what if he had! Just for an instant he entertained the thought—would he be glad or sorry? He did not know her, of course, had heard her speak but a few words, had looked into her face plainly but once, and yet suppose she were his! His heart answered the question with a glad bound that astonished him, and all his former ideas of real love were swept from his mind in a breath. He knew that, stranger though she was, he could take her to his heart; cherish her, love her and bear with her, as he never could have done Julia Bentley. Then all at once he realized that he was allowing his thoughts to dwell upon a woman who by all that was holy belonged to another man, and that other man would doubtless soon be the one with whom he would have to deal. He would soon be fact to face with a new phase of the situation and he must prepare himself to meet it. What was he going to do? Should he plan to escape from the opposite door of the automobile while the bride was being assisted from her seat? No, he could not, for he would be expected to get out first and help her out. Besides, there would be too many around, and he could not possibly get away. But, greater than any such reason, the thing that held him bound was the look in her eyes through the tears. He simply could not leave her until he knew that she no longer needed him. And yet there was his commission! Well, he must see her in the hands of those who would care for her at least. So much he had done even for the white dog, and then, too, surely she was worth as many minutes of his time as he had been compelled to give to the injured child of the streets. If he only could explain to her now!

The thought of his message, with its terrible significance, safe in his possession, sent shivers of anxiety through his frame! Suppose he should be caught, and it taken from him, all on account of this most impossible incident! What scorn, what contumely, would be his! How could he ever explain to his chief? Would anybody living believe that a man in his senses could be married to a stranger before a whole church full of people, and not know he was being married until the deed was done—and then not do anything about it after it was done? That was what he was doing now this very minute. He ought to be explaining something somehow to that poor little creature in the shadow of the carriage. Perhaps in some way it might relieve her sorrow if he did, and yet when he looked at her and tried to speak his mouth was hopelessly closed. He might not tell her anything!

He gradually sifted his immediate actions down to two necessities: to get his companion to a safe place where her friends could care for her, and to make his escape as soon and as swiftly as possible. It was awful to run and leave her without telling her anything about it: when she evidently believed him to be the man she had promised and intended to marry; but the real bridegroom would surely turn up soon somehow and make matters right. Anyhow, it was the least he could do to take himself out of her way, and to get his trust to its owners at once.

The car halted suddenly before a brightly lighted mansion, whose tented entrance effectually shut out the gaze of alien eyes, and made the transit from car to domicile entirely private. There was no opportunity here to disappear. The sidewalk and road were black with curious onlookers. He stepped from the car first and helped the lady out. He bore her heavy boquet because she looked litrally too frail to carry it further herself.

In the doorway she was surrounded by a bevy of servants, foremost among whom her old nurse claimed the privilege of greeting her with tears and smiles and many "Miss Celia, my dears," and Gordon stood for the instant entranced, watching the sweet play of loving kindness in the face of the pale little bride. As soon as he could lay down those flowers inconspicuously he would be on the alert for a way of escape. It surely would be found through some back or side entrance of the house.

But even as the thought came to him the old nurse stepped back to let the other servants greet the bride with stiff bows and embarrassed words of blessing, and he felt a hand laid heavily on his arm.

He started as he turned, thinking instantly again of his commission and expecting to see a policeman in uniform by his side, but it was only the old nurse, with tears of devotion still in her faded eyes.

"Mister George, ye hevn't forgot me, hev ye?" she asked, earnestly. "You usen't to like me verra well, I mind, but ye was awful for the teasin' an' I was always for my Miss Celie! But bygones is bygones now an' I wish ye well. Yer growed a man, an' I know ye must be worthy o' her, or she'd never hev consented to take ye. Yev got a gude wife an' no mistake, an' I know ye'll be the happiest man alive. Ye won't hold it against me, Mister George, that I used to tell yer uncle on your masterful tricks, will ye? You mind I was only carin' fer my baby girl, an' ye were but a boy."

She paused as if expecting an answer, and Gordon embarrassedly assured her that he would never think of holding so trifling a matter against her. He cast a look of reverent admiration and tenderness toward the beautiful girl who was smiling on her loyal subjects like a queen, roused from her sorrow to give joy to others; and even her old nurse was satisfied.

"Ah, ye luve her, Mister George, don't ye?" the nurse questioned. "I don't wonder. Everybody what lays eyes on her luves her. She's that dear—" here the tears got the better of the good woman for an instant and she forgot herself and pulled at the skirt of her new black dress thinking it was an apron, and wishing to wipe her eyes.

Then suddenly Gordon found her lips uttering strange words, without his own apparent consent, as if his heart had suddenly taken things in hand and determined to do as it pleased without consulting his judgment.

"Yes, I love her," he was saying, and to his amazement he found that the words were true.

This discovery made matters still more complicated.

"Then ye'll promise me something, Mister George, won't ye?" said the nurse eagerly, her tears having their own way down her rosy anxious face. "Ye'll promise me never to make her feel bad any more? She's cried a lot these last three months, an' nobody knows but me. She could hide it from them all but her old nurse that has loved her so long. But she's been that sorrowful, enough fer a whole lifetime. Promise that ye'll do all in yer power to make her happy always."

"I will do all in my power to make her happy," he said, solemnly, as if he were uttering a vow, and wondered how short-lived that power was to be.

CHAPTER V.

The wedding party had arrived in full force now. Carriages and automobiles were unloading; gay voices and laughter filled the house. The servants disappeared to their places, and the white bride, with only a motioning look toward Gordon, led the way to the place where they were to stand under an arch of roses, lilies and palms in a room hung from the ceiling with drooping ferns and white carnations on invisible threads of silver wire, until it all seemed like a fairy dream.

Gordon had no choice but to follow, as his way was blocked by the incoming guests, and he foresaw that his exit would have to be made from some other door than the front if he were to escape yet awhile. As he stepped into the mystery of the flower scented room where his lady led the way, he was conscious of a feeling of transition from the world of ordinary things into one of wonder, beauty and mysterious joy; but all the time he knew he was an impostor, who had no right in that silver threaded bower.

Yet there he stood, bowing, shaking hands, and smirking behind his false mustache, which threatened every minute to betray him.

People told him he was looking well, and congratulated him on his bride. Some said he was stouter than when he left the country and some said he was thinner. They asked him questions about relatives and friends living and dead, and he ran constant risk of getting into hopeless difficulties. His only safety was in smiling, and saying very little; seeming not to hear some questions, and answering others with another question. It was not so hard after he got started, because there were so many people, and they kept coming close upon one another, so no one had much time to talk. Then supper with its formalities was got through with somehow, though to Gordon, with his already satisfied appetite and his hampering mustache, it seemed an endless ordeal.

"Jeff," as they all called him, was everywhere, attending to everything, and he slipped up to the unwilling bridegroom just as he was having to answer a very difficult question about the lateness of his vessel, and the kind of passage they had experienced in crossing. By this time Gordon had discovered that he was supposed to have been 10 years abroad, and his steamer had been late in landing, but where he came from or what he had been doing over there were still to be found out; and it was extremely puzzling to be asked from what port he had sailed, and how he came to be there when he had been supposed to have been in St. Petersburg but the week before? His state of mind was anything but enviable. Besides all this, Gordon was reflecting that the last he had seen of his hat and coat was in the church. What had become of them and how could he go to the station without a hat? Then opportunely "Jeff" arrived.

Twenty years ago Wilbur Penfield left his home in Springfield, Mass., and went west. Shortly afterward he read a notice of his mother's death in a Springfield paper and had always supposed it was true until he met her the other day in Bridgeport, Conn., where he has been working for the last 15 years.

TURKS OVERCAME BIG ODDS IN SUEZ RA

14,000 Camels Used In Transporting Army Across Desert to Romani.

Romani, Egypt.—(by mail)—Many features of warfare were developed, according to military men, in the battle of Romani in which the British defeated the Turks, the invaders losing some 9,000 in dead, wounded and prisoners out of their total force of approximately 14,000 men, as has been announced in official advices. The crossing of the desert with big guns and full equipment during the hot season was an unprecedented achievement, a representative of the Associated Press who was permitted to visit the entire battle ground after the conflict had been told previously by military authorities, that the task could be accomplished and that the army sitting along the Suez canal would be safe from attack throughout the summer. One of the few observers allowed, however, was Lieut. Gen. Sir Archibald Murray, commander in chief of the British forces in Egypt, who arrived immediately upon his assumption of command in last January he began preparations for just such an attack, and the victory at Romani was due to his foresight.

The Turkish expedition was engineered by German officers who had laid elaborate plans for the capture of the British post on the northern end of the canal. About half this distance is through a waterless desert and at this time of year the heat is intolerable. It would be impossible for men to march for in these sands one sinks to the ankles at every step, and horses are not fitted for work of this kind. The only means of transporting troops and supplies was on camels, and this was the method employed. About 15,000 of these beasts were used.

Unable to drag the heavy gun carriages through the loose deep sand the Turks constructed roads by digging small parallel trenches which would hold the carriage wheels, and filling the tracks with the scrubby plants which represented the only vegetable life outside the oases. These wiry plants formed a cushion over which sand was thrown, making a very practicable road for the guns. In some places where the sand was too loose and deep for the track, planks were laid lengthwise under the wheels.

Progress was necessarily slow and long before the Turks reached the watered positions which they took some miles in front of Romani, the British were ready and waiting for them. The defenders did not attack, as was the plan to draw the invaders on to an assault if possible. General Murray decided that he would wait a certain length of time and then force the issue if the Turks had not advanced. It seemed almost like a forlorn hope that the Turks, with their astute German leadership, would be led to an attack on the Romani position, for the whole country in this section is covered with great steep dunes, some of which cannot be climbed in places because of the sliding sands. All these dunes were well protected by the British. However, as had been hoped, at midnight on August 3 the Turks began the attack which ended in complete disaster for them on August 5.

Just what persuaded the Turks to try to take this apparently impregnable position is a matter of considerable speculation. Some express the opinion that they were misinformed as to the nature of the battleground. Others think they misjudged the British strength and hoped, despite the difficulties presented, to take the position and establisha base from which they could work against the canal. However that may be, they were cleverly drawn into the sand dune trap.

They fought bravely and their artillery shooting was very accurate and effective in places, but no body of attacking troops could hope to fight their way through these dunes when opposed by artillery, machine guns, cavalry and entrenched infantry.

The Turks suffered from lack of water since they had to advance from their base laden as lightly as possible. Both sides undoubtedly underwent almost the limit of human endurance from the great heat. The climax of the battle was the charge of the Anzac light horse, who arrayed themselves on a ridge some two miles and a half in length and hurled themselves down upon the Turks who were straggling forward in the sandy trap, and were defenseless against the terrible onslaught.

(Paragraph delected by censor.)

The general opinion is that the Turks must have proved to their own satisfaction that while they might bring troops across the desert, yet they could hope for no success during the hot season unless they had communication railways established back of them. For this reason, it is believed, that they will not venture to attack again in force during the summer.

A Turkish prisoner of war, a major who was captured at Romani, gave the correspondent an explanation of the Turkish expedition. The major declared that it was merely a reconnoitering force sent out to pave the way for a real advance which would take place shortly. The 14,000 men were to size up the British strength and make preparations along the way for the bigger army which was to follow. But his somewhat startling assertion lost some of its force when a fellow officer sitting beside him made an ineffectual attempt to hide a smile.

Bread Cheap in Australia.

From the Pittsburgh Leader

The figures on the price of bread in Australia are not needed to establish that the food price juggery that has furnished a national sensation here for some time is plain grouging, but they are interesting just the same. Figures have been produced in congress and out to show that the cost of bread to consumers is less in England, Belgium, Switzerland and other countries of Europe where the bread is made from American wheat.

In Australia the result is reached by going the other way around—Australian bread is made from Australian wheat and flour.

In Sydney, one of the largest cities, the government has made the following regulation in the price of bread: "Bread purchased at shops or bakehouses, 1-pound loaf 2 pence (4 cents); 2-pound load 3½ pence (7 cents), delivered, 2½ and 4 pence respectively."

The 8-hour day is universal in Australian and wages are higher than in America, yet Australians get their bread for about half what it costs Americans. According to the rules of the economic game it ought to be the other way, but it doesn't happen to be so. Another fact not commonly spread abroad is that in Australia the government took over the wheat supply and after giving the people bread at half the cost to Americans, has a good sized profit account for the government.

William and Mary College.

At the far end of Duke of Gloucester street (Williamsburg, Va.) stands William and Mary college, the second oldest institution of learning in America, from which such able men have been graduated that it is hard to believe they were ever boys like those of today, going about the grounds with or without white flannel trousers (you understand me, of course). I viewed them respectfully. "Presidents?" I asked myself. If they had understood and returned, "No; good mechanics," I would have been quite as impressive in answer.—Louise Closser Hale in Harper's Magazine.

Mrs. A. G. Clemens, West Alexander, Pa., writes: I have used Dodd's Kidney Pills, also Diamond Dinner Pills. Before using them I had suffered for a number of years with backache, also tender spots on spine, and had at times black floating specks before my eyes. I also had lumbago and heart trouble. Since using this medicine I have been relieved of my suffering. It is agreeable to me for you to publish this letter. I am glad to have an opportunity to say to all who are suffering as I have done that I obtained relief by using Dodd's Kidney Pills and Diamond Dinner Pills. Wheezer Had the Last Word.

It was an intensely cold morning and the city train was packed. A crusty old gentleman with his back to the engine "prefer'd" the window down for ventilation, whilst a wheezy individual facing the window persisted in pulling it up again, as he hated "these beastly east winds."

Although it was cold, words became very hot.

"I can't stand this stuffy herring box!" chortled the crusty man, tugging the strap and letting the window drop for the fourth time.

"Nor I these Siberian blasts that only convicts could stand," rejoined the wheezer. "Don't you know it's an old adage that 'when the wind is in the east 'tis neither fit for me nor you?'"

"Ha, ha!" laughed the crusty man, appealing to the passengers to laugh also. "Here's a man that does not know the old proverb. Why sir, the last words are 'man nor beast.'"

"Well, there's no difference in what I said," chuckled the wheezer, as the passengers roared in chorus.

No Light Matter.

Both Germany and Russia are having serious difficulties in getting enough matches "to go around." Germany lacks the proper kind of wood, which formerly was imported from Russia. The czar's country, on the other hand, is in want of the necessary chemicals for match-making, which the Russians used to get from Germany.

Marrying for money is about as easy a way not to get it as to gamble for it.

WIFE OF KAISER'S FIFTH SON IS RED CROSS NURSE ON FIRING LINE

Princess Oscar.

While other members of royalty have been content to confine their activities to the alleviation of the sufferings of those war victims who either have not been to the firing line, or have been there and have been incapacitated and returned, Princess Oscar, wife of the fifth son of the kaiser, has chosen for her endeavors the field that requires the greatest courage and most arduous service—the firing line. As a Red Cross nurse the princess has on more than one occasion been under fire. She is at present in Berlin recuperating after six months of work at the front and it is expected that after a brief rest she will return again to the field.

MORE METHODS FROM THE WAR ZONE.

In former times when a wound had become infected and pus was rolling out of it, it was the custom to stand by until suppuration had run its course. The surgeons in the British and French armies are not treating suppurating wounds that way. They disinfect the wounds and then close them up with adhesive strips. It takes from two to 10 days to disinfect a suppurating wound.

Three methods are employed by three groups of surgeons. There does not seem to be much choice between the methods. Carrel washes the wound with Dakin's fluid, 550 grams of carbonate of soda is dissolved in 20 liters of water, 800 grams of bleaching powder is added. The mixture is shaken for five minutes, then 20 liters of water are added and the mixture is again shaken and then allowed to stand for one hour. The clear fluid is siphoned off and filtered acid is added. The wound is washed out with this solution every hour or every two hours, until it is sterile. Then the wound is snugly closed with adhesive strips. It heals in a few days.

Dakin's fluid will not keep more than two weeks. Therefore Dakin and Cohen devised a powder called tomaline in England and chlorazene in the United States. A 3 to 4 per cent solution in water is used in the same way as Dakin's fluid is used. A 3 to 1 per cent solution of this powder is used as a mouth or a nose wash.

Wright washes out suppurating wounds with a 5 per cent solution of common salt. If the wound is very badly infected he uses a 10 per cent. The solution is carried into the wound through a drainage tube and drained out with gauze. After a day or two the wound looks clean and healthy and the salt solution is changed to an 8 per cent. When the wound is sterile it is closed by adhesive plaster.

Gray uses salt instead of salt solution. The wound is cleaned well. The skin around it is painted with iodine. The sides and bottom of the wound are covered with four to six layers of gauze saturated with 5 per cent solution of salt. Then several 40 grain salt tablets are laid on the gauze at the bottom of the wound. Next a layer of salt gauze is laid down and salt tablets are put on it. Then another layer of gauze and another layer of salt tablets. A wound four inches long and three inches deep takes 10 to 20 tablets. When the dressings are flush with the top of the wound the whole is covered over with absorbent cotton and bound tightly with bandages. The salt dressings as well as the salt tablets are sterilized by heat before used.

Salted Down.

I saved $5 every week, against the day that's wet and dank. Sometimes it made my spirit shriek to put that plunder in the bank. For there were sights I longed to see, and junketings I wished to make, to save was such a strain on me, I thought my old tin heart would break. But Susan Jane, my thrifty wife, was always watching at my side, and she would say, "You bet your life, you do not let the kopecks slide. Our strong box must not spring a leak," my wife would say, in solemn tones, "and at the end of every week, you'll pickle five gunmetal bones." I used to wish that Susan Jane were more like other wives I know, that she would think it safe and sane to let the coin for pleasure go. Then I lay down with divers ills, and spent three weary months in bed, my stomach full of drugs and pills, and poultices upon my head. We paid the druggist and the nurse, the doc, who brought me back to health; and, if I dodged the village hearse, it was because I'd saved some wealth. To every man there comes a day when Fortune wears a gloomy frown; and, while you're earning coin, I say, it's wise to salt some roubles down.

About the Loaning of Books.

"I am never going to loan a book again," said Marjorie determindly. "I wanted a certain volume today and, after long thought, remembered that I had loaned it months ago to Grace and she has never returned it."

"You should have a book place," said Marie. "I am sure your friend did not mean to keep your book, but probably does not remember from whom she borrowed it. Before lending a book cover it with brown paper and write your name and the title outside. Jot down in a notebook to whom it is loaned and never be so foolish as not to ask for it if it's not returned within a reasonable time."

"There is almost as much free masonery shown towards other people's books as toward other people's umbrellas. Books borrowed from circulating libraries, too, are often decorated along their margins with comments apropos and otherwise, written by various readers. And library volumes are not the only ones abused in this way. It cannot be denied that books loaned to personal friends are often returned to their owners, not only underlined and lead pencilled, but dog eared and soiled as to the cover.

"To a book lover such treatment of favorite volumes results in almost physical pain, and, in time, ends in a refusal to loan books at all. It spoils all one's pleasure to find another person's comments written on the margin of some special passage which the owner of the book has enjoyed. Nor does it help to buy a new copy even if she feels able to afford it, because often one's enjoyment of some story has more to do with the donor or the special edition one has had for a long time, than with the author's plot.

Mixed Genealogy.

"John," said Mrs. Atwood, thoughtfully, "everybody in society appears to think an awful lot of genealogy these days."

"Jennie what?" exclaimed John, as he looked up from his evening paper.

"Genealogy," repeated Mrs. Atwood.

"What's that?"

"I don't exactly know," replied Mrs. Atwood, "but I think it's a tree of some kind. At least, I heard some ladies refer to is as a family tree."

"Well, what of it?" he asked.

"Why, it seems to be a sort of fad, you know, and every one who is any one has to have one, I suppose."

"Buy one, then," he said, irritably. "Buy the best one in town and have the bill sent to me, but don't bother me with the details of that affair. Get one, and stick it up in the conservatory, if you want one, and if it isn't too large."

"But I don't know anything about them."

"Find out, and if it's too large for the conservatory, stick it up on the lawn, and if that ain't big enough, I'll buy the next garden in order to make room. There can't any of them fly any higher than we can, and if it comes to a question of trees, I'll buy a whole orchard for you."

Still she hesitated.

"The fact is, John," she confessed at last, "I don't know where to go for anything in that line. Where do they keep the family trees and all such things?"

"What do you suppose I know about it?" he exclaimed. "You're running the fashion end of this establishment, and I don't want to be bothered with it. If the florist can't tell you anything about it, hunt up a first class nurseryman and place your order with him."

Fall Days.

Oh, the frost is on the pumpkin, Mary Jane; and the farmer hauls the fodder in his wain; and the ancient claybank mare has her winter coat of hair, and the cows are bawling sadly in the rain. In the morning there's a nipping, eager breeze, and the edges of the brook begin to freeze; all the summer bloom is dead, and the pretty birds are sped, and I have rheumatic twinges in my knees. You have heard me in the summer, Mary Jane, you have heard me raise the dickens and complain, wishing for some winter sleet, telling how the sizzling heat filled my person with a punk, unpleasant pain. And already, with a sad and longing sigh, I am thinking of the beauties of July, and I swear by August, too; then the skies are bright and blue, and a man can sit in comfort then and fry. I'm opposed to Father Winter and his storm; I indorse the kind of climate that is warm; when the nights are white with frost they increase our living's cost, and it's time the weather bureau knew reform.

Who Tore It?

An old couple had come up to London on a short holiday and, while looking around one day they saw over a shop's sign which read: "Johnson's Shirt Store."

"Well, I declare!" said the old lady. "I wonder who tore it, and what do they want to tell people about it for? Can't his wife mend it?"

Concentrated Sights.

"He says he's traveled thousands of miles!"

"Ah, he may have seen a great deal!"

"Yes, many things. He's been floor walker in a department for 27 years."

A Solemn Warning.

"Do you think our republic is in danger?"

"Certainly not," replied Senator Sorghum. "It is reasonably safe now. All I say is that I shudder to think of what may befall it if I should happen not to be re-elected."

FULL OF SPIRIT OF REVOLT

Deep Feeling Against Injustice Was a Factor in the Career of Bobbie Burns.

Revolt was temperamental and chronic in Burns. Sometimes this revolt was followed by a reaction of feeling; then the baffled rebel could only fall back upon resignation, upon a fatalism that soured the heart and turned mirth to melancholy, upon a pessimism that closed all doors of hope for the poor with "added proofs that man was made to mourn," and "death the poor man's dearest friend, the kindest and the best," but this revolt was a constant factor in Burns' career.

It made him the fiery democrat, the Whig partisan; it got him into trouble by tempting him to approve publicly of the earliest outbursts of the French revolution.

And yet revolt was restrained in him by profound insight of the law of compensation. He perceived that honest poverty, clean, well mannered, blessed with reverence, was never the fit object of pity, for the poor, on the average, were more happy than the rich.

Cold Reception.

"From the days of my childhood," said Sir Knight Stauze, "I was ambition to tread the boards, and when I finally butted in among the stage scenery, I felt that I was really due."

"Well, how about it?" queried the great tragedian, Count DeTies.

"Alas, I was mistaken," continued the near actor. "Before I had played one consecutive night I discovered that instead of being due I was a frost."

THE DANGER OF ILLITERACY

It is gratifying to note that the tendency of the age is setting more strongly to a general education of the youth of the land. Many states, unable to solve the educational problem in any other way, have passed compulsory school laws, and in some localities these are being enforced. Needless to say that where such is the case the results are most gratifying.

Still there are many sections of our country where this is not the case—many sections where ignorance is still at a premium.

This should not be. No child should ever be permitted to reach maturity without being given the ground work of a liberal education.

There can be no greater menace to the safety of this republic than that of ignorance. It is the father of crime and the mother of treason.

Of late we have been deluged with argument for national preparedness. To our way of thinking the most effective preparedness that this nation could attain to would be to see that every child within its borders is lifted above the soul paralyzing slough of ignorance. It would be worth more than the entire heavy ordinance of the Kaiser or all the dreadnaughts of Britian.

"Vox populi, vox Dei" is indeed a noble sentiment, but it is true only in so far as the voice of the people is the voice of an enlightened, intelligent people. It were a mockery of an omniscient God to suppose otherwise.

Let us as a people awake to the great fact that this land can never be what the Creator intended it should be until our people are all intelligent, educated, well informed citizens.

There are few social or political problems of which education is not the sure solution.

ANGER

Ever stop to think how foolish is anger—how useless? Not only this, but anger weakens and unnerves and renders us unfit for battle, be that battle of the brain or the brawn.

Ever watch two professionals spar? See the clean-cut exhibition of skill and science as each receives and returns blow for blow. But wait until one becomes angry. Gone is all that fine science and in its place is the brute lust of battle. Now see how terribly unprepared is the angry man to stand before his smiling adversary. Passion driven and furious, he is an easy mark, and his defeat is foretold from the beginning. Again and again the scientific blows of his cool and quiet opponent beat down his guard and are driven to vital parts of his person, and blind with passion he is powerless for defense to say nothing of offense.

And as in the sparring ring, so in the larger circles of life. The man who can with a smiling face and stout heart meet the blows of life is armed for the fray and victory is his. The shafts of opposition, of envy, of malice, or hatred roll off him as the water from the back of a duck. He is impervious to attack. He is unconquerable.

Does your temper give way under the annoyances and vexations of life? Then stop—buck up—get a fresh grip on yourself.

Remember, anger never conquers any but the heart that harbors it.

Smile.

OUR SCHOOLS

Is the above caption of any interest to you? Or do you not take any interest in things educational? We believe that every public spirited citizen should take an active interest in school matters especially if they have children of school age—for a good school is one of the most essential things in any community worth while.

Klemme is recognized for many miles around as a good business center. We have showed our progressiveness in many ways as the improvements of the town will attest—all except in one thing—our school.

It is true that we have good teachers and able directors and the school is A No. 1 as far as the tenth grade—the limit of educational affairs in Klemme. Are you satisfied? We are not. There is not a town in the state of Iowa, that we know of, the size of Klemme that is not supporting a high school, and many towns much smaller than this are doing so. You do not have to go far to prove it. Take for example, Meservey, Goodell, Rowan, Alexander, Kanawha, Corwith, Thornton, and we could go right on naming town after town no larger than Klemme which have twelve grade schools and you would not like to acknowledge that Klemme is not a better town than some of them, would you not?

We say wake up, and think this matter over. It is high time that we were doing something better for the children of Klemme and vicinity. The people of this vicinity are not satisfied that their children have reached the acme in education or they would not send them to other places to finish school where they have the advantage of two more years of additional school work.

This suggestion is not offered as a "slam" toward anyone we are all to blame for this educational rut and neglect. The fact is we have been growing so much in other lines that the schools have been overlooked. Are we going to continue to overlook them?

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by washing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink plenty of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in it no longer is a source of irritation, ending bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys and active. Try this; also drink less water drinking, and no more wonder what became of your backache.

HOME MEN FOR HOME POSITIONS

No other proverb in the world's homage is so true as the old saying that "A prophet is not without honor save with in his own country." But why this is so we can see no earthly reason why he should be without honor in his own country. Yet, sad to state, that seems to be almost invariably the case.

We have puzzled much over this peculiarity of mankind. Why cannot a young man succeed in life just as well at home as away from home? Is it really a fact that he cannot, and has this basic fact of human nature given rise to the proverb? Or has the endless repetition of the proverb worked to create the condition?

We believe the latter supposition to be correct. We can see no good reason why, all things else being equal, a young man should not succeed just as well at home as abroad.

And this suggests another phase of the question.

Why is it that many communities have gotten into the habit of seeking applicants for responsible positions among the citizens of other communities? This is particularly true in educational circles. Any man with a knowledge of school conditions, go where you will, you will find the greater number of responsible positions in any community filled by people from a distance. Rarely is a home man found in such a position.

Our young men and young women grow up, study and secure good educations, only to scatter out in the world in search of good positions; while the management of their home schools is turned over to strangers.

Go into the stores and manufacturing plants of almost any town, and you will find the same conditions prevailing there—home boys leaving home in search of employment, while their fathers are importing their assistants from a distance.

Now we submit that this condition of things is all wrong. People argue themselves into the belief that a young man can not succeed where he is known of everybody and where he knows everybody else, and so a stranger fills the place that should be his, while he roams the world in search of a position in lieu of the one he by rights should fill.

"Home men for home positions" is the just and sensible view to take. In the first place, the home man is well known, and we run no such risk of picking an incompetent or untrustworthy man in selecting him as when we employ a stranger. Who has not known, for instance in schools, of many communities torn up and disorganized by incompetent and unreliable teachers brought from a distance? Such instances are all too numerous, and in many of these cases it might all have been so easily avoided had those responsible for the trouble have employed a home man who was probably anxious for the place and really in need of it.

If we are true to our home community we must stick to our home people. We must see to it that no stranger fills a position which a home man is capable of filling and will accept. This is not only the wise and sensible rule to adopt, but it is only justice. No man should be forced to seek employment from strangers while their responsible positions to be filled among his home people for which he is fully qualified.

CRIPPLED CHILDREN MAKE MOST OF LIFE

State's Wards Enjoy Stay at Hospital; Show Courage by Playing Football, Crutches and All.

Crippled children under treatment in the Perkins Act ward of the University hospital at Iowa City are by no means deprived of the enjoyment of life which falls to more able-bodied youngsters.

Many of them are exceptionally keen mentally. They grasp the lessons taught them in a special school with amazing ease, and find time to exercise mind and imagination in many additional ways.

One enterprise developed by a group of these wide-awake youngsters recently is the publication of a newspaper. It was at first printed in ink by the laborious, hand process. Interested adults have contributed a typewriter, and with its help the youngsters now get out their sheet containing news of the hospital, a little world in itself.

Nothing dismays these youngsters. Recently they organized two football teams, with seven boys on each side, and played a game, with crutches often aiding the half-backs in their progress with the ball. Of course, they were under the observation of a nurse all the while, and she saw that the game did not go beyond the point of being good exercise.

Call on Henry Lau & Son they will give you a good deal on all machinery, especially seasonable machinery such as plows and manure spreaders. We sell the Flying Dutchman goods and there are not any better goods made.

Our Government Recognizes the value of Hog Preparations

In 1904, Dr. D. E. Salmon, D. V. M., chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, published Farmers Bulletin No. 24, which treated on Hog Cholera and Swine Plague. On page 11, he gave a formula which has since been called the Government formula, consisting of seven ingredients.

Dr. M. Dorset, M. D., chief of the Biochemic Division, Bureau of Animal Industry, published in 1909 a new bulletin on Hog Cholera, Bulletin No. 379. This bulletin has been reprinted many times and is still being issued. On page 19 of this bulletin the Government formula is printed and Mr. Dorset says: "it has a very good condition powder," and also, "it prevents the occurence of disease in so far as it improves the general health of hogs."——Again in Farmer Bulletin 205, issued by the Government and prepared by George M. Rommel, B. S. A., of the Bureau of Animal Industry and issued the last time September, 1915, we find this same formula. This bulletin is called "Pig Management" and the formula is found on page 42——The Government in three publications has come to the front and up one of presenting this formula. This formula is used in Standard Hog Hog Regulator and in addition five other valuable tonics and worm expellers are used.

Standard Hog Regulator is generally recognized as the leader.

KLEMME, IOWA

A new idea in exposure meters is a means for accurately judging the actinic value of the light at the time of making a picture, and thereby arriving at the correct length of exposure to be given the sensitive film, has been recently introduced by an American film manufacturer, according to the Scientific American. The improvement relates particularly to those cameras which carry a roll film. As these films are now made they are backed with a sheet of black or red paper for the purpose of protecting them from the light, and they have imprinted upon them numbers which appear under a tiny opening in the back of the camera and serve as a guide to the operator in properly spacing the exposures on the film. The new scheme, in addition, contemplates attaching to the backing paper pieces of sensitized paper at regular intervals which pass along under another opening, and by observing the change which takes place in the color of these pieces as they are exposed under the opening, the operator is enabled to arrive at the length of time the shutter is to be opened in making the exposure for the desired picture.

The United States biological survey is now making its third annual count of birds, with the aid of volunteer enumerators all over the country Each enumerator undertakes to count the number of breeding pairs of each species found on a selected area of 40 to 80 acres, and the count actually consists in an enumeration of the male birds found in the course of a few early morning reconnaissances. From the figures thus obtained estimate are made of the bird population in the various sections of the country. This year the survey is making a special effort to obtain statistics from the semi-arid desert and mountain regions of the west, and also from the fruit districts of the Pacific coast and the south Atlantic and gulf states.

In Japan the nursery is still protected from the inroads of measles and other infections by means of an inscription over the nursery door saying with exquisite unbanity "this child is not at home" In the Wellcome Historical Medical museum, says the London Lancet, a most fascinating exhibition is on view, illustrative of "Japanese charms, amulets, votive offerings and objects of medical interest," among which these nursery notices are the charms embodied as toys. A yellow tiger with a wagging head is now said to be a toy but at one time it was a form of exorcism against palsy and numbness of the limbs

The mines of the Transvaal expended the sum of $55,526,775 for stores during 1915, an increase of $2,457,585 over the preceding year. Of this huge expenditure the purchases of the gold mines alone amounted to $52,931 669, the rest being divided between the diamond, coal and other mines of the province. Of the total purchases by the gold mines, the Witwatersrand was responsible for all but $2 210 131, showing the paramount importance of this district as compared with the other mining districts of the Transvaal

Any one who, when a child, was sent to the store for "pigeons' milk" may console himself with the knowledge that the practical joke was on the practical person. For "pigeons' milk" is not a myth but a common term for a liquid secreted by these domesticated birds It is made in the parental crop from half digested grain and fed to the young, which come in pairs two or three times a year

The deepest parts of the sea are not in the middle of the oceans, as may be commonly supposed, but near the shore. Thus the Swire deep, 32,089 feet, more than 3,000 feet deeper than Mt. Everest is high, is off Mindanao in the Philippines; the Aldrich deep, 30,950 feet, close to the Tongan and Kerwandeck islands, and the Tuscarora deep, 27,600 feet, along the coast of Asia north of Japan.

A fast Sante Fe train was brought to a sudden stop just north of Udall, Kan., by two jerks of the cord connected with the air brakes. The conductor ran forward to investigate and found that an elephant in the baggage car had his trunk over the cord. He wouldn't let go and the cord had to be cut on each side of the trunk before the air could be released and the train could proceed

"While war," writes the London Economist, "impoverishes us by preventing our increasing our wealth, it also is teaching us to work harder and to go without many things that we used to think essential If the nation faces its after war task wisely and bravely, it may yet astonish the world by the rapidity and completeness of our triumph over it"

The states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho will have 50,000,000 bushels of wheat to move to the Atlantic seaboard in the next few months, and there is a dearth of cars in which to move it. MUST PLAT ROADS TO SECURE FEDERAL AID

County Boards Asked to Designate Primary and Secondary Roads For Improvement.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28.—In preparing a program for road improvement in Iowa, in order to claim federal aid, the Iowa highway commission has asked the board of supervisors to designate the primary and secondary roads in both county and township road systems.

According to the plan proposed, the roads with heavy travel will be classified as primary roads which should receive attention first in the way of paving, graveling or other improvement. The roads which have light travel and where the necessity of surfacing if not great, will be placed in the secondary system, to receive attention when the district interested direct.

There are 104,000 miles of road in the county and township road systems of Iowa. Of this mileage 16,000 is in the county road system.

T. H. MacDonald, state highway engineer, believes that in classifying the country roads, about 5,300 miles, or one-third of the total of 16,000 miles of the country road system, would be placed in the primary system as having travel sufficient to warrant immediate surfacing.

The federal government will give Iowa about $445,000 annually as aid in good road building It is specified that not more than 50 per cent of the cost of any road project shall be paid by the federal department from the appropriation made by congress for this purpose

Before granting any aid, the officials at Washington have demanded to know whether Iowa has a definite plan of road improvement. They have called for a general outline of the work proposed in this state. The government will pass on each project separately as to whether aid is to be granted

SUPREME COURT FACETIOUS ABOUT BOOZE IN AUTO

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28 —Beer in an automobile does not have as much affect on the machine as it would if the beer were consumed by the driver, the supreme court commented in affirming the verdict of $300 which F. O Okin secured against Madison county for damages to his automobile by a bad approach to a bridge on the road between Des Moines and Winterset.

On this point the court says

It is made to appear incidentally that there were 24 bottles of beer in the car at the time of the accident This circumstance has its suggestiveness. But it is also made to appear that the 24 bottles of beer constituted a case which had not been opened. The beer therefore was unconsumed. To some minds the gyrations of the car would seem suggestive of the presence of the intoxicating liquor But it would not do to hold that the presence of unconsumed beer in a car would have the same effect upon the car that it would have had upon the driver if consumed by him"

MANY PARALYSIS VICTIMS AT UNIVERSITY HOSPITAL

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 28.—Victims of the recent epidemic of infantile paralysis are beginning to come to the hospital of the University of Iowa for the treatment afforded by the state under the Perkins law.

With immediate attention to the physical defects which have resulted from the attack of paralysis, these new patients have much more hope of recovery than many others whose treatment has come long after the trouble arose. It is altogether possible that the facilities now provided in Iowa will save the majority of Iowa children affected from paying the most awful penalty the disease inflicts.

Nearly 500 children have already been treated in the hospital since the Perkins law went into effect. Sixty per cent of them have been victims of paralysis. The rest have been divided chiefly between tubercular trouble and congenital deformaties.

SOUTHERN IOWA WOMEN BITE ON PETTICOAT SWINDLE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Oct. 28.—Scores of women in southwestern Iowa have recently been swindled out of 10 cents each by a Minneapolis concern, the officers of which have fled from federal court officials, leaving enormous quantities of mail, with money enclosures, behind them. Reports from Minneapolis are that 25,000 of these letters each day this week have reached the office of the concern, which, through promise of a 'new 1917 model silk petticoat," induced each woman solicited to pay a dime to the agent or company and promise to induce five other women to form a chain for the same purpose.

WHITING BANK CANCELS 1916 HORSE AND COLT SHOW

Whiting, Ia., Oct. 28.—Because of bad roads the Whiting Horse and Colt show for 1916 has been cancelled. It is announced that the show will be held in 1917. The show for this year was first scheduled to be held on October 21 and then was postponed to Saturday, October 28. As the season is getting late, and farmers have been delayed somewhat in corn husking, it was thought it advisable to set a new date for this year. The Whiting Horse and Colt show has been an annual number for many years, always drawing a large outside attendance and calling out some fine exhibits.

Once Democratic Candidate For Supreme Court Justice—Has Appealed From Decision.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Oct. 28.—Maurice O'Connor, once democratic candidate for supreme court justice, and former law partner of Senator Kenyon, was adjudged insane yesterday afternoon by the county insanity commission. COSTS $1.60 PER ACRE TO PLOW LAND WITH TRACTOR

Ames, Ia., Oct 28.—One acre of ground can be tractor plowed 6 inches deep on two and one-quarter gallons of kerosene and one-eighth gallon of lubricating oil.

This was demonstrated in a two-day tractor plowing test conduced at Iowa State college by the agricultural engineering department. The complete results of the test represent probably the most comprehensive data on tractor plowing operations that have been worked out by any college

It took one hour and 17 minutes to plow an acre. The length of furrows was 548 feet. Dead furrows were 300 feet apart. Because of the shortness of the field one-sixth of the time was spent in turning.

The total cost of plowing an acre is figured at $1 60 This is figured on the basis of kerosene costing 10 cents a gallon, lubricating oil, 32 cents a gallon, operator's time 50 cents an hour, interest, depreciation and repairs 6.8 cents per acre.

IOWA DAIRY PRODUCTS NOW CLOSE TO $1,000,000,000 MARK

Ames, Ia., Oct. 28 —That Iowa has almost reached the $1 000 000 000 mark in the amount of dairy products she produces is the interesting fact of some estimates made along that line by M Mortensen, head of the dairy department at Iowa State college

Iowa last year produced 89,834,005 pounds of creamery butter, worth $25,559,714 Mr Mortensen estimates that there were 4,000,000 gallons of ice cream manufactured, worth $2,800,000. The value of milk used for direct consumption was close to $20,000,000. The value of farm dairy butter, $23,000,000, and the skim milk used as farm animal feed, $10,000,000.

Only a comparatively small amount of cheese is made in Iowa, but 10 per cent of the amount consumed here Just 704,463 pounds were made in the state last year, this worth $77,000.

The value of the calf and the value of dairying to soil fertility have not been considered.

AUDITORS VIOLATE LAW IN EXCESS OF PERSONAL ZEAL

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28.—County auditors who are out for reelection are guilty of malfeasance in office if they take advantage of requests for absent voters' blanks to be mailed out to enclose campaign material for themselves. Attorney General Cosson made this ruling yesterday in reply to an inquiry as to the legality of such a practice. The complaint has come into the attorney general's office that this is being done by a number of county auditors who are out for reelection. It is a violation of the law which makes an officer who is guilty subject to prosecution, according to the attorney general's ruling.

HARASSED BY DEBTS, WOMAN KILLS HERSELF

Driven to Despair Because All of Household Property Is Encumbered.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 25.—

Jack—Everything in the house is under mortgage. Don't let anyone take them away, for they are yours. I had no right to do it. You blame them and they can't take them. Goodby all. I can't stand to be a burden on anyone. Goodby all. Carl, be a good boy. Tell Hazel I stood it as long as I could.

This was Mrs. Nettie Franz's farewell message to her husband and two children. The note was addressed to John Franz, 607 Eighth street. It was written on a piece of wrapping paper and lying on the kitchen table where Franz found it upon his return home from work.

Seated in a chair, her arms distended across the gas stove with the four burners turned on full blast and her head hanging over her left shoulder, John Franz found the woman who had been his helpmate for 34 years. She was dead.

From the tone of the note left by the woman, the police were inclined to the opinion that she had been harassed by the loan sharks who held a mortgage on her furniture, which she had given without her husband's knowledge. Franz, however, denied that this was the case, declaring that whatever his wife saw fit to do always had met with his sanction.

The New Discount Market.

A. V. Cann, in the Century

Sightseers visit the financial districts in New York every day They form broad lines in the galleries of the exchanges and on the Broad street curb to watch the bulls and the bears in the stock markets. Then their usual route is via Frances' tavern to the aquarium.

Not long ago a visitor more independent of guide books turned from contemplating an active stock market and wanted to see the new discount market. He had heard of its large transactions, and looked forward to a spectacle as interesting and animated as that which he had just witnessed. It surprised him to learn how intangible is the institution, newly adopted from abroad, called the open discount market, that no association or trading place is necessary, and that it is in reality only a general change to better banking practice.

The change was effected by the federal reserve act and state legislation. New laws, framed in the full light of experience in other countries, give American banks and trust companies authority to accept drafts for their customers. In this way, for a small commission, a bank will lend its name and credit to a customer, thus enabling him, without use of the bank's money to finance elsewhere a trade transaction at a rate of discount lower than his own name alone would command. Such acceptances are usually based upon the purchase or sale of merchandise which, when finally disposed of, will yield funds to pay the acceptances. Self liquidating commercial bills of this kind bearing the acceptance of a sound bank are the safest short term investments that can be made.

GREECE WILL SUBMIT TO ENTENTE DEMANDS

King Constantine Agrees to Meet Terms Laid Down By the Allies

Athens, Oct. 26.—(delayed) The understanding reached yesterday by King Constantine and representatives of the entente powers generally is believed to be the immediate result of the conference of the military and naval leaders of France and Great Britain at Boulogne, on Friday. First—Sincere compliance with the demands of Admiral Fournet.

Second—Effective maintenance of order in Athens and Piraeus.

Fourth—No opposition to recruiting for the Venizelos movement which now is characterized as anti-Bulgarian instead of national defense.

The Forward the Fatherland gang today strikes the keynote of the situation asserting:

"The Boulogne conference has smoothed the way to a large measure of understanding between the powers and Greece."

One of the leaders of the Greek war party declared to the Associated Press correspondent:

"Now that the unfortunate mutual distrust of one another by King Constantine and the entente ministers is out of the way, we can go to work negotiating for Greece to join the allies as a nation and a people not as individuals."

Mr. Scollick is now an osteologist and prepares all the skeletons of birds which are sent to the museum for preservation. These skeletons are used by scientists all over the world.

ANOTHER BIG IMPORT OF GOLD IS DELIVERED

New York Oct. 27—Gold amounting to $15,000,000 from Canada was deposited at the assay office today by J. P. Morgan & Company acting as fiscal and commercial agents of the British government. This makes a total of $450,000,000 received thus far this year, chiefly by way of Canada and practically all for account of British and allied interests.

Fool Drivers.

The man who drives a motor car where crowds of human beings are, should have his wits as bright and keen as is the sparkling gasoline. A motor is a deadly thing, that's sure to slay and wound and wing, unless the driver's safe and sane, possessed of clear and active brain. How sinful, then the sodden skate, who says, "Before I pull my freight, along the crowded streets to fly, I'll drink four fingers of old rye." With tanglefoot beneath his belt, he goes as fast as he can pelt, his eyes distorted by old booze, the course of safety he won't choose. In haste to get to other bars, he knocks the wheels from passing cars and makes the dodging walker swear, and kills a lawyer here and there. He is a messenger of death and any man whose dark blue breath suggests long sessions at the bar should never run a motor car. If "Safety First" is what you mean, you can't mix gin and gasoline.

FIGHT IN AIR THREE MILES ABOVE EARTH

Italian Dirigible and Austrian Aeroplane Both Brought to Ground.

Rome, Oct. 26, (via Paris, Oct. 27).—A fight between an Italian dirigible airship and an Austrian aeroplane at a height of more than three miles over the Albanian coast, resulting in the aeroplane being shot down and the dirigible afterward being destroyed by its own officer inside the Austrian lines, was told today when King Victor Emanuel conferred medals for valor on three members of the Italian air corps.

On the morning of October 12, while off the Albanian coast, an Italian dirigible, piloted by Captain Ercole with Captain Corbelli and Captain Albino as observers, was surprised and attacked at a height of 16,000 feet by an Austrian aeroplane. The aeroplane, obtaining a favorable position, turned its machine gun on the dirigible, mortally wounding the observers and disabling Captain Ercole's left arm. Ercole, however, according to the official account, succeeded in overcoming the aeroplane and in killing the pilot, but the dirigible was obliged to land 30 miles within the enemy lines.

Captain Ercole destroyed the dirigible and, after two days of wandering and suffering from cold and hunger, managed to elude the Austrians, and recrossing the mountains, finally reached the Italian camp on the river Vayusa.

HOT ON TRAIL OF ELECTION FRAUDS

Justice Department Assigns an Agent to Iowa and Other States In the Middle West.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 28.—The department of justice is keeping a sharp eye out for registration or colonization frauds in Iowa. Department officials today said that Frank Daily, who was lately designated as field agent to look after charges of fraud in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, would also have Iowa in his jurisdiction. He will cooperate with the district attorneys. The department says that, while it does not look for such abuses in Iowa as are alleged elsewhere, it will not overlook that state.

TENEMENT CHILDREN WILL VISIT WILSON

Their Welcome Will Be Unlike That Once Given at Oyster Bay.

New York, Oct. 28.—Fifty mothers of New York's east side, with their children, who have been emancipated from sweatshops by the enactment of the child labor law, are going to Shadow Lawn, Saturday, in person to thank President Wilson.

A "kind lady," who prefers to conceal her identity, has donated a special car to be attached to one of the trains bearing pilgrims from New York to Shadow Lawn to hear the president's address on "Wilson day." The children will carry armsful of artificial flowers which they used to make in the factories, before their emancipation.

No such pilgrimage of the children of the poor has been attempted since the one when Theodore Roosevelt was president of the United States and a carload of children from the Pennsylvania coal mines journeyed to the summer capital at Oyster Bay to petition for a national child labor law.

"Mother Jones," who conducted that excursion, told recently in public of the refusal of the guards at Oyster Bay to allow the children to pass the outer gate, and of their return home to wait 14 years for a Woodrow Wilson to set them free.

HOSPITAL FIRE MAY BE WORK OF AN INCENDIARY

Farnham, Que., Oct. 27.—The ruins of the St. Elizabeth hospital, destroyed yesterday by fire, had sufficiently cooled today to permit the authorities to search for bodies. The Grey nuns who conducted the institution, announced that an inquiry indicates that the death list will stand at 19, including five children.

Farnham was under police guard during the night, as the result of several small fires which led to the suspicion that incendiaries have been at work.

RUMANIAN ARMIES BATTLE DOGGEDLY

Von Mackensen Has Pursued Them to a Point 40 Miles North of Strategic Railroad Line.

HOLDING AT SOME POINTS

German Troops Have Made Little Headway on Western and Northwestern Fronts, Defenders Say.

Petrograd, Oct. 28.—(via London).—Although offering stubborn resistance to the German-Bulgarian-Turkish forces attacking in Dobrudja, the Russians and Rumanians, according to today's official Russian statement are retiring to the north of a line between Hirsova and Casapkeui. This line is approximately between 40 and 60 miles north of the Tchernavoda-Constanza railroad line.

The statement adds that the forces of the central powers and and their allies are continuing their attack along the entire front in Dobrudja.

Rumanian troops operating on the western frontier of Molravia have captured the Transylvanian village of Balan and the Piatrarotkut heights, according to the official statement issued today by the Russian war department. Fierce fighting, the statement adds, is continuing on both banks of the Osik river.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Oct. 28.—Field Marshal Von Mackensen's forces, pursuing the retreating Russo-Rumanian armies in Dobrudja, have reached the district of Hirsova, approximately 40 miles north of Tchernavoda, the war office announced today.

RUMANIANS CLAIM GAIN.

Bucharest, Oct. 28, (via London).—Russo-Rumanian troops are engaged in successful fighting along the Rumanian-Transylvanian frontier, according to today's war office announcement. Austro-German attacks in the Tulghes and Bicaz region and in the Trotus valley were repulsed, while in the Uzuel valley the Rumanian advance is continuing.

Heavy losses were sustained by the Teutonic troops, who vainly attacked in the region of Dragoslavelo, adds the official statement, which also chronicles the continuation of the fighting in the Predeal region and announces a withdrawal of the defensive forces toward the southern Transylvania frontier in the Jiul valley.

FIGHTING IN GALICIA.

Petrograd, (via London), Oct. 28.—German forces yesterday launched an attack against the Russian position on the western bank of the River Shara, in the region of Goldovitchi, and forced the retirement of the Russians to the eastern bank of the river, says today's Russian official statement.

GERMAN GOVERNMENT IS UNDER HOT FIRE

Effort to Give Power to the Budget Committee Resisted —Press Is Aroused.

Berlin, (via London), Oct. 27.—The unenthusiastic attitude of the government towards the Centerist motion to give the budget committee the right to sit during recesses of the reichstag and discuss the foreign and war policy of the nation is generally resented by the liberal press today. The newspapers deplore the fact that the government is found, as they regard it, to be already lagging when it comes to the fulfillment of the promise of political reforms.

In the debate on the subject in the reichstag yesterday, all the parties except the conservatives supported the modified substitute adopted giving the right to the committee only during the war and only during adjournments, which had not been ordered by the emperor. Foreign Secretary Von Jagow and Secretary of the Interior Helfferich, represented the government's position.

CHURCH SEEKS TO PUT HUMANITY IN INDUSTRY

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 27.—The house of bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church today issued a "notification" declaring that "All Christians are under a common obligation conscientiously to scrutinize the sources of their incomes and to give moral support to every just effort to secure better conditions and regular employment for all wage earners."

The "notification" added that "service of the community and the welfare of workers, not private profit, should be the aim of every industry and its justification and that the church should seek constantly to keep this aim before the public mind."

The house of bishops did not concur in the plan for the election of suffragan racial bishops by the provincial synods as adopted by the house of deputies and also failed to concur in the resolution calling for a national moving picture censorship. The censorship matter was referred to a special commission to report at the next general convention.

Last Saturday morning the engine of the east bound train on the Hampton Algona branch was put out of commission on the "Y" switch. The engine was uncoupled from the train which was left standing on the main line of the branch and started up on the siding leading to the coal schute. When the engine got at the siding the train which was standing on an incline, started to move and struck the engine a glancing blow—side swiped it, wrecking the cab and severely hurting the fireman who was caught in the wreckage. The fireman was cared for by a local surgeon. He had a very narrow escape as he was buried under the debris and was not found till sometime after the accident.—Corwith Hustler.

There is no prison for the soul
That dwells within God's boundless peace;
And sickness builds no dungeon walls
For one who knoweth sins surcease;
He soars on tireless pinions high
And lives beneath the open sky.

KLEMME, IOWA

How a machine gun is fired through a revolving propeller is told in a recent issue of Aeronautics, in an article describing the more important features of two German Fokkers brought down behind the British lines in France. On these monoplanes, according to the description, the machine gun is fired through the propeller by means of a small lever actuating a Bowden wire. Provision is further made to throw the machine gun mechanism momentarily out of gear as each whirling propeller blade moves into line with the muzzle. This is done very simply by means of a double cam fixed on the engine shaft and acting on a system of levers. The French Morane, after which the Fokker type has been modeled, also fires its machine gun through the tractor screw.

A few weeks ago a train consisting of two engines, a steam shovel and 12 dump cars left the main railroad line at Milpitas, Cal., and started at a snail's pace along a country road that leads to the site of a dam in the Calaveras valley says Popular Mechanics. This spectacular feat was accomplished by laying track in front of the train and then, as it moved along, taking up the rails and ties and relaying them in advance. The train is a part of an outfit operated by contractors who have been engaged to dump 300,000 cubic yards of rock into the great dam being erected across the Calaveras valley to impound water from the mountains higher up.

The California Electric Railway association has completed a tabulation of the losses suffered by all of the railroads of the state, steam and electric, due to the competition of jitney busses during the year 1915, says the Electric Railway Journal. The figures show the estimated losses in gross reecipts in both passenger and freight service where there was competition in both classes. Where no freight traffic losses are mentioned the figures refer to reduction in income on passenger service. The total loss suffered by the 16 companies included in the tabulation amounts to approximately $4,000,000.

The largest railway scale in the world has recently been completed at West Albany, N. Y. It is capable of accommodating a load of 1,650,000 pounds. It consists of six weighing instruments, each having a capacity of 275,000 pounds. It is designed for weighing locomotives and other heavy rolling stock. Some of the engines used upon the Pacific coast weigh 215 tons, but this giant would be able to weigh four of them at once, if necessary. The accuracy of this giant instrument is remarkable. It does not vary 10 pounds at its full capacity.

A new electric lemon squeezer is described in the Electrical World. It consists of a motor driven hemisphere provided with ribs similar to the ordinary hand operated glass extractor. The lemon or orange is halved and held against this hemispherical part. The juice is caught in a deflector at the beck and runs down through a spout at the bottom. A clamp is provided for attaching the outfit to a table or counter and a ring is attached below the spout to support the glass.

Mrs. Eliza Fyffe, age 83, of Morgan county, passed through Morehead, Ky., on her way to visit relatives at Scioto-ville, Ohio. This is the first time she ever saw a train or rode on one. Mrs. Fyffe was accompanied by her son, age 25, who was also taking his first ride on a train.

IOWA TEACHERS WANT STATE PENSION FUND

Council of State Association Indorses Bill—Criticism of "Bucolic Legislators."

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—A bill providing for annuities for teachers who have served 25 years or who have served 12 years in this state and are retired because of mental or physical disability, was indorsed yesterday morning by the educational council of the State Teachers' association. The bill is calculated to meet all the objections to the bill for the state retirement fund for teachers, which failed in the last session of the legislature.

In provides for a life annuity of $12 for each year of service. The fund will be raised through an annual tax by the executive council and by the payment of $300 by each teacher upon retirement. Gifts and bequests may be added to the fund and the interest on the whole will be equally divided among the annuities, provided that it does not exceed $300 to each beneficiary. The $300 paid by the retiring teacher may take the form of a lump sum or may be deducted from the annuity.

No retirement will take effect before September 1, 1918.

George E. Marshall, of Davenport, president of the Iowa State Teachers' association, at the opening session of the 62d annual convention, denounced the system by which impractical and unwholesome legislation has been forced upon the teachers of the state by "bucolic legislators and political speakers" without an opportunity for the educational experts to be heard.

He declared that if the school teachers will stop internal bickering they can get what they want in the matter of legislation.

F. P. Graves, of Philadelphia, dean of the University of Pennsylvania, in an address on "Present Day Tendencies in Education," emphasized the movement toward vocational and commercial training and more scientific development of the teaching of education.

Mrs. W. A. Fleming, of Decorah, will be elected president of the association at the business session this evening, according to the report of the nominating committee. She will be the third woman to receive the honor in the 63 years of the association's history.

SLASHES THROAT FOLLOWING ROW WITH YOUNG WOMAN

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 4.—After quarreling with a young woman with whom he has been keeping company, a young man, said by the police to be Charles W. Ferry, but who has been getting mail under the name of Albert Bechtell, slashed himself across the face with a razor yesterday afternoon.

Ferry was on Main street when he pulled a razor from his pocket and, according to witnesses, drew it across his face. He was taken by the police to a hospital, where the wound was attended to. Ferry declined to admit that he did it, although he told the police they need not look for the fellow who did.

The young man refused to say why he wished to disfigure himself or whether or not he meant to cut his throat.

DETECTIVE FILES ANSWER TO JONES DAMAGE SUIT

Red Oak, Ia., Nov. 4.—Detective J. N. Wilkerson, of the Burns agency filed in district court his answer to the $60,000 damage suit brought against him by former Senator F. F. Jones, of Villisca. Jones charges Wilkerson with responsibility for the public talk associating him with the so called ax murders in Villisca four years ago. In his answer Wilkerson makes a general denial and pleads justification.

The accused detective while denying some of the things imputed to him by Jones, admits other charges and declares he has the ability to prove them, apparently opening the way for a broader inquiry into the whole affair than seemed likely under the Jones petition. Senator Jones stated after the filing of the answer that he is all the more anxious to have the case brought to trial, and that if he can prevent it there will be no continuance of the case.

FAMILY ENDANGERED WHEN RESIDENCE TAKES FIRE

Mt Ayr, Ia., Nov. 4.—The members of the Robert Fletchall family, seven in number, narrowly escaped being cremated in their home when a fire at 2 o'clock in the morning was discovered raging throughout the house. The family lives on a farm near Mt. Ayr. Mr. Fletchall and the 13-year-old son were dangerously burned while carrying other members of the family to safety. The baby also was badly burned, and no one in the family escaped more or less serious burns, and all had to flee in their partly burned night clothes through the chill air to the home of a neighbor.

DETECTIVES BREAK UP ORGANIZED IOWA GANG

Men Who Bought Stolen Plunder Involved In Case—Freight Cars Are Looted.

Webster City, Ia., Nov. 3.—Sheriff Nelson of this city, Fort Dodge officials and Illinois Central detectives from Chicago have just succeeded in breaking up an organized gang of robbers who have been operating for months in this section of Iowa, particularly about Duncombs, Manson, Industry, Newell, Rockwell City and Iowa Falls. As a result Elmer Sanderson and a man with many aliases giving the name of Greimer, are in jail in Fort Dodge and Henry Nathanson of this city, manager of the Barney Brin store on Seneca street is under arrest on the charge of having knowingly received stolen goods. Nathanson is out under $500 bonds.

Nathanson's arrest followed several days of investigation which was started when Sanderson, who was arrested in Fort Dodge for bootlegging, confessed to several thefts and implicated an accomplice, who was traced to Webster City, Iowa Falls and back to Fort Dodge. When arrested he gave the name of Greimer.

Following up a series of clews, a search warrant was issued and some $200 worth of dry goods, gloves, mittens, cigars, 300 pounds of sugar and other articles were found in the possession of Nathanson. The sugar sacks bore the address of Patrick O'Conner, Industry, Ia. Other material was identified as having been stolen from the depot at Duncombe. Nathanson admits having bought the goods for $75, but disclaims any knowledge that the stuff was stolen. He runs the Brin store where such articles as those he bought are handled Nathanson was taken to Fort Dodge and identified the man from whom he purchased them. Both Nathanson and Brin have always been looked upon in this community as good citizens and the arrest of Nathanson created quite a sensation.

SWEET POTATOES URGED AS ECONOMICAL FOOD

Ames, Ia., Nov. 3.—Irish potato prices have soared to such an altitude that sweet potatoes are now a much more economical form of "spud" food, says the truck crop man at Iowa State college. "It will pay consumers to lay in a winter supply of the latter," he suggests.

Bought in quantities, sweet potatoes can be had now for about $1 a bushel, while Irish potatoes are bringing from $1 75 to $2.

It's in the storing of sweet potatoes that special care must be taken Whereas Irish potatoes require a storing temperature as cold as possible without freezing, sweet potatoes must be stored in a warm, dry place. They must never be allowed to chill. One of the best places to store them is behind the furnace in the cellar

AKRON WOMAN COMMITTED TO INEBRIATE ASYLUM

LeMars, Ia., Nov. 3.—For the first time in the history of Plymouth county a woman has been committed to the state institution for inebriates at Knoxville. Mrs. Harm Schwartz, of Akron, aged 29, was committed by Judge Hutchinson to serve a term at Knoxville. Mrs. Schwartz and her husband were denizens of Akron and their home was notorious for revels until Schwartz left suddenly for Montana two weeks ago.

Mrs. Schwartz gave a party celebrating his departure and the event attracted so much attention that the Akron authorities arrested her and sent her to the county jail here. Mrs. Schwartz expressed a willingness to go and try the cure.

No new plates are to be issued except for new cars, but the second installment for the three year plates will be due January 1, 1917. Penalties will be added for fees not paid by April 1, but all owners are requested to send their remittances early to avoid the congestion which results from a rush at the last day.

His courage never fails, and he will work till he drops.

NEW CITY PLAN MAY STOP AMES' WARD RECESSION

Ames, Ia., Nov. 2.—The adoption of a new form of city government in Ames may lead to a compromise between the city and the Fourth wards, thus preventing the separation of the Fourth ward from the city of Ames. A petition for severance now is on file in the district court and awaits the action of the court. Committees representing both factions, in a recent meeting, have proposed either the commission form of government or the city manager plan.

It was brought out at the committee meeting that in the past the Fourth ward district has not had its proper representation in the city council, and it is believed that with the installation of a new government plan these matters will be remedied It has been the contention of the supporters of the severance proposition that the Fourth ward, in which is located Iowa State college, has not been receiving its due share of improvements. The chief objections have been to the manner in which street and sidewalk improvements have been neglected.

FEMALE JITNEY DRIVERS TO OFFSET NEW AIR LOOP

In the future fair young girls are to be the jitney bus drivers The new chauffers have been getting accustomed to their duties during the last week and an increase in the jitney business has been noticable. The new street car loop started the early part of the week.

WILL PROBATE ASSETS OF LEGION OF HONOR ON CLAIMS

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 2.—The state insurance office and the attorney general's department here have received the ruling of Judge Milo P. Smith, of Cedar Rapids, as to the settlement of the claims against the Legion of Honor, which was forced into receivership by the state officials last spring It is to the effect that the claims against the defunct beneficiary organization be not paid in rotation, that those who have death claims and have been waiting for their money be not paid in the order of priority, but that the assets of the company or its funds rather be prorated to the policy holders so that each will get a little instead of a few getting it all.

WOMAN'S SUICIDE DUE TO GRIEF OVER BABY'S DEATH

Perry Ia, Nov. 1.—Grief over the loss of her little babe about two months ago is believed to have been the reason for the suicide of Mrs. Henry Akester, of Dexter.

Coroner T R. Phillips, of this city, was called there yesterday afternoon and after an investigation decided that an inquest was not necessary. Mrs. Akester shot herself through the heart. Her husband was working in the yard and ran to the house immediately, but she was dead when he arrived. A note, written upon a piece of wrapping paper, contained the following message:

"I am sick and tired. Let me rest beside Baby Alice, the baby I have loved and never seen Do not have any funeral for me as that will be too much expense. You can get along much cheaper without me in the way. Alta."

The baby referred to in the note was dead when born and because of the mother's condition she was not allowed to see it.

BIG ESTATE DIVIDED TO STOP PENDING LITIGATION

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 1.—What promised to be an interesting legal controversy over the division of an estate worth $110,000, was settled in the district court here with the filing of a stipulation of the different heirs.

The estate was that of M. L. Neiman, who died here Sept. 4, leaving an estate The heirs are Dr. F J. Neiman, Elgin and Mrs. J. H Brechtbill, of this city, Mrs. J. O F Price of Memphis, Tenn., son and daughters of Mr. Neiman, and Homer and Carmen Eggerth of Algona, son and daughter of a deceased daughter of Mr Neiman.

In his will Mr. Neiman left 480 acres of land near Luverne, Kossuth county to his son and daughter, Mrs. Price. To Mrs. Brechtbill he willed a 160-acre farm near Corsica, S. D., a 40-acre farm three miles east of this city, and the home place here, in addition to $3,000 in cash. To the two grand-children are left a 240-acre farm near Germania, Kossuth county.

Following the filing of the will Mrs. Brechtbill served notice of objections to the probating, on the ground that her father was of unsound mind when the will was made Feb. 11, 1914. It was expected that a bitter contest would result, but through the efforts of E. J Van Ness of Algona, who was nominated executor of the estate, and trustee for the minor heirs, a settlement was effected whereby all the other heirs pay Mrs. Brechtbill $7,000 in cash.

The court approved the stipulation of settlement and appointed Mr. Van Ness executor and trustee under bond of $30,000.

MORTGAGE NOT VIOLATION OF IOWA BULK SALES LAW

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 1.—The first time that the bulk sales law has come up for a decision in this county resulted in a decision Saturday by Judge Willett in which the court ruled that a chattel mortgage is not a transfer in violation of the bulk sales law.

Fred C. Sparks, owner of a weekly newspaper, had an account of $39.90 for advertising against Neils C. Anderson, doing business under the name of the Jewelry and Piano Sales company. Anderson became insolvent several weeks ago, and A. H. E. Matthews was appointed trustee for the creditors.

A sale for the benefit of the creditors was fixed for October 31. Sparks attempted to show that his claim should have been included with the others, and that the sale would prevent him from getting his money. He asked that a receiver be appointed and the trustee enjoined from conducting the sale.

The court dismissed the petition for a receiver, sustaining the validity of chattel mortgages as not coming in the purveyance of the bulk sales law. Sparks' claim will have to be handled in regular court proceedings at the January term.

INVESTIGATE FOOD PRICE BOOSTING

Washington, Nov 4.—Reports from Chicago that District Attorney Cline threatens drastic action because jobbers in foodstuffs are boosting food prices in Illinois, Iowa and other middle western states were backed up by the department of justice today.

Chicago, Nov 4 —After hearing charges by Alderman Pretzel that there were 37,500,000 dozen eggs in Chicago in cold storage at present while the price is soaring to about 45 cents a dozen, the council health committee yesterday invited United States Attorney Clyne to attend the next meeting of the committee at which an effort will be made to show collusion on the part of middle men and producers to control the price of foodstuffs

GERMANS TURNING UPON SLAV LINES

Teutons Attempting to Divert Recruits For Rumania By Attacking on Galician Front.

Petrograd, (via London), Nov. 3.—Interest in the Rumanian situation continues to overshadow minor episodes on the Russian western front, particularly since the approach of winter already has precluded the possibility of further operations on a large scale in this theater.

There has been, however, a noticeable growing tendency on the part of the Germans to begin a more or less serious offensive at various points in Galicia, the most important of which is the one undertaken south of Brzezany, where the Russian positions along the Narayuvka river have offered exceptional advantages for a flanking attack upon Halicz from the north and at the same time constituting a direct menace to Lemberg. The Germans aimed thrusts all along the line from Brzezany to Halicz, but concentrating most heavily in the region of Michisou wood, began a determined attack on the night of October 29 which carried the Russian positions.

Russian critics, although manifestly surprised at the German ability to launch an offensive of large forces at this point, do not consider the hostile advance over a six-mile front of more than local importance and state that its only significance is in relation to the Transylvanian operations, being an obvious attempt to create a diversion and prevent further Russian cooperation on the Transylvania front, where General von Falkenhayn, after being temporarily checked, is making a new attempt to advance.

1,820 MERCHANT SHIPS SUNK BY BELLIGERENTS

Aggregate Gross Tonnage Is Placed at 3,328,584—Britain Heaviest Loser.

New York, Nov. 3.—One thousand eight hundred and twenty merchant ships with an aggregate gross tonnage of approximately 3,328,584 have been sunk by belligerent nations during 27 months of war ending November 1, according to figures compiled from cable dispatches and mail advices published here today by the Journal of Commerce.

The losses during October were larger than for any one of the other preceding five months, according to the statistics, amounting to 127 vessels of a total of 227,115 tons gross. October rate of destruction was considerably in excess of the monthly average throughout the war period and British shipping sustained losses nearly equal to those of August and September combined. Norway lost the largest number of ships, 56, according to the statistics. The gross tonnage was only 57,333 as compared with Great Britain's total loss of 115,546 gross tonnage of 38 vessels destroyed.

A table showing the total shipping losses since the war began estimates those of the entente allies at about 75 per cent and those of neutrals at nearly 18 per cent with Teutonic losses less than 7 per cent.

COMPULSION APPLIES ONLY IN WAR TIMES

Norfolk, Neb., Nov. 3.—Otto A. Voget, of Norfolk, has just received from President Wilson's secretary, J. J. Tumulty, a letter in reply to a question as to whether under the Hay-Chamberlain army bill American citizens can be drafted into the army. Mr. Tumulty's letter says:

"I beg to say that as has been explained again and again, the clause referred to in the so called Hay-Chamberlain army bill applies only in time of war. While the bill was certainly ill considered in language, the intention was not at all what it was represented by its critics to be. I may add that the president feels the language was too sweeping and he hopes to get it limited at the earliest opportunity."

RAILWAYS HOPE FOR LAW'S MODIFICATION

E. P. Ripley, of Santa Fe, Says Adamson Act Cannot Be Applied.

Chicago, Nov. 3.—E. P. Ripley, president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway, addressing members of the city club here today, let it be known that the legal talent of the railroad are still in a quandary as to what the roads should do with regard to the Adamson law.

"Nobody knows what the Adamson law means, or how it can be applied to existing conditions," said Mr. Ripley. "The best legal opinion is that it can not be construed to be a legal and binding statute. This means that if the railroads tried to enforce it as it stands there would be a strike because it would seriously reduce the earnings of large part of the highest paid men. If, on the other hand, the railroads follow the law as the brotherhoods would like to have them do, namely, taking the hot end of the poker in every case, it would cost them a very large sum, estimated at $100,000,000 a year. The law will be tested and probably will find itself in the supreme court of the United States unless modified by congress before its effective date."

FRUSTRATE PLOTS TO BLAST SUBWAY

Six Men Are Arrested In New York on Charge of Conspiracy to Blow Up Stations.

New York, Nov. 4.—Plots to dynamite two stations on the Interborough Rapid Transit company's subway system were thwarted according to the police by the arrest today of six men, several of them strikers, charged with bringing dynamite into the city and with causing the dynamite explosion which occurred at 110th Street station on October 24.

A confession which detectives say they obtained from one of the men under arrest sets forth that the station at 59th street and Broadway was to have been blown up today and the station at City hall later.

James A. Murna, a former subway guard and Thomas J. McGuire, a chauffeur of Caldwell, N. J., visited Kenvill yesterday and purchased the explosive to have been used in today's explosion according to the police and Murna and James J. Herlihy a former elevated railway guard purchased the dynamite in Kenvil on October 23.

Murna, McGuire and Herlihy are under arrest, together with George Pollok, a former elevated guard, Lawrence Kulle, a former subway guard and Benjamin Harrison, a former elevated guard. All of these men except McGuire, the police say are members of a district local of the Amalgamated Association of Street & Electric Railway employes. New York, Nov. 4.—Victor Carlstrom, who left Chicago yesterday for New York in a New York Times mail carrying aeroplane, descended on Governor's island, ending his flight at 8:55 a. m. His journey was interrupted by stops at Erie, Pa., and Hammondsport, N. Y.

The flight from Hammondsport, where the aviator resumed his trip at 6:35 a. m. today was without incident, Carlstrom flying at a height of 2,000 feet, aided by a good wind.

A letter from Mayor Thompson, of Chicago, addressed to President Wilson was placed in the hands of a special messenger who started at once for Long Branch, N. J. A representative of the New York post office met Carlston at Governor's island and received the bag of mail brought by the air post.

The aviator was greeted upon his descent by Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, U. S. A., and Augustus Post and Alan R. Hawley, of the Aero Club of America.

Carlstrom broke the American cross country nonstop record when he flew from Chicago to Erie, Pa., a distance of 480 miles, in 257½ minutes. Carlstrom also broke the speed record for distance flying, his average time being about 112 miles an hour.

On his flight from Hammondsport today Carlstrom broke another record, covering the distance, 315 miles, at an average speed of 137 miles an hour, or 11 miles an hour better than the record held by Jules Vedrines, the French aviator.

Detectives announced after making the arrests that evidence obtained indicated that attempts were to have been made to blow up the subway station at Fifty-ninth street and Broadway this morning and the city hall station at a later time.

According to the alleged confession, 48 sticks of dynamite were detonated in the One Hundred-tenth street explosion.

Herlihy is 21 years old. The other men accused are George Pollok, a former elevated railway guard, Lawrence Kulle and James A. Murna, former subway guards and Thomas J. McGuire, a chauffeur, who lives in Caldwell, N. J.

THREE PERSONS KILLED IN MOTOR CAR ACCIDENT

FREDERICK BRANT, St. Paul.

Nelson is near death in the city hospital. The four were returning from the Brant home when the car, shooting over the embankment, turned turtle, pining all beneath. Four hours later workmen, hearing Nelson's calls for help, lifted him from the wreckage and removed the bodies of the others.

A MODEL COMMUNITY

Down among the mountains of Tennessee, high on the Cumberland Table Lands, lies the little town of Clifty. It is just a little mining town, peopled by a hardy, industrious set of people, but it is showing to the world how neighbors and friends may "dwell together in unity."

We have said that it is a mining town, but it is more; that the people are hardy and industrious, but they are more; they have the true community spirit—they are real NEIGHBORS.

This little town has conceived and put into force some community plans that might well be copied by other towns. Of course almost every family in the town owns and cultivates its own garden and "truck" patches, but this is not all. A few years ago the mine superintendent, a man of considerable learning and of progressive spirit, conceived the plan of having all the citizens of the town own and cultivate a small tract of land in common. Five or six acres were first bought and cultivated as a "community farm." The result was a pronounced success, and each year thereafter the town added to its holdings until this past season it had about one hundred acres under cultivation on the "community" plan, and the people announce their intention of branching out still further.

Now there would be nothing out of the common in this if the experiment has not developed some gratifying results.

First, they discovered that instead of fifteen or twenty families (about the number interested in the "community") each having to own and maintain a team, three or four teams were amply sufficient.

Again they discovered that instead of fifteen or twenty sets of agricultural implement being needed, only three or four of each kind were necessary, and of some only one—a great saving all must admit. Each stockholder bears his pro rata share of expense and furnishes his pro rata amount of labor.

Briefly, the plan has proven such a success that the community now has its own silo, blooded hogs and cattle, and last year their exhibits led all others at their county fair.

But these are not all of the results. The close business association necessary in the successful working out of the plans has developed a spirit of community brotherhood that is a pleasure to witness. In this little town is exemplified a typical brotherhood of man. The welfare and comfort of the most humble is as carefnlly looked after as that of the most wealthy. They have a splendid school, church, Sunday School, and recently a commodious club house has been erected that is proving a power for good to both young men and older ones.

We have briefly sketched the results of this community plan of co-operation as showing what a true community spirit will accomplish. Many features of interest have necessarily been omitted from this article from lack of space. But, should any other community desire to know more of their workings, a letter addressed to the postmaster will receive prompt and courteous answer and full information will be given of plans that can not fail to benefit any community.

HARDING IS GOVERNOR OF IOWA

The most significant victory of the election year has been won by W. L. Harding, the republican candidate for governor. As he swept the primaries he has swept the state. We have felt all the time that such would be the outcome. We could not lose faith in the ultimate sense of fair play and justice in the politics of the state. We felt that the voters would resent the unfair and unjust attacks that were made upon this man.

It is not necessary now to do more than allude to these attacks. But it would not be unjust if we did not allude to them. We may not ignore the facts. We are in duty bound to point out the moral effect of them. May it never again be possible to start such a campaign as has been carried on in this state for two or three months under the leadership of unconscionable journalism.

There was never a fly oasis in fact for the allegations that were made against Mr. Harding. They were conceived in spite and born of enmity and venom. But the men who had vowed to drive Harding from public life because they could not use him, were clever in a way and resourceful in many many more ways. They presented such a skillfully drawn plan that they swept many shallow thinkers in politics, including many of the clergy off their feet. And having dedicated themselves to the published errors they would not recede even when the truth was laid before them.

Mr. Harding's victory is a vindication of manhood as well as politics. It makes him the marked man in the state.

We believe that he will give Iowa one of the best administrations in its recent history. He knows the state and he knows the way of politics. He is eminently qualified for his office and he has the courage of his convictions, as shown throughout the campaign. He has catered to none and he will cater to none in the governorship. It is fortunate for the state to have such a man in office.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

Now that the smoke of the political battles is drifting away, perhaps we can get down to business and dig up a little prosperity for this community We have whooped it up for our favorite candidates and given them the benefit of our influence and our votes, all of which they will promptly forget. If we are equally energetic in whooping it up for our local community we may accomplish some definite and tangible results that will bring at least a semblance of prosperity to us.

In an article refering to the publishing of the city council proceedings the Graettinger Times has the following to say: "As a matter of fact when such minutes are not published the proceedings are irregular and in violation of the law and the action of the council is not legal."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and is said to be but a little while until roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make one who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or who is a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

NOSE CLOGGED FROM A COLD OR CATARRH

Apply Cream in Nostrils To Open Up Air Passages.

Ah! What relief! Your clogged nostrils open right up, the air passages of your head are clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, mucous discharge, headache, dryness—no struggling for breath at night, your cold or catarrh is gone.

Don't stay stuffed up! Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen, inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Ely's Cream Balm is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer has been seeking. It's just splendid.

PETTICOATS FOR TEN CENTS EACH?

Score of People Duped By Minneapolis Fake Offer

The Times is glad to lend its aid in warning the public against the fake petticoat offer of a Minneapolis mail order house which had been advertising $4.75 petticoats for ten cents. Each woman was requested to send them ten cents and a so start a chain letter by writing letters to ten friends requesting them in turn to send ten cents to the mail order house and also write a letter to each of ten friends. So the chain started. Mrs. A. wrote today sending ten cents. Ten of her friends wrote tomorrow. By the next day 100 women were busy writing letters. Then 1000, then 10,000. By last Friday according to a Minneapolis daily 30,000 chain letters were being received daily at the Minneapolis postoffice, each letter of course enclosing a dime. The chain letter business constituted one tenth of the total daily business of the Minneapolis post office. The promoters of the scheme after reaping the first harvest fled to greener fields.

Here are some of the facts as given out by the post office department:

More than 285,000 dime letters have been received.

Approximately 60 per cent of them bear return cards and it costs the government 2 cents apiece to return them to the senders. More than $3,400 already has been spent for this purpose.

About 40 per cent bear no return cards and these must be sent to the dead letter office at Washington, where they are opened and sent back to the senders when their names are ascertained. This costs the government 1c cents each. More than $11,400 already has been spent for this purpose.

Handling this mail in Minneapolis is now costing the government $50 a day in extra clerk hire and the rate is raising daily.

Among the thousands who answered this fake offer were a number of Klemme ladies. We don't know how many were duped but it has been suggested that the post office department at Washington is going to take strenuous measures to stop this pernicious practise and that the post master general will recommend to the next congress the enactment of a law wherein anyone guilty of starting a chain letter shall be subject to a fine of $1000 and anyone guilty of continuing a chain letter shall be subject to a fine of $100.

Now that war has raised the price of everything we eat, wear and use, how in thunder are we going to get them down again? Ahother war, perhaps.

High Prices Effect Orphanage

H R. Lemen, the manager of the Christian Home Orphanage, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, has written us the following letter:

"The Christian Home Orphanage has been in existence thirty-four years. Never, during all this time, has it been the serious problem to meet the needs of the work that it is this fall, on account of high prices for all living necessities. Because of lack of funds, we have been wholly unable to lay in our winter supplies, and on account of the high price of potatoes and flour, our usual donations of these two necessary commodities have failed to materialize this fall.

"As a result of these things, we come up to the beginning of the winter season, the severest season of the whole year on the Home, with a most serious problem confronting us.

"Living expenses everywhere are very much higher than last year, and our cash receipts lower.

"In addition to all this, the population of the Home is greater this fall than ever before in the past—there being at this writing two hundred and seventy homeless boys and girls looking to us for three square meals daily.

"If the friends of this work will try to add just a little more than usual to their fall donation, and if all who are reading this who have never helped the Home will send a check, this great increase in our expense will be fully met.

"We feel that you all know that these high prices affect the home, the same as everybody else, and that whatever sum you feel able to send will be sent promptly.

"Thanking you in advance for any assistance you may give us in the care of this little army of boys and girls, which will be vastly increased as colder weather approaches, we are, yours sincerely.

"H. R. Lemen."

Semi-Annual Report of the Klemme Cow Testing Association

By this report you will note that the arrow of merit now points to an acknowledged dairy breed.

M. T Love's Guernsey herd have proven in the past six months to be the highest and most economical producers in twenty seven herds.

Read the following records:

Trixie, a Pure Bred Guernsey, has produced since freshining April 1st, 290 lbs of butterfat, cost of feed $45, average price of butter fat 33½ cts per pound. Thus her butter fat production has made a gross of $82 a net profit. A Grade heifer 3 yrs old from Oct. 1915 to Oct. 1916, produced 360 lbs. of butterfat, another Pure Guernsey produced 380 lbs. in the same time.

Records of cows producing 200 lbs of butter fat or more in the past six months:

A HOLSTEIN RECORD

Carl Hansen last week sold five year old Holstein cow to C. Laage, of Fenton for $300. Mr. Laage has purchased all his pure bred Holstein cattle from Mr. Hansen within the last few years. He is a member of the Kossuth cow testing association and has been for two years. Last year his cows had the highest average in any Iowa testing association, averaging 400 pounds of butter fat while the average for the state is only 125 to 150. Two of his cows won blue ribbons at the Kossuth County Fair this year. His best cow was purchased as a heifer from Carl Hansen three years ago for $125. One cow made him a profit of $130 a year and several more over $100. If there are any in this vicinity in doubt regarding the benefits of a cow testing association we are sure Mr. Laage can give them some valuable information, and records kept of his herd during the past two years are not only gratifying to him but also to Carl Hansen from whom the cattle were purchased. It shows the quality of the Holstein herd which Mr. Hansen possesses. Mr. Hansen for many years kept a record of the production of his cattle but has ceased to do so, for while the record was honest, as near as he was able to keep it, it was not official such as a cow testing association record would be, but it did give him information as to what each individual cow was producing and also the whole herd and undoubtedly was a great aid in building up the wonderful herd he now possesses.

We are informed that the local cow testing association needs seven more members. We sincerely trust that more dairymen will join soon in order that the association may start work for the association will be of immense benefit to every member.—Ringsted Dispatch.

THE CAUSE OF THUMPS IN PIGS

H. C Dawson, national authority on swine and big Poland China breeder says of Thumps: "This is a very common ailment of pigs. The causes of the disease are lack of exercise and irritation to the stomach and intestines, resulting from irritating feed, overeating, and changes in the diet. This irritation to the nerves of the digestive tract produces secondary irritation to the nerves that go to the diaphragm and jerky contractions of this muscle occur. Young pigs loose flesh rapidly, older pigs become unthrifty and stunted." Treatment for young pigs consists in feeding the mother a proper diet; and plenty of exercise. Growing pigs should be fed a ration that meets the needs of the system.

Starve and Drug Regulator for Thumps—Give drinking water, but no feed for twenty-four hours. This empties the stomach and bowels and is half the battle. Then give one to two tablespoonsfuls Standard Hog Regulator in a mill fetd or other slop for two feeds, one in the morning and one in the evening. Then feed half this amount twice a day in a light feed until relief is secured. The first two doses will act as a physic and the regular use after that supplies the sodas and salines, as well as the bitter tonics needed.

"Your train leaves at 10 03," he said in a low, businesslike tone, as if he enjoyed the importance of having made all the arrangements. "I've secured the stateroom as you cabled me to do, and here are the tickets and checks. The trunks are down there all checked. Celia didn't want any nonsense about their being tied up with white ribbon. She hates all that We've arranged for you to slip out by the fire escape and down through the back yard of the next neighbor, where a motor, just a plain regular one from the station, will be waiting around the corner in the shadow. Celia knows where it is. None of the party will know you are gone until you are well under way. The car they think you will take is being elaborately adorned with white at the front door now, but you won't have any trouble about it. I've fixed everything up Your coat and hat are out on the fire escape, and as soon as Celia's ready I'll show you the way."

Gordon thanked him. There was nothing else to do, but his countenance grew blank. Was there, then, to be no escape? Must he actually take another man's bride with him in order to get away? And how was he to get away from her? Where was the real bridegroom and why did he not appear upon the scene? And yet what complications that might bring up. He began to look wildly about for a chance to flee at once, for how could he possibly run away with a bride on his hands? If only some one were going with them to the station he could slip away with a clear conscience, leaving her in good hands, but to leave her alone, ill, and distressed, was out of the question. He had rid himself of a lonely dog and a suffering child, though it gave him anguish to do the deed, but leave this lovely woman for whom he at least appeared to have become responsible, he could not, until he was sure she would come to no harm through him.

"Don't let anything hinder you! Don't let anything hinder you!"

It appeared that this refrain had not ceased for an instant since it began, but had chimed its changes through music, ceremony, prayer and reception without interruption It acted like a goad upon his conscience now. He must do something that would set him free to go back to Washington. An inspiration came to him.

"Wouldn't you like to go to the station with us?" he asked the young man. "I am sure your sister would like to have you"

The boy's face lit up joyfully.

"Oh, wouldn't you mind? I'd like it awfully, and—if it's all the same to you, I wish mother could go, too. It's the first time Celia and she were ever separated, and I know she hates it fiercely to have to say goodbye with the house full of folks this way But she doesn't expect it, of course, and really it isn't fair to you, when you haven't seen Celia alone yet, and it's your wedding trip—"

"There will be plenty of time for us," said the compulsory bridegroom, graciously, and felt as if he had perjured himself. It was not in his nature to enjoy a serious masquerade of this kind

I shall be glad to have you both come" he added, earnestly. "I really want you Tell your mother"

The boy grasped his hand impulsively

"I say said he, "you're all right! I don mind confessing that I've hated the very thought of you for a whole three months, ever since Celia told us she had promised to marry you. You see, I hadn really knew you when I was a little chap, but I didn't used to like you I took an awful scunner to you for some reason I suppose kids often take irrational dislikes like that. But ever since I've laid eyes on you tonight, I've liked you all the way through. I like your eyes. It isn't a bit as I thought I remembered you. I used to think your eyes had a sort of deceitful look. Awful to tell you, isn't it? But I felt as if I wanted to have it off my conscience, for I see now you're nothing of the kind. You've got the honestest eyes I ever saw on a man, and I'd stake my last cent that you wouldn't cheat a church mouse. You're true as steel and I'm mighty glad you're my brotherinlaw I know you'll be good to Celia"

The slow color mounted under his disguise until it reached Gordon's burnished brown hair His eyes were honest eyes. They had always been so—until today Into what a world of deceit he had entered! How he would like to make a clean breast of it all to this nice, frank boy, but he must not! for there was his trust! For an instant he was on the point of trying to explain that he was not the true bridegroom, and getting young Jefferson to help him to set matters right, but an influx of newly arrived guests broke in upon their privacy, and he could only press the boy's hand and say in embarrassed tones

"Thank you! I shall try to be worthy of your good opinion hereafter!"

It was over at last, and the bride slipped from his side to prepare for the journey. He looked hastily around, feeling that his very first opportunity had come for making an escape. If an open window had presented itself, he would have vaulted through, trusting to luck and his heels to get away but there was no window, and every door was blocked by staring, admiring, smirking people. He bethought himself of the fire escape where waited his hat and coat, and wondered if he could find it.

With smiling apologies, he broke away from those around him, murmuring something about being needed, and worked his way firmly, but steadily, toward the stairs and thence to the back halls. Coming at last upon an open window, he slipped through, his heart beating wildly. He thought for a second that he was there ahead of the others, but a dark form loomed ahead and he perceived some one coming up from outside. Another second, and he saw it was his newly acquired brotherinlaw.

"Say, this is great!" was his greeting. "How did you manage to find your way up alone? I was just coming down after you. I wanted to leave you there till the last minute so no one would suspect, but now you are here we can hustle off at once. I just took mother and Celia down. It was pretty stiff for mother to climb down, for she was a little bit afraid, but she was game all right, and she was so pleased to go. They're waiting for us down there in the court. Here, let me help you with your overcoat. Now I'll pull down this window, so no one will suspect us and follow. That's all right now; come on! You go ahead. Just hold on to the railing and go slow. I'll keep close to you. I know the way in my sleep. I've played fire here many a year, and could climb down in my sleep."

Gordon found himself wishing that this delightful brotherinlaw were really his There was evidently to be no opportunity of escape here. He meditated making a dash and getting away in the dark when they should reach the foot of the stairs, much as he hated to leave that way, he felt he must do so if there was any chance for him at all, but, when they reached the ground, he saw that was hopeless. The car that was to take them to the station was drawn up close to the spot, and the chauffeur stood beside it.

"Your mother says fer you to hurry, Mister Jefferson," he called in a sepulchral tone. "They're coming out around the block to watch. Get in as quick as you can."

The burly chauffeur stood below Gordon, helped him to alight on his feet from the fire escape, and hustled him into the darkness of the conveyance.

They were very quiet until they had left the dark court and were speding down the avenue. Then the bride's mother 'aid two gentle hands upon Gordon's, leaning across from her seat to do so, and said:

"My son, I shall never forget this of you, never! It was dear of you to give me this last few minutes with my darling!"

Gordon, deeply touched and much put to it for words, mumbled something about being very glad to have her, and Jefferson relieved the situation by pouring forth a volume of information and questions, fortunately not pausing long enough to have the latter answered. The bride sat with one hand clasped in her mother's, and said not a word. Gordon was haunted by the thought of tears in her eyes.

There was little opportunity for thinking, but Gordon made a hasty plan. He decided to get his party all out to the train and then remember his suit case, which he had left checked in the station. Jefferson would probably insist upon going for it, but he would insist more strenuously that the brother and sister would want to have this last minute together. Then he could get away in the crowd and disappear, coming later for his suit case perhaps, or sending a porter from his own train for it. The only drawback to this arrangement was that it seemed a dishonorable way to leave these people who would in the nature of things be left in a most trying position by his disappearance, especially the sad little bride But it could not be helped, and his staying would only complicate things still further, for he would have to explain who he was, and that was practically impossible on account of his commission. It would not do to run risks with himself until his mission was accomplished and his message delivered. After that he could confess and make whatever reparation a man in his strange position could render.

The plan worked very well. The brother of course eagerly urged that he be allowed to go back for the suit case, but Gordon, with well feigned thoughtfulness, said in a low tone

"Your sister will want you for a minute all to herself."

A tender look came into the boy's eyes, and he turned back smiling to the stateroom where his mother and sister were having a wordless farewell. Gordon jumped from the train and sprinted down the platform, feeling meaner than he ever remembered to have felt in his whole life, and with a strange heaviness about his heart. He forgot for the moment that there was need for him to be on his guard against possible detectives sent by Mr. Holman. Even the importance of the message he carried seemed to weigh less, now that he was free. His feet had a strange unwillingness to hurry, and without a constant pressure of the will would have lagged in spite of him. His heart wanted to let suit case and commission and everything else go to the winds and take him back to the stateroom where he had left his sorrowful bride of an hour. She was not his, and he might not go, but he knew that he would never be the same hereafter. He would always be wondering where she was, wishing he could have saved her from whatever troubled her; wishing she were his bride, and not another's.

He passed back through the station gate, and a man in evening clothes eyed him sharply. He fancied he saw a resemblance to one of the men at the Holman dinner table, but he dared not look again lest a glance should cost him recognition. He wondered blindly which way he should take, and if it would be safe to risk going at once to the checking window, or whether he ought to go in hiding until he was sure young Jefferson would no longer look for him Then a hand touched his shoulder and a voice that was strangely welcome shouted:

"This way, George! The checking place is over to the right!"

He turned and there stood Jefferson, milling and panting:

"You see, the little mother had something to say to Celia alone, so I saw I was detrop, and thought I'd better come with you," he declared as soon as he could get his breath.

"Gee, but you can run!" added the panting youth. "What's the hurry? It's 10 whole minutes before the train leaves. I couldn't waste all that time kicking my heels on the platform, when I might be enjoying my new brotherinlaw's company. I say, are you really going to live permanently in Chicago? I do wish you'd decide to come back to New York. Mother'll miss Celia no end I don't know how she's going to stand it"

Walking airily by Gordon's side, he talked, apparently not noticing the sudden start and look of mingled anxiety and relief that overspread his brotherinlaw's countenance. Then another man walked by them and turning looked in their faces. Gordon was sure this was the thick set man from Holman's. He was eyeing Gordon keenly. Suddenly all other questions stepped into the background, and the only immediate matter that concerned him was his message, to get it safely to its destination. With real relief he saw that this had been his greatest concern all the time, underneath all hindrances, and that there had not been at any moment any escape from the crowding circumstances other than that he had taken, step by step. If he had been beset by thieves and blackguards, and thrown into prison for a time, he would not have felt shame at the delay, for those things he could not help. He saw with new illumination that there was no more shame to him from these trivial and peculiar circumstances with which he had been hemmed in since his start to New York than if he had been checked by any more tragic obstacles. His only real misgiving was about his marriage. Somehow it seemed his fault, and he felt there ought to be some way to confess his part at once—but how—without putting his message in jeopardy—for no one would believe unless they knew all.

But the time of danger was at hand, he plainly saw. The man whom he dared not look closely at had turned again and was walking parallel to them, glancing now and again keenly in their direction. He was watching Gordon furtively; not a motion escaped him.

There was a moment's delay at the checking counter while the attendant searched for the suitcase, and Gordon was convinced that the man had stopped a few steps away merely for the purpose of watching him.

He dared not look around or notice the man, but he was sure he followed them back to the train. He felt his presence as clearly as if he had been able to see through the back of his head.

But Gordon was cool and collected now. It was as if the experiences of the last two hours, with their embarrassing predicaments, had been wiped off the calendar, and he were back at the moment when he left the Holman house. He knew as well as if he had watched them follow him that they had discovered his theft—treachery—whatever it ought to be called, and he was being searched for; and because of what was at stake those men would track him to death if they could. But he knew also that his disguise and his companion were for the moment puzzling this sleuth hound.

This was probably not the only watcher about the station. There were detectives, too, perhaps, hired hastily, and all too ready to seize a suspect.

He marveled that he could walk so deliberately, swinging his suit case in his gloved hand, at so momentous a time. He smiled and talked easily with the pleasant fellow who walked by his side, and answered his questions with very little idea of what he was saying; making promises which his heart would like to keep, but which he now saw no way of making good.

Thus they entered the train and came to the car where the bride and her mother waited. There were tears on the face of the girl, and she turned to the window to hide them. Gordon's eyes followed her wistfully, and down through the double glass, unnoticed by her absent gaze, he saw the face of the man who had followed them, sharply watching him.

Realizing that his hat was a partial disguise, he kept it on in spite of the presence of the ladies. The color rose in his cheeks that he had to seem so discourteous, but, to cover his embarrassment, he insisted that he be allowed to take the elder lady to the platform, as it really was almost time for the train to start, and so he went deliberately out to act the part of bridegroom in the face of his recognized foe.

The mother and Gordon stood for a moment on the vestibule platform, while Jefferson bade his sister goodbye and tried to soothe her distress at parting from her mother.

"He's all right, Celie; indeed he is," said the young fellow caressingly, laying his hand upon his sister's bowed head. "He's going to be awfully good to you; he cares a lot for you, and he's promised to do all sorts of nice things. He says he'll bring you back soon, and he would never stand in the way of your being with us a lot. He did, indeed What do you think of that? Isn't it quite different from what you thought he would say? He doesn't seem to think he's got to spend the rest of his days in Chicago either. He says there might something turn up that would make it possible for him to change all his plans. Isn't that great?"

Celia tried to look up and smile through her tears, while the man outside studied the situation a moment in perplexity, and then strolled slowly back to watch Gordon and the elder woman.

"You will be good to my little girl," he heard the woman's voice pleading. "She has always been guarded, and she will miss us all, even though she has you." The voice went through Gordon like a knife. To stand much more of this and not denounce himself for a blackguard would be impossible. Neither could he keep his hat on in the presence of this wonderful motherhood, a motherhood that appealed to him all the more that he had never known a mother of his own, and had always longed for one.

He put up his hand and lifted his hat slightly, guarding as much as possible his own face from the view of the man on the station platform, who was still walking deliberately, considerately, up and down, often passing near enough to hear what they were saying. In this reverent attitude, Gordon said, as though he were uttering a sacred now:

"I will guard her as if she were—as if I were—as if I were—you"—then he paused a moment and added solemnly, tenderly—"Mother!"

He wondered if it were not desecration to utter such words when all the time he was utterly unable to perform them in the way in which the mother meant. "Imposter!" was the word which rang in his ears now. The clamor about being hindered had ceased, for he was doing his best, and not letting even a woman's happiness stand in the way of his duty.

Yet his heart had dictated the words he had spoken, while his mind and judgment were busy with his perilous position. He could not gainsay his heart for he felt that in every way he could he would guard and care for the girl who was to be in his keeping at least for a few minutes until he could contrive some way to get her back to her friends without him.

The whistle of the train was sounding now, and the brakemen were shouting, "All aboard!"

He helped the frail little elderly woman down the steps, and she reached up her face to kiss him. He bent and took the caress, the first time that a woman's lips had touched his face since he was a little child.

"Mother, I will not let anything harm her," he whispered, and she said:

"My boy, I can trust you!"

Then he put her into the care of her strong young son, swung upon the train as the wheels began to move, and hurried back to the bride. On the platform, walking beside the train, he still saw the man. Going to the weeping girl, Gordon stooped over her gently, touched her on the shoulder, and drew the window shade down. The last face he saw outside was the face of the baffled man, who was turning back, but what for? Was he going to report to others, and would there perhaps be another stop before they could leave the city, where officers or detectives might board the train? He ought to be ready to get off and run for his life if there was. There seemed no way but to fee the porter to look after his companion, and leave her, despicable as it seemed! Yet his soul of honor told him he could never do that, no matter what was at stake.

Then, without warning a new sensation was thrust upon him. The bride, who had been standing with bowed head and with her handkerchief up to her eyes, just as her brother had left her, tottered and fell into his arms, limp and white. Instantly all his senses were called into action, and he forgot the man on the platform, forgot the possible next stop in the city, and the explanation he had been about to make to the girl; forgot even the importance of his mission, and the fact that the train he was on was header toward Chicago, instead of Washington; forgot everything but the fact that the loveliest girl he had ever seen, with the saddest look a human face might wear, was lying apparently lifeless in his arms.

Outside the window the man had turned back and was now running excitedly along with the train trying to see into the window; and down the platform, not 10 yards behind, came a frantic man with English-looking clothes, a heavy mustache and goatee, shaggy eyebrows, and a sensual face, striding angrily along as fast as his heavy body would carry him.

But Gordon saw none of them.

CHAPTER VI.

Five hours before, the man who was hurling himself furiously after the rapidly retreating train had driven calmly through the city, from the pier of the White Star Line to the apartment of a man whom he had met abroad, and who had offered him the use of it during his absence. The rooms were in the fourth story of a fine apartment house. The returning exile noted with satisfaction the irreproachable neighborhood, as he slowly descended from the carriage, paid his fee, and entered the door, to present his letter of introduction to the janitor in charge.

His first act was to open the steamer trunk which he had brought with him in the cab, and take therefrom his wedding garments. These he carefully arranged on folding hangers and hung in the closet, which was otherwise empty save for a few boxes piled on the high shelf.

Then he hastened to the telephone and communicated with his best man, Jefferson Hathaway; told him the boat was late arriving at the dock, but that he was here at last, gave him a few directions concerning errands he would like to have done, and agreed to be at the church a half-hour earlier than the time set for the ceremony, to be shown just what arrangements had been made. He was told that his bride was feeling very tired and was resting, and agreed that it would be as well not to disturb her; they would have time enough to talk afterwards; there really wasn't anything to say but what he had already written. And he would have about all he could do to get there on time as it was. He asked if Jefferson had called for the ring he had ordered and if the carriage would be sent for him in time and then without formalities closed the interview. He and Jefferson were not exactly fond of one another, though Jefferson was the beloved brother of his bride to be.

He hung up the receiver and ran for a brandy and soda to brace himself for the coming ordeal which was to bind to him a woman whom for years he had been trying to get in his power and whom he might have loved if she had not dared to scorn him for the evil that she knew was in him. At last he had found a way to subdue her and bring her with her ample fortune to his feet and he felt the exultation of the conqueror as he went about his preparations for the evening.

He made a smug and leisurely toilet, with a smile of satisfaction upon his flabby face. He was naturally a selfish person and had always known how to make other people attend to all bothersome details for him while he enjoyed himself. He was quite comfortable and self complacent as he posed a moment before the mirror to smooth his mustache and note how well he was looking. Then he went to the closet for his coat.

It was most peculiar, the way it happened, but somehow, as he stepped into that closet to take down his coat, which hung at the back where the space was widest, the opening at the wrist of his shirt sleeve caught for just an instant in the little knob of the closet latch. The gold button which held the cuff to the wristband slipped its hold, and the man was free almost at once, but the angry twitch he had made at the slight detention had given the door an impetus which set it silently moving on its hinges. (It was characteristic of George Hayne that he was always impatient of the slightest detention.) He had scarcely put his hand upon his wedding coat when a soft steel click, followed by utter darkness, warned him that his impatience had entrapped him. He put out his hand and pushed at the door, but the catch had settled into place. It was a very strong, neat little catch, and it did its work well. The man was a prisoner.

At first he was only annoyed, and gave the door an angry kick or two, as if of course it would presently release him meekly; but then he bethought him of his polished wedding shoes, and desisted. He tried to find a knob and shake the door, but the only knob was the tiny brass one on the outside of the catch, and you cannot shake a plain surface reared up before you. Then he set his massive, flabby shoulder against the door and pressed with all his might, till his bulky linen shirt front creaked with dismay, and his wedding collar wilted limply. But the door stood like adamant. It was massive, like the man, but it was not flabby. The wood of which it was composed had spent its early life in the open air, wet with the dews of heaven, and exercising against the north blast. It was nothing for it to hold out against this pillow of a man, who had been nurtured in the dissipation and folly of a great city. The door held its own and if doors do such things, the face of it must have laughed to the silent room; and who knows but the room winked back? It would be but natural that a room should resent a new occupant in the absence of a beloved owner.

He was there, safe and fast, in the still dark, with plenty of time for reflection. And there were things in his life that called for his reflection They had never had him at an advantage before.

In due course of time, having exhausted his breath and strength in fruitless pushing, and his vocabulary in foolish curses, he lifted up his voice and roared. No other word would quite describe the sound that issued from his mighty throat. But the city roared placidly below him, and no one minded him in the least.

He sacrificed the shiny toes of the shoes and added resounding kicks on the door to the general hubbub. He changed the roar to a bellow like a mad bull, but still the silence that succeeded it was as deep and monotonous as ever. He tried going to the back of the closet and hurling himself against the door, but he only hurt his soft muscles with the effort. Finally he sat down on the floor of the closet.

KNOCKOUT FOR MR. BROWN

His Better Half's Story of Experience With Lotttery Certainly Not Flattering to Him.

Mrs. Brown has a special horror of lotteries, and at all times and places she embraces every opportunity of holding forth with vehemence concerning this pet abomination. Her indignation will therefore be imagined when, one evening, her worthy spouse came home and proudly announced that he had joined a goose club. For something like an hour she poured the vials of wrath on her unfortunate husband's head, while he endeavored meekly to bear it all.

At last the warmth of the attack proved quite too much for the long-enduring John, and he decided that the time had come for him to fire up in return.

"I suppose, my dear," said he, endeavoring to be sarcastic, "you were never in a lottery, were you?"

But, alas for the speaker! Mrs. Brown turned upon him with withering scorn.

"Once, John, and only once," said she. "They say, as you know, that marriage is a lottery. Well, I went in for that, and I myself won a goose!"—London Tit-Bits.

Three young chaps were eating in the dining room at one of Pittsburgh's pleasure parks, and incidentally were trying to flirt with the pretty waitress. After devouring everything in sight they decided to have some ice cream and cake.

"Give me devil's food," said two of them, and the other asked for walnut cake.

"Two devils and one nut," cried the bright young girl.

Educated Rooster.

"Spizzerinktum" is an old name even for a rooster, but this rooster is no ordinary fowl. The bird comes from a strain of Barred Plymouth Rocks, was hatched last May and weighs six pounds. He is owned by E. E. Bennett of Hartford City, who refuses to part with his prize-winner at any prices. Judges at various fairs where he has been shown, have told the owner that he is a most promising bird, and this is borne out by the fact that $100 has been offered for him.

"Spizzerinktum" is also an educated fowl. One of his chief delights is riding the seat of a specially constructed wagon and holding the reins over eight boys who act as steeds for him. He drove this team in the centennial parade at Hartford City.—Indianapolis News.

TWO DAUGHTERS OF MILLIONAIRE GOULD

WALKING IN SLEEP.

The customary answer to the question how to prevent sleep walking, or somnambulism, is to eat a light supper. To my mind this cause of sleep walking has been overworked. To go to bed after eating a light supper is conducive to restful sleep. It helps to ward off sleep walking. But at that, discomfort arising from the digestion is only a minor factor in sleep walking.

A person walks in his sleep because he is driven by an intense, compelling dream. The dream is so compelling that it awakens practically every one of his faculties except his consciousness. His hearing is acute. He may walk with his eyes closed or open, but between such light as he has and his awakened, oversensitive sense of location and sense of touch he manages to find his way around about as well as when awake. His sense of muscle balance and his muscle coordination are fully awake.

The reason for all the happenings of sleep walking is the intense urge of some emotion which is finding its expression in a dream. It differs from an ordinary dream in that the dreamer tries to act the thoughts that flash the mind of any dreamer. The urge to go hooks up with the machinery for going.

Why is this hooking up in the mind of the sleep walker? In part because of the intensity of the dream. The question which follows is: Why does this hooking up occur in some people and not in others? The answer which Dr. Addington Bruce gives to this question in his book on "Sleep and Its Disorders" is that sleep walkers are hysterics. They are given to unrestrained emotionalism during their waking hours and this unrestrained emotionalism finds its expression during the night in sleep walking.

Freud and his school ascribe it to dream complexes, the result of too much suppression of the sex urge.

The two explanations may seem to be far apart, but they are closely akin.

Bridges makes a distinction between the masculine and the feminine type of mind, claiming that when the former loses control of itself in certain directions the result is neurasthenia. The feminine type of mind, losing control in the same direction, according to Bridges, develops hysteria. Piecing these theories together, persons with the masculine type of mind (and among these neurasthenics) do not have somnambulism. Somnambulism is a symptom of hysteria and develops solely in persons with the feminine type of mind.

The Chorus of the Poultry Yard.

From the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

There are pessimistic people who still contend that a fair like the one recently held in Memphis does no good.

They do not know what they are talking about. When such a splendid exhibition is offered as the display of a week ago even the man or woman who knows nothing about farming, who knows less about stock raising or chickens, instinctively feels a desire to try their hand.

When the early days of spring come you will hear, if you key yours ears for such a welcome sound, the chorus of the poultry yard.

Stop a moment and think, take out your pencil and do a little figuring. Yard eggs cost from 35 to 40 cents a dozen and this price varies little from one season to another.

Sitting on the porch of a small suburban cottage some one was heard in the rear to ask, "how many eggs today?" And the answer came, with a bit of pride in the tone, "only 16."

It was then explained that in this small backyard a sufficient number of eggs were collected to supply the household and furnish the neighbors in the laying season.

It must also be stated that in this same small cottage the chorus of the poultry yard had been heard but five brief months.

What a possibility for the coming spring.

Every rural impresario should be encouraged to increase the chorus of his poultry yard.

It is not necessary to go into the country to raise chickens. More than one Memphis backyard presents a prosperous picture of plenty. The smallest home is not so small that some members of the family can not raise chickens.

There is no serious difficulty in raising poultry. The chickens virtually raise themselves. Give them air and water and simple food and they will repay you tenfold.

There is nothing so comfortable to contemplate as the old family hen. The chicken is not a haughty bird. The hen is generous and also grateful. She is in latter years a motherly old soul who nestles her chicks about her and scratches during the long hours of the day that they may be well fed.

Take a practical, common sense view of the situation. Eggs last winter during December sold for 50 cents a dozen. It is predicted that the same price will prevail this winter. We will probably pay 5 cents a piece for the indispensable egg, when a generous hen will give them to us with little care and attention.

Women Comfortable at Last.

From the New York Globe.

"Washable gloves," reads the advertisement in a daily paper. Also, "one-piece serge dresses." Also, "sport suits" and "walking shoes."

The advertisements have their significance. It's a season of comfort and good sense for women. The gloves, your wife or your sister or your fiancee or your chum girl will tell you, can be washed in sudsy water. They used to have to go to the cleaners or be discarded after a few wearings. The one-piece serge dresses slip on as easily as a wrapper—and are as trig and trim as a uniform. The skirts of the sport suits are wide and of a delightfully walkable shortness. The shoes are common sense heeled and roomy toed and, withal, smart.

They talk much, as they have always slavishness to dress and of the discomfort she willingly undergoes in order to be in style. But a woman wrote to a fashion editor just the other day:

"I have packed up to stay away a month and everything I need has gone into one suitcase. There are the shirtwaists, dressy and tailored, to my suit; there is a taffeta afternoon dress, a satin dinner dress, a serge dress and an evening dress. I could stay the whole winter with the same wardrobe. There are no belts, no ribbons, no fussy odds and ends, no accessories. There has never been a winter when one could dress so simply and so well."

Verily, it's a season of comfort and common sense for women. And it is too late for them to go back to slavishness. Comfort, let us believe, has come to stay. And let us be thankful.

Detroit a City of Soups.

From the Detroit News.

Detroit is a city of soup eaters. The chefs say so. They are always racking their brains for new preparations to please the palate. The waiters admit it. Many times their wives wash shirts spotted with consommes and chowders. And last of all, the cashiers' books show it.

Boston baked beans are advertised and eaten in all parts of the country. New York sharpens its carving knife, smiles broadly, smacks its lips and "digs into" its game—bear, venison, wild ducks, partridges, quail, grouse and pheasants. Chicago feasts on choice steaks, chops, domestic fowls and stews. Baltimore casts its net and offers salt water fish, oysters, clams and others. St. Louis likes Italian delicacies; Denver likes French pastry and other imported sweets. Memphis and other cities below the Mason-Dixon line are strong for barbecued squirrel.

But Detroit, um—ah. It is literally flooded with soups, French, German, Swiss, English and American.

The investigator made his way into the kitchen of one of Detroit's leading hotels. There were hundreds of cooks, waiters and dishwashers, scurrying in every direction.

"What is the gastronomical peculiarity of Detroit?" he asked the chef.

"It's soup," the chef replied. "I believe there is more soup eaten in Detroit than in any other city in the country. There are two cooks who do nothing from morning till night but prepare soup—German pea soup, cream of tomato soup, chicken gumbo, cream of chicken regence, chicken broth, beef consomme, French onion soup, clam chowder, mock turtle soup, clam juice and special French chowder. Those men are conceded to be the best cooks in the hotel."

In another hotel the same question was asked.

The reply was "soup."

Shakespeare Omitted.

From the Chicago Evening Post.

If you were going on an antarctic cruise, what books would you take in your library? Necessarily, you could take but few. The Shackleton expedition reflected the serious mindedness of its members in its choice of reading matter during a long absence from the region of circulating and reference libraries. It took the bible, the Encyclopedia Britannica, Carlyle's "French Revolution," Bacon's essays and Browning's poems, in addition to such technical works as were essential to the purpose of the voyage. It is rather surprising to find Shakespeare omitted. As a rule, he and the bible go together in any restricted selection of books.

Surprised Dinner Party.

In a recently published boow Sir Henry Lucy has a charming story of the late Canon Ainger. The canon was very fond of children, and set out one night to attend a party given "by children for children."

"Don't announce me," he said to the servant.

Leaving his coat and hat downstairs, he quietly opened the drawing-room door, where the buzz of voices announced the presence of company. Dropping on his hands and knees he entered, making strange noises distinctly resembling the neighing of a horse. Aware of a dead silence, he looked up, and found the guests assembled for an eight-o'clock dinner regarding him with disgust not unmixed with alarm.

The children's party was next door.—Youth's Companion.

Incorrigible Flirt.

A newly married couple have just moved into a bungalow in what the real estate people call "a new development" near New York. The benevolent land company runs an electric car from the property to the railway station. This car, which (like the Toonerville trolley) meets all trains, is manned, as usual, by a conductor and a motorman, both of whom are naturally on very friendly terms with the patrons. The other day the bride's mother came to visit her. She noticed that her daughter often waved a greeting toward the electric car as it passed the house. "Why, Gladys," said the old lady, "do you know all the conductors on this line already?"—Exchange.

Virtuous Youth.

"Congratulations, my boy," said the attorney, "you have inherited a nice little fortune."

"Yes," assented the fortunate youth.

"I suppose you will pay a lot of your debts now?"

"I had thought of it, but I concluded to make no change in my manner of living. I don't want to be accused of vulgar display."

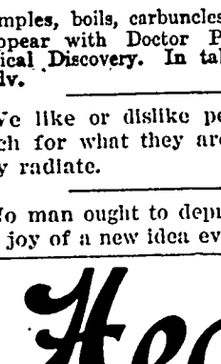
Health for Sick Women

For Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Been Woman's Most Reliable Medicine —Here is More Proof.

To women who are suffering from some form of woman's special ills, and have a constant fear of breaking down, the three following letters ought to bring hope:—

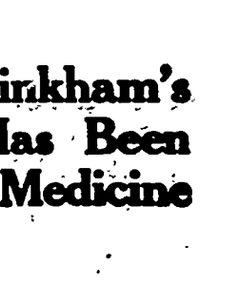


North Crandon, Wis.—"When I was 16 years old I got married and at 18 years I gave birth to twins and it left me with very poor health. I could not walk across the floor without having to sit down to rest and it was hard for me to keep about and do my work. I went to a doctor and he told me I had a displacement and ulcers, and would have to have an operation. This frightened me so much that I did not know what to do. Having heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I thought I would give it a trial and it made me as well as ever. I cannot say enough in favor of the Pinkham remedies."—Mrs. Mayme Asbach, North Crandon, Wis.

Testimony from Oklahoma.

Lawton, Okla.—"When I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I seemed to be good for nothing. I tired easily and had headaches much of the time and was irregular. I took it again before my little child was born and it did me a wonderful amount of good at that time. I never fail to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to ailing women because it has done so much for me."—Mrs. A. L. McCasland, 509 Have St., Lawton, Okla.

From a Grateful Massachusetts Woman.



Roxbury, Mass.—"I was suffering from inflammation and was examined by a physician who found that my trouble was caused by a displacement. My symptoms were bearing down pains, backache, and sluggish liver. I tried several kinds of medicine; then I was asked to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has cured me and I am pleased to be in my usual good health by using it and highly recommend it."—Mrs. B. M. Osgood, 1 Haynes Park, Roxbury, Mass.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

It was news to us so perhaps will be to a goodly share of our readers That Ray Gimer is now a benedict He was married some time last month to Miss Florence Geerdes of Wellsburg and they are now living at Reeville where Mr. Gimer owns a creamery His many Klemme friends extend congratulations.

For the first time in the history of the local creamery not a single pound of butter was shipped to eastern markets last week. The output last week was 1800 pounds and it was all sold in Belmond, Eagle Grove and Clarion. Butter will doubtless sell at 50c per pound before the first of the year.—Belmond Herald Press.

A deal was made the first of the week whereby A. D. Gimer became owner of the C. L. Blumer cement block house just south of the park, possession to be given January 1st Mr. Blumer took as part payment some residence lots in the east part of town and we understand will commence the erection of a new house at once,

Some of these days, perhaps, national and state candidates will learn that if they want to impress their own particular merits upon the rural voters they will have to use the columns of the rural press, the home paper of the man whom they seek to reach. The average city daily does not exert any great political influence in the rural districts.

W. W. Marsh, Iowa's noted Guernsey breeder, recently sold the two-year-old bull, Ladysmith's Cherub for $5,100 to D. C. Tenney, Lake Crystal, Minn. This bull was later made senior grand champion Guernsey bull at the National Dairy show at Springfield, Mass., where Mr. Marsh succeeded in winning 22 out of 28 firsts in the Guernsey classes.

A new addition is being built onto the present C. F. Busch land office and when completed the old part will be used as a barber shop by Art McElmuray, The whole building is being put in tip top shape and when finished will make a good location. Mr. McElmuray has purchased the Kirkwood barber outfit and will move them to the new location.

On invitation of the ministers of Garner, all the preachers of Hancock county met at Garner, last Monday morning for the purpose of organizing a Ministerial Association. Rev. A. Gauger of Garner spoke of the importance of personal work. The following officers were elected: President, J. A. Kettle; Vice President, E. J. Doty; Secretary and Treasurer, Rev. Muhlman. It was decided to make a church canvass of every home in the county. It is the plan of the organization to meet every two months.

T. R. Riehm returned from Waterloo last Saturday, where he was in attendance at the Odd Fellows and Rebecca Convention which was held there all the week. He reports one of the largest conventions ever held and says there were over 2200 Odd Fellows and Rebeccas present. There were also 175 autos in the parade which took place there. There was also a public banquet and hundreds were in attendance. After arriving in Garner Mr. Riehm, accompanied by his wife went to Jewell in their auto and visited with A. R. Fleenor and wife until Tuesday A. R and wife returned with them in their car and returned to Jewell yesterday.—Garner Democrat.

SKY-PRICE CORN VS. FERTILITY

Wise Farmers Will Not Stampede From Live Stock to Grain Farming for Mere Temporary Gains

The present sky-price of corn, which is selling for more than $1 a bushel, and wheat, which is bringing nearly twice that much, is going to have a direct bearing on the fertility of Iowa soils, says the head of the soil department at Iowa State college,

During the past few years Iowa farmers have been selling from their land about $30,000,000 worth of fertility annually in the grain sent to the elevators. This is bound to increase if present high grain prices continue, since many farmers will abandon hog feeding and dairy farming and sell their grain.

Thotful farmers, however, will not stampede from live stock to grain farming, because they know that it does not pay to sell off well established herds and flocks and rush into grain farming just to get increased cash returns for grain for probably a year or two.

The far-sighted farmer will remember that grain and other crops sold from the farm remove soil fertility and Iowa soils are not in a condition to stand any greater drain of plant food than is now being made on them

LET BOYS IN ON HOT LUNCH

Making Fireless Cooker Will Be Their Share in Preparing School Meal

Tommy Tucker had to sing for his supper. Why not apply the system up-to-date to the rural school lunch and put some of the boys to the interesting work of making that almost necessary adjunct in preparing hot lunches, the fireless cooker? This is the happy suggestion of one member of the Home Economics department at Iowa State college

Materials needed are a wooden pail with cover, denim, covered agate pail (food kettle) excelsior and asbestos.

Place the excelsior in the bottom of the wooden pail to a depth so that when food kettle and top cushion are inserted all the space will be filled. Place a sheet of asbestos six inches larger than the bottom of the food kettle over the excelsior. Place the food kettle in this. Fit a sheet of asbestos around the food kettle, cutting notches for the handle so the kettle will slip in and out. Fill in the space between asbestos and sides of pail with more asbestos. From denim make a round bag that will fit into the top of the wooden pail. Fill with asbestos and place it on top the food kettle. Cover with wooden top. A stove, either kerosene or alcohol, should be in every rural school if a large stove is not at hand. The following dishes can be started on the stove and finished on the cooker:

Baked beans, cereals, such as oatmeal and corn meal, tapioca fruit pudding rice and raisin pudding, meat soups, beef stew and stewed dried fruits.

CALF TELLS FEEDING STORY

Robert Bourne, DeWitt Lad, Lets Animal Tell Its Own Biography

The story of a calf, told in its own words by Robert Bourne, a DeWitt lad, who fed his animal in a 6 months' feeding contest from an initial weight of 450 lbs. to a weight of 905 lbs., with a total gain in weight of 455 lbs., a daily gain of 2.5 lbs. at a cost of $25.09 and a profit of $29.41, comes to Iowa State College.

"I was born Sept. 23, 1915, and only stayed with my mother a few hours," says Robert's calf. "I soon learned to drink milk out of a pail. After a while they gave me a different kind of milk that wasn't so good and some hard, yellow stuff which they put in a box.

"When the weather got cold I was taken from the pasture, put in a lot and fed hay and some corn cob meal. The boys always kept saying, 'Willie, eat up the rest of that feed.'

"I finally found there was to be a show and if I got fat I would be sent there, so I ate all the grain I could at meal times and all the grass I could hold between times. I was weighed the 15th of April and again the 15th of May. I must have done preety well, for the boys seemed pleased and said I had gained 128 lbs., which cost $.024 a lb. They gave me more feed and I got fatter. I was weighed in June with 92 more lbs. on my ribs, which cost them $.035 a lb. After it got hot the flies got bad and it took all my energy to keep the flies from eating me up. When I came to be weighed again I had gained only 45 lws. at a cost of $.09 a lb.

"When it was time for the show I was weighed again and the boys seemed satisfied with my gains and said they would ship me to the show. One of the boys said my feed had cost him $25.09 and that I was worth $36 at the start, which made a total of $69.09 I will make him a profit of $29.41 for the 6 months' period."

ELECTION OF 1916 CLOSEST SINCE '76

Took Four Months That Time to Settle Outcome. Wilson Second Since Jackson to Be Re-elected

"Not for forty years—since the memorable election of 1876— has the presidential election been as close as the one just ended," declares Dr. Louis Pelzer, professor of history at the State University.

"The election of 1876 was not settled until March, nearly four months after the balloting, and the intense excitement and feeling subsided only with the inauguration of Rutherford B. Hayes on March 4, 1877.

Newspapers on the morning after the election in 1876 generally conceded the victory to Tilden. In that year New York gave its electoral votes to the minority candidate. But in every election since that time up to 1916 New York's great block of electoral votes has been cast on the winning side.

Not since the two administrations of Andrew Jackson, 1829-1837, has any democratic president had the privilege of serfing two consecutive terms. Since the election of Lincoln in 1861 there have been twelve presidents. And in the period of fifty-six years ending next March there have been but twelve years of democratic administrations. These were covered in the two terms of Grover Cleveland and the first term of President Wilson."

KANAWHA GIRL DISAPPEARS

A mystery that relatives and the Minneapolis police force are unable to solve is how and where Miss Mayda Skovlin disappeared two weeks ago. Miss Skovlin suffered a nervous breakdown several weeks ago and was taken to the Swedish Tabernacle Home for Young Women at Minneapolis. She was not strongly restricted in her desires about the home and had taken one or two walks alone. About eight o'clock one morning she left the building unobserved and her absence was not noted until a half hour later; the activities for search were renewed as it became evident the young lady's intention was not to return, but our last information received this morning direct from the home, is that not a single clue has been found how she left the vicinity or where she went.

Miss Skovlin was the very efficient book-keeper in the Klemme lumber office in Kanawha for over a year, and later was promoted to the head office at Belmond. She has relatives in Belmond and near Olaf who are continuing efforts to locate her. When she left the Tabernacle Home she had on her winter coat but no hat, and so far as known had no money with her, although she left money in her room.

C. A. ARNOLD INVENTS A SELF FEEDER

C. A. Arnold of Klemme, thinks you can't get too much of a good thing and so he is going to build a self-feeder 50 feet long, he writes the agricultural engineering department at Iowa State College. The feeder will extend the full length on one side of the bottom of a double corn crib. Grain spouts will come down from the bins overhead to the self-feeder below. Tankage and supplemental feeds will be fed in small separate self-feeders scattered in the lot. Mr. Arnold feeds about 200 hogs. "If I couldn't have a self-feeder, I'd quit farming," he declares.

OFFICERS KEPT BUSY

Mayor Meyer and Chief-of-police Raw are making a strenuous effort to rid the streets of the offensive booze fighter, and as a result five men and one woman were up before his honor, the mayor, Monday morning, facing a charge of drunkeness and disorderly conduct. Each was given a fine of ten dollars and costs, amounting in all to about fourteen dollars. The follows who have been in the habit of getting polluted, stewed, soused, pickled or gloriously drunk and shooting up on the street are going to find a berth in Eck's lodging house and a stiff fine from now on.

An American Chamber of Commerce was recently established in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to further closer relations between Americans in business in Brasil and their countrymen trading in similar lines in the United States and other countries. The honorary president is Edwin V. Morgan, American ambassador to Brazil. Among the honorary vice-presidents are Dr. Lauro S. An addition to the ordinary electric fan is an arrangement by which it may be made to supply perfume to the room. The spokes of the fan wheel are of a fine wire screening and they whirl through a small tank of perfumed water, placed at the base of the wheel. If desired a disinfectant may be substituted for the perfume in the water. Thus the city living room may be given the tang of the pine woods, the spicy perfume of the tropics or the salt breath of the sea.

Whenever a cat owned by the keeper of the Platte Fougere lighthouse, on the Island of Guernsey, wishes to enter its master's dwelling it rings an electric bell. This has been made possible by the construction, near the bottom of a door, of a shelf which actuates a switch when a slight weight is placed upon it. When the cat jumps to this small ledge the circuit is closed.

Fireweed, otherwise known as the "great willow herb," seems to have been created as an antidote for one of the ugliest sights a landscape may offer—burnt over ground. EVANS LEADS THEOPHILUS IN LATEST IOWA RETURNS

The belief here is that the lead of Justice Evans will be increased slightly by full returns and that the reelection of Justices Deemer and Evans now is fairly well assured.

LARGE BARN BURNS AND FARM HAND IS MISSING

Missouri Valley, Ia., Nov. 11.—It is believed that a farm hand employed on the M. S. Moats farm, three miles from here, was burned to death in the burning of a big barn on the place yesterday.

Two fires of apparent incendiary origin on this farm destroyed barns worth $2,500, wool worth $1,200, hay, grain and farm implements worth several thousand dollars more, with insurance of $2,000 The farm hand, named Wilson, is supposed to have gone to sleep in the barn

HARDING'S IOWA MAJORITY RUNS INTO SIX FIGURES

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 11.—The Iowa totals, compiled here, give the following results today.

On president 1,810 out of 2,297 precincts give Hughes, 219,817; Wilson, 170,071, a lead for Hughes on returns tabulated of 49,746.

On governor the complete unofficial tabulation gives Harding, 321,580; Meredith, 183,760, a lead for Harding of 137,820.

With but 200 precincts missing on supreme court justice a close race is shown between Evans and Theophilus. Deemer seems to have a safe lead on returns tabulated. Evans is in second place, but only 500 ahead of Theophilus.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR BACKS PEACE LEAGUE

Bethmann-Hollweg Says Idea Is Taking Hold In Teuton Empire.

Berlin, Nov 11, (by wireless to Sayville).—The speech of Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg before the reichstag main committee, yesterday, in which he announced Germany's willingness, under certain conditions, to cooperate in efforts to form an international league of peace after the war, was followed by a debate on the chancellor's remarks. During this discussion a member of the socialist party said that in all countries the idea that there should be an end to war was gaining ground. The chancellor said he thought that the cry for international treaties to prevent recurrence of war would become so strong that eventually it must lead to results.

The speaker said that formerly Germany had attached less importance than France and England to the idea of arbitration. The chancellor had expressed fear that England would frame a peace coalition in accordance with her own desires. Nevertheless, the principle ought to be recognized as right.

It was an important point, the socialist member continued, that the chancellor never had spoken of the annexation of Belgium as essential. Germany was at war for defense and not for conquest, he said, and it would be of advantage if Germany should take the lead in a coalition for the prevention of war.

MEXICAN-AMERICAN COMMISSION RESUMES

Atlantic City, N. J., Nov. 10.—The Mexican-American joint commissioners resumed their efforts today to effect a settlement of the difficulties between Mexico and the United States after a recess of a week. It was indicated the American members were determined to force the conference to an early conclusion.

The Mexican members appeared no less impatient for an adjournment, but the realization by both sides that Villa's activities in northern Mexico had been widely extended since their adjournment last week made it apparent that an agreement involving a withdrawal at any early date of General Pershing's troops was improbable.

CONCEALING IDENTITY OF THREE PERSONS INJURED

Atlantic, Ia., Nov. 9.—Desperate efforts have been made to conceal the identity of two women and a man who were brought to the hospital in Atlantic early yesterday morning, one of the women suffering greatly from deep and jagged cuts in her legs and abdomen, and all three cut and bruised. All that could be learned positively is that these three, with two other men who disappeared when trouble came, were in an automobile en route from Des Moines to Omaha. Near the Baier farm, this side of Exira, the five were thrown into a barb wire fence. The clothing of the women was literally torn to shreds and pools of blood were left about the fence. WOMAN SHOOTS BOY IN DEMONSTRATING REVOLVER

Sydney, Ia., Nov 9 —Amos Isenour, 9-year-old son of Brakeman Isenour, of this city, was shot in the abdomen by Mrs. Coffman, wife of an employe of the Brandon Lumber company and dangerously injured, the shooting being the result of an accident, was another instance of "did not know it was loaded."

Mrs. Coffman was illustrating the operation of a revolver to an interested group of children when the weapon was accidentally discharged. The accident occurred shortly before the arrival in town of the train upon which the lad's father has his run, and the boy was placed on board and hurried to an Omaha hospital, where it was found that the bullet had made four perforations of the bowels, causing a very dangerous injury.

Mrs. Coffman was greatly frightened and shocked by the accident The two families are neighbors.

CALIFORNIA TURNS TIDE FOR WILSON

President Comes Safely Under Wire When "Golden State" Swings Definitely Into Democratic Column.

CONTESTS ARE PROBABLE

Minnesota Still Leans Toward Hughes, But Result May Be Changed By Vote of Guardsmen.

New York, Nov. 11 —Returns compiled in the no longer pivotal states today at 2 o'clock give the following result·

In Minnesota Hughes was leading Wilson by 705 votes with 35 precincts to hear from.

In California Wilson was leading Hughes by 3,170 votes and 31 precincts to hear from.

In New Hampshire Wilson was leading Hughes by 239 votes and 11 precincts to hear from.

In New Mexico Wilson was leading Hughes by 1,039 votes and 72 precincts to hear from

New York, Nov 10.—Woodrow Wilson was elected president of the United States when California swung into the democratic column early today The only state where the result remained in doubt today was Minnesota, with 12 electoral votes. Wilson's lead in New Mexico and New Hampshire now appears safe. West Virginia, which was classed as doubtful until late last night, has gone definitely for Hughes.

Unless the vote of California is divided, which now seems a possibility, Mr Wilson is assured of 276 votes in the electoral college, 10 more than a majority, and Mr Hughes 243. The president could lose three votes from California and still have enough to elect. This loss would be offset by New Mexico which it seems certain he has carried Hughes Still Short.

If Mr Hughes carried Minnesota with 12 votes and New Hampshire switched back, he would have only 259, seven less than enough to elect. Mr. Wilson could lose New Mexico and three votes from California and still win

The result in Minnesota may be determined by the ballots of the 2 138 national guardsmen now on the Mexican border which will not be counted until the state canvassing board meets next Tuesday Returns received early today give Hughes a lead of slightly over 1,000 votes

With 99 districts missing out of 638 in New Mexico, Wilson was 1 410 ahead. The remote precincts not yet heard from are sparsely settled, and it was not believed the president's lead would be wiped out The outcome in New Hampshire was in greater doubt than any other state. Certified returns from all but 25 precincts gave Hughes a lead of 131, but unofficial figures from the districts lacking were said to show a Wilson plurality of 117

California complete, except for 36 of the 5,870 precincts in the state, gave Wilson, 465,669, Hughes, 462,538, a plurality of 3,131 for the president.

Hinged on California.

The tension of the most dramatic situation in the political history was broken when the Associated Press flashed the news that Republican State Chairman Rowell, of California, had conceded the state to Wilson Frantic appeals to expedite returns had been sent to state leaders hour after hour by the national headquarters of both parties in this city. Telegrams were reinforced by telephone calls across the continent It had been apparent since Wednesday that California was the pivot upon which the election would swing.

In past campaigns New Mexico's three electoral votes have been considered merely as incidental in swelling the majority of the winner, but yesterday they might have elected a president. Minnesota was almost as important as California in determining whether Hughes or Wilson had won, and the returns from that state caused nearly as much jubilation among the republicans as those from California in the rival camp.

Hoped Against Hope.

Up to the time republican headquarters here were closed, soon after midnight, the party leaders gathered there refused to concede defeat. They seemed to base their refusal on the assumption "that something might happen in California." Mr. Hughes was told before he retired that California had gone against him, but he had no comment to make.

Democratic headquarters were electrified by the announcement of the result in California transmitted to Chairman McCormick by the Associated Press. The chairman was especially gratified because he had been vindicated in his preelection prediction that Wilson would be elected even if he lost New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Illinois.

Defeat for "Solid East."

Mr. Wilson is the only president ever elected with the "solid east" against him. His victory was believed by politicians to presage an alignment for the first time in congress of the west with the south. It was pointed out that while he would not have "a working majority" in the lower house he would not have to combat a majority inimical to his policies.

There was much speculation today among suffragists as to the part played by women in the election. An analysis of their vote was eagerly awaited. While President Wilson lost in Illinois and Oregon, he carried Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Arizona, Kansas, Nevada and California, the other 10 states in which women vote.

Willcox Won't Admit It.

Chairman Willcox, refusing to concede the election of President Wilson, said today in a formal statement, issued after a conference with republican campaign managers, that the election still depends upon the vote of a few close states, and that the returns thus far announced are in most states unofficial and may be changed by the official count.

TEST OUT ARIZONA.

in regard to the matter of supervising the counting of votes in close states

"So far as the claims of the Wilson followers go," Mr Willcox said, they began to cry fraud before the election The history of that party is such that it ill becomes them to raise the cry of fraud at this time The republican national committee will insist the votes cast for its candidates be counted for him, but we want no votes not properly cast

"We will take every step to see that the votes cast are properly counted The bluster of the democrats has no effect on our effort to see that an honest count shall be had.

Wants Honest Count.

"We have not called upon the attorney general of the United States or United States district attorneys or other officials of the government to supervise the counting of votes in any state. The voting machinery of each state is under the administration of state authorities and our representatives in each state will take all needful steps to see that the election laws have been obeyed and all votes properly counted.

"The call for an honest count, which we demand, will be joined in and will be requested by all right thinking citizens of whatever party

"We are willing to have every dollar of our expenditures investigated in the most thorough manner We have made reports in detail under the law and, if other details are wanted, we will give them. I leave it to our democratic opponents to say whether they will do the same."

California.

San Francisco, Nov. 8.—In California 5,659 precincts out of 5,917 give Hughes, 446,646, Wilson, 450,371. Wilson's plurality 3,826. This leaves only 21 precincts to be heard from in Los Angeles, Hughes' strongest hope.

San Francisco, Nov 9—Returns from 5,364 out of 5,917 in California give Hughes, 436,839; Wilson 441,362, a majority of 4,523 for Wilson. This includes complete San Francisco city and a few up state precincts.

San Francisco, Nov. 9.—Belated returns from isolated northern mountain counties kept California in the uncertain list early today. None of Sierra county's 16 precincts have been heard from, and 26 of another mountain district, Tuolumne county, are likewise missing. Lack of telephone communication is largely responsible for delay. It is the same district which elected James D. Phelan, democrat, to the United States Senate two years ago after former Congressman J R. Nowland had been in the lead for more than 24 hours on urban returns.

A total of 327 northern California precincts were lacking, as against 143 in southern California.

San Francisco, Nov. 9.—Complete returns from 684 precincts in San Francisco on the presidential vote give Wilson, 78,451; Hughes, 63,357, a majority for President Wilson of 15,094.

San Francisco, Nov. 9—Chester H. Rowell, republican state central committee chairman, said at 9:10 o'clock this morning that estimated county totals for all of California, showed Hughes running 200 votes behind President Wilson. Rowell declined to concede California, but said that every precaution is to be taken to safeguard the accuracy of the count remaining to be accomplished.

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 9.—Members of the local democratic state central committee established a guard today at the local court house, where Alameda county's ballots are being tabulated

Minnesota.

St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 9.—State officials agreed today that the vote of the Minnesota guardsmen of the Mexican border might decide the presidential contest in this state

Secretary of State Schmahl received a telegram this afternoon from the commissioners who took the border vote Tuesday, informing him that 2,136 votes had been cast

The result of this vote will not be known for several days. It requires some time for the ballots to reach the secretary of state, who must forward them to the auditors of the counties in which the soldiers live

Moreover the law provides that the canvassing shall not be closed until more than one week after the election unless the votes of all the national guard members residing in the district have been sooner voted and canvassed

St Paul, Minn., Nov 9—When presidential returns from Minnesota were nine tenths complete at noon today Charles E Hughes still maintained a slight lead over President Wilson. Returns from 2,736 precincts of 3,024 in the state gave Wilson, 171,497, Hughes, 173,308

St Paul, Minn., Nov 8.—With Hughes leading by 803 votes and 519 precincts yet to report, leaders of both parties this forenoon admit that the race is one of the closest in the history of the state and although both are confident of victory, there are few predictions as to the outcome

The statement of party leaders in which claims that the precincts to be heard from will swing the election in their favor are considered to indicate that the tense situation will not be relieved until all votes are counted

West Virginia.

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 9.—Returns from 1,324 precincts out of 1,718 in the state for president give. Hughes, 114,935, Wilson, 110,856.

Returns from 1,315 precincts of 1,713 for governor give: Robinson, republican, 112,650, Cornwell, democrat, 112,451.

Returns from 1,305 precincts out of 1,713 for United States senator give Sutherland, republican. 114,122; Chilton, democrat, 107,744.

New Hampshire.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 9.—New Hampshire complete, but only partially certified to the secretary of state, gives Hughes, 43,732; Wilson, 43,849. Wilson's plurality, 117.

The complete figures of New Hampshire showing a plurality of 117 for Wilson presidential electors are based on certified returns to the secretary of state from 240 precincts out of a total of 294, added to press returns from 54 precincts. The secretary is checking up the press returns with those certified as the latter come in.

The two precincts which were missing until this afternoon gave a total of 11 votes for Hughes and seven for Wilson.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 9.—With two precincts missing the count in New Hampshire at noon gave Wilson a lead of 121. This was based on certified returns from 256 precincts and press returns from 36. The vote was: Wilson, 43,842; Hughes, 43,721. Secretary of State Bean corrected his earlier statement in which he said that the state was complete. The two towns unreported cast a very small vote.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 9.—With returns complete, but only partially verified officially, Wilson led in New Hampshire this morning 94 votes according to state Secretary Bean. Discovery of errors in official results was a factor in reversing the lead which Hughes had last night he said.

Mr. Bean said that from 12 of the 374 towns and wards still to be verified might further change the result.

North Dakota.

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 9.—Errors in the tabulation of returns from a number of western precincts in North Dakota, disclosed in a recapitulation shortly after noon today, cut down President Wilson's lead by more than 200 votes. With 1,687 of the state's 1,859 precincts reported the count was: Wilson, 51,474; Hughes, 50,772.

Wilson jumped ahead again returns from 1,697 precincts out of a total of 1,859 had reported. The count then stood. Wilson, 52,894; Hughes, 51,351.

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 9.—With from five to seven precincts missing in each of approximately 30 counties in North Dakota, it is expected that the complete returns will not be received until late in the day.

Reports received up to an early hour this morning gave President Wilson a lead of more than 1,000 votes.

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 9.—With returns in from 1,714 of the 1,859 precincts in North Dakota, the vote was: Wilson, 53,053; Hughes, 51,549. Wilson's lead is 1,502.

Delaware.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 9.—The complete vote in Delaware according to unofficial returns follows:

Wilson, 22,525; Hughes, 23,683.

United States Senator—Josiah O. Walcott, democrat, 21,979; H. A. Dupont, republican, 20,110.

Members of Congress—A. F. Polk, democrat, 21,262; T. W. Miller, republican, 21,715.

Washington.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 9.—President Wilson's plurality in Washington jumped above the 10,000 mark early today when returns were received from counties which had previously meagerly reported and was strongly for the president. With less than 500 precincts to be reported all widely scattered, President Wilson was leading Mr. Hughes by a margin of 10,748, with every indication that complete returns would send his plurality above 12,000.

Gov. Ernest Lister, democrat, apparently will defeat Henry McBride, republican, for governor by more than 10,000 votes.

Senator Miles Poindexter, republican, who was reelected, will have the largest plurality of any of the candidates on any ticket.

Utah.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Nov. 9.—Seventy-nine districts out of 101, Salt Lake county, gave Wilson 19,884; Hughes, 11,538; for senator, King, democrat, 18,974; Sutherland, republican, 12,415; for governor, Bamberger, democrat, 18,933; Morris, republican, 12,426.

Illinois.

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Republican pluralities in Illinois had climbed past the 185,000 mark today and seemed destined to go close to 200,000. The plurality of Frank O. Lowden, republican nominee for governor over Governor Dunne, democrat, appeared to be ranging around the 150,000 point. The entire state ticket seemed certain of registering large pluralities also, with the possible exception of L. L. Emmerson, the republican opponent of Secretary of State Lewis G. Stevenson, democrat.

DEMOCRATS STILL HOPE TO CONTROL COMING CONGRESS

Assured of Senate They Hold Lead In Lower House With 20 Districts Yet to Hear From.

FINAL OUTCOME IS CLOSE

Some Surprising Results Are Shown In Returns In Senatorial and Congressional Fights.

New York, Nov. 9.—Returns on the election for members of congress results up to 1 o'clock showed 212 democrats and 203 republicans elected with 16 districts not yet accounted for.

Seven of these 16 districts are democratic in the present congress, and nine are republican. Should each keep to its present political affiliation the count will stand:

Democrats, 219; republicans, 212; which would give the democrats a majority of three over the 212 republicans and four representatives of other parties in the House.

In the Senate four present democratic members, according to the latest indications, have been defeated. They are Senators Kern and Taggart, of Indiana; Martine, of New Jersey, and Chilton, of West Virginia. Three republican senators—Lippitt, of Rhode Island; Clark, of Wyoming, and Sutherland of Utah, also have lost their seats on the basis of the returns. The defeat of Senator Kern, of Indiana, by Harry S. New, former chairman of the republican national committee, takes the organization floor leader. Among democratic senators mentioned for the succession are Saulsbury, of Delaware; Martin, of Virginia; Walsh, of Montana, and Underwood, of Alabama.

JAPS WILL NOT SEEK TO RETAIN ISLANDS

Reported Tokio Will Not Insist on Holding Base Near U. S. Port.

Tokio, Nov. 9.—The Associated Press learns that Japan has agreed not to make a part of her peace conference demands the right to hold permanently the south sea islands wrested from Germany. Several of the islands which belong to the Caroline and Marrano groups lie not far from the American island of Guam, the American terminal of the Pacific cable. It is understood the United States has informally expressed a desire that these islands should not become the permanent property of the Japanese empire. Inasmuch as they were captured through the joint operations of the British and Japanese fleets, it is understood the United States first took up the question with Great Britain and a suggestion was made by Great Britain and the United States that Japan should not insist upon the permanent maintenance of these islands.

In view of Japan's promise to accede to the joint request, it is believed that Japan at the peace conference will seek compensation in some other direction, perhaps in the affirmation of her rights in the Chinese peninsula of Shantung, of which Kaiuchau is the great naval base.

The islands in question are now administered by the Japanese government.

New Mexico.

Hillsboro, N. M., Nov. 9.—Fourteen out of 16 precincts in Sierra county, New Mexico, give Wilson, 1,240; Hughes, 1,200.

Deming, N. M., Nov. 9.—Complete vote of Luna county gives: Wilson, 828; Hughes, 399.

The county gave Jones, democrat, a majority of 487 for the Senate, and Walton, democrat, a majority of 579 for congress.

Among the missing counties are Eddy and Roosevelt, normally heavily democratic. Great difficulty was experienced in securing returns. In the remote regions of the state ballot boxes were closed at midnight and no additional returns were available early today.

Santa Fe, N. M., Nov. 9.—Unofficial returns from 336 precincts of the 638 in New Mexico today showed Charles E. Hughes still maintaining a slight lead over President Wilson. These precincts gave Hughes, 14,794; Wilson, 14,536.

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov. 9.—Charles E. Hughes led President Wilson by 258 votes on the face of unofficial returns from slightly more than half of the 638 precincts in New Mexico. Returns from 336 precincts gave Hughes, 14,794; Wilson, 14,536. With this as a basis, leaders of neither party admitted the possibility of defeat.

A. A. Jones, democratic senatorial nominee, led Hubbell, republican, in 426 precincts, with 19,055 votes as compared with 18,489 for Hubbell. Democratic leaders said they expected President Wilson to lead Hughes in the final count. Hernandez, republican congressional candidate, led Walton, democrat, in 426 precincts by 890 votes.

Missing counties also include seven normally democratic counties, six normally republican and two in which majorities are small and variable. Several of them are remote and the outer portions of all of them are without telephone or telegraph facilities.

Missing counties include: Guadalupe, Lincoln, McKinley, Mora, Sandoval, San Juan, Sierra, Socorro, Torrence Union and Valencia. Luna and Santa Fe counties are incomplete.

Indiana.

Indianapolis, Ind. Nov. 9.—Charles E. Hughes' lead over President Wilson was slightly reduced by belated official returns received here shortly before noon today. With only 237 out of the 3,142 precincts in Indiana missing, the republican nominee had a margin of 8,487. The totals were: Hughes, 319,993; Wilson, 311,506.

The republican candidate for governor and United States senator still held leads over their opponents. For governor, 2,812 precincts give Goodrich, 311,535, and Adair, 296,362. Returns from 3,748 precincts for United States senator gave New, 304,853; Kern, 290,033; Watson, 303,106; Taggart, 289,824.

New Jersey.

Trenton, N. J., Nov. 9.—With 12 counties complete and 25 small districts missing in the eight remaining counties, Charles E. Hughes' presidential plurality today was 54,774 over President Wilson in the latter's own state. The vote for Hughes was 262,386, and for Wilson was 207,612.

Mercer county complete, where the president voted, gave Hughes a plurality of 3,639 out of 15,001 votes cast.

NO CHARGES THAT TITLE IS CLOUDED

Republicans Will File Contests In Close States, But Will Not Carry Fight Into Congress.

HOPE TO CHANGE RESULT

Hughes Backers Hinge Faith Upon Recheck Showing Discrepancies Favoring Their Candidate.

New York, Nov. 11.—That President Wilson's election will not be conceded without a recount in the closest states, was the opinion of the republican leaders early today after conferences lasting far into the night. Some definite course of action probably will be decided upon within a few hours. The states in which it was said recourse to judicial proceedings was likely were California, New Hampshire, New Mexico and North Dakota.

A conference of republican campaign managers has been called for noon today to consider the election situation and to decide definitely what action shall be taken in respect to the recount of the vote in the closest states. This was announced by George W Perkins, who added:

"Nothing is definitely settled yet."

Mr. Perkins was the first to arrive at the headquarters of the republican national committee. He was followed by John W. Weeks, chairman of the republican national campaign committee and the two had a preliminary conference.

If recount proceedings are instituted it was believed George W. Wickersham, attorney general of the United States under President Taft, would marshal the legal forces of the republicans. He consulted yesterday with Mr. Hughes and Chairman Willcox, of the national committee, at the nominee's hotel. No formal statement was forthcoming as to what was contemplated, but Mr. Willcox asserted a recount would be demanded, whenever the margin of democratic victory was so small that a comparatively few votes would turn the scales. He and his advisers took the position, they said, that there had been "no cloud" upon Mr. Wilson's title to the presidency.

Will Ask Recount.

Until President Wilson's victory was assured the democrats were preparing to demand a recount in the so called doubtful states. Alton B. Parker, democratic candidate for president in 1904, conferred with National Chairman Vance C. McCormick, as did several other prominent democratic lawyers. Both parties already have called for a recount in New Hampshire, where less than 200 votes seem likely to determine the results. Charges of attempts to tamper with the ballot boxes in North Dakota have been made in that state and have been laid before the federal district attorney and before the United States marshal. Agents of the department of justice have been mobilized at points in other states.

No Charge of Fraud.

The republicans contended, it was said that since the democrats claimed California by a margin of 3,000 out of nearly 1,000,000 votes cast it was apparent slight errors in districts here and there might change the outcome. The democrats maintained on the other hand that no charges of fraud had been made by State Chairman Rowell, of the republicans, in conceding the state to Mr. Wilson, and if there had been any basis for him, he undoubtedly would have so informed the national headquarters of the party in this city. In a statement to the Associated Press at San Francisco, the only contention Mr. Rowell made of even a partial victory for Mr. Hughes was that the electoral vote of that state might be split on the official count as it was in 1912, when two votes went to Wilson and 11 to Roosevelt.

Won't Go To Congress.

Both sides conceded that no matter what action might be taken in regard to a recount, there was little likelihood of a contest being carried to the House of Representatives, as it was after the Hayes-Tilden election in 1876. Legislation enacted in 1887, it was said, made the states sovereign in pronouncing judgment in a recount of the presidential vote.

In three states there were prospects of contests over one elector in each instance. The eligibility of a democratic elector in Texas has been questioned because he is said to be an office holder and the federal laws prohibit a person holding office from serving as an elector.

One of the democratic electors died just before election day, and the party managers attached pasters to the ballots, substituting another name for his.

The legality of this procedure has been questioned by the republicans. A somewhat similar case has arisen in West Virginia, where one of the republican electors refused to run, and the republicans resorted to pasters bearing another name in place of his.

21,000 Citizens Taken From Antwerp Where State of Panic Prevails.

London, Nov. 11.—The Echo Belge as quoted by Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent, says that according to the latest news the Germans have transported 21,000 citizens of Antwerp to Germany.

A great panic prevails in Antwerp and in the surrounding country, adds the newspaper, which reports also that three men who tried to cross the Dutch frontier were killed by a shock from an electric wire barrier on the border.

DEMOCRAT GOVERNOR ELECTED IN MISSOURI

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 10.—Returns from 3,239 out of 3,459 precincts in Missouri give: Gardner, democrat, for governor, 363,110; Lamm, republican, 359,581; a plurality for Gardner of 3,529.

No returns from four counties are included in these returns.

THANKSGIVING

From the time of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, Americans have been accustomed to set aside one day in the year wherein to review the past year and take stock of the dealings of Providence with us as a people.

What was at first the spontaneous expression of grateful hearts soon became a custom, and as the years sped this custom became fixed, until today it assumes the sacredness of a permanent institution.

This season is again with us. The fruits of the broad acres of our fair domain have been garnered in. The warehouse and granaries are fairly bursting with their contents and prosperitey sets a guest at almost every fireside.

Our president and governors of the various states have designated the day on which the people shall express to a bountiful Creator their gratitude for these blessings.

And to the many positive and material blessings which have been ours, there is added on this occasion the especial blessing that we as a people have escaped the madness that has fallen as a blight upon our neighbors and kinsman across the waters. The magnitude of that blessing we cannot at this time begin to estimate.

But while we have these palpable blessings for which to be thankful, we have other things for which to express our gratitude, and these antedate and underlie our present happiness and prosperity, our peace and safety. We have to be thankful that back in the days when our nation was being born, a land of heroes, than whom the world has never produced greater, had impressed upon their hearts to lay the foundations of that nation upon the only possible true and lasting base—the Fatherhood of an omnipotent God and the brotherhood of man.

And we have to be thankful that all down the years since that time there have been heroic souls—worthy sons of noble sires—who have never ceased to call to us with clarion voice to watch and preserve the old landmarks, to plant our feet upon the everlasting rock and stand firm.

And over and above all else, we have to be thankful that a merciful God has so moulded the hearts and lives of the people of this nation that we are enabled to look above and beyond self and see for ourselves the great principles of eternal truth and justice that must ultimately rule the whole earth; that we are enabled to grasp the truth that an injury to ourselves, and that a kindness to our fellows casts down a benediction upon our heads.

So that the one supreme blessing for which we should at this season return thanks, is the fact that our God has enabled us as a people to know and do the RIGHT.

We have much to be thankful for in this year 1916, and let our prayer be, that it may ever be thus with this people.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

What are you doing for this town?

What are you doing to justify your citizenship in this town?

You can not sit down, criticise, let others do the work that makes a town or community, and still call yourself a good citizen

The good citizen never thinks only of self. He must necessarily think of self or he would not survive, but good citizenship requires more than that—much more.

It requires that you keep in mind that there are others who have rights and are entitled to have those rights respected by others—by you. On the same basis you are entitled to have your rights equally respected by them.

That is good citizenship—— partially.

In addition, the good citizen remembers that his town is entitled to his best efforts in its behalf, to the end that the interests of the community may be advanced by all legitimate means.

This means, too, that in advancing the interests you are advancing your own, which is the ultimate aim of the human race.

What, then, are you doing to constitute yourself a good citizen?

WRITER OF FATHER BALLAD IS DEAD

Fred Helf Told of Everybody Working but My Old Man.

New York—J. Fred Helf, popular song writer is dead.

For almost a quarter of a century Helf's songs—written in ballad form, were sung the country over "Someone Thinks of Someone," "When the Whip-poor-will Sings, Marguerite," "How Would You Like to Be the Ice Man?" "In the House of Too Much Trouble" and "The Barber Shop Chord" enjoyed a popularity seldom equaled.

Another Helf song, "Everybody Works but Father," was translated into many languages and sung both in Europe and America. As a result "Father" was postcarded, musical comedied, statuetted and as another result Mr. Helf's bank balance was swelled to generous proportions, and "father" songs of every conceivable description flooded the music stalls.

The chorus of the song occasionall still finds its way into vaudeville programs:

Everybody works but father,
He sits around all day,
His feet in front of the fire,
Smoking his pipe of clay;
Mother takes in washing,
So does sister Ann,
Everybody works at our house
But my old man.

Helf's songs ran the range from humor to pathos. "When You Know You're Not Forgotten by the Girl You Can't Forget" made a wholly different appeal from that of "Everybody Works but Father," yet its success was almost as great. This is the chorus:

When you know you're not forgotten
By the girl you can't forget;
When you find the one you're thinking of
Is dreaming of you yet,
Around your heart a feeling stealing
Comes to drive away regret,
When you know you're not forgotten
By the girl you can't forget.

Mr. Helf died at Liberty, N. Y. following an operation. He was born in Maysville, Ky., 44 years ago

Some music is given out by the choir but the drummer dispenses it by the pound.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; have a pasting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or rheumatism a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

EDITOR SAYS GOOD-BYE

Manford Evans turned over the Thompson Courier to his successor, Thos. Walpole, the first of the month and in his "good-bye" has some good things to say, from which we clip the following: "As editor of the Courier during the past four years we know we have not pleased everybody. The editor who can please everybody does not live; and we have been alive every minute during these four years. We have played no favorites. The man driving a Ford has looked just as good to us as the man driving a seventeen cylinder Whanytangdoodle. And the fellow with no car at all has our everlasting admiration for a carless editor loves company. We have received a number of first handed knocks; and at that we haven't suffered any more indignities at the hands of the gentle public than the average councilman or town marshall which amounts to this, that every avocation has its promogation. Personally we are not perfect. Perfect people don't edit newspapers run banks, sell merchandise, till the soil serve on town councils, manage elevators, and vote the republican and democratic tickets. No sir; they play harps on the Golden Shore."

MISSING LINK FROM JAVA REDUCES AGE OF MANKIND

Bones of First Man Show He Was Four and One Half Feet Tall and Walked Erect

The discovery of the bones of the first man, or "missing link," on the island of Java has convinced scientists that the human race is 25,000 years younger than had been presumed. It is now believed that the human race did not exist more than 500,000 years ago, altho there ancient forerunners of the present race are more to be classed as ape men, or "missing links" than as human beings. But that they possessed the power of thinking stood erect and used the hands for grasping and touching is the conclusion of scientists who have devoted their lives to researches into the antiquity of man.

The discovery of the first man, or "missing link" on the island of Java, is due to the work of Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History, and holder of the National Institute of Social Sciences' gold medal for paleontological research.

The name of the Java man in the language of science is Pithecanthropus erectus. He was four feet and a half tall, and he walked erect, using his hands as do his twentieth century descendants, if less expertly. All that remains of Pithecanthropus today is a badly corroded bone or two, from which comparative anatomists have reconstructed his appearance in life. There is a thigh bone, whose shape shows the Java man stood upright. It is a matter of deduction that he had free use of his hands and arms.

One of the most perplexing problems Professor Osborn was called on to deal with was whether an ape, which existed in Europe during the Miocene and Pliocene eras, was the true ape, the missing link or primitive man. The only evidence supporting the theory that he was of the nature of man was some flints found in the lower Pliocene deposits of the basin of Paris, France, which might have been chipped by natural forces. These flints were denominated eoliths to distinguish them from paleoliths.

Professor Osborn concedes that the eoliths may be either natural or artificial. He admits that it is possible that the ancestors of early man possessed grasping power of the hand; and that the Miocene and Pliocene primates of Europe, Dryopithecus, might be an eolith maker.

The testimony is too vague however, in his opinion, to admit Dryopitheces into the human family. The extinction of the European ape results in theorizing the appearance of man on the earth 25,000 years ahead of previous estimates.

It was adversity which brought mankind into being, the investigator holds. Four great glacial periods and three interglacial periods have succeeded one another in the northern latitudes. The terrible cold compelled the ancestors of man to think up ways of protecting themselves against it, and thinking developed their brain capacity. At the same time many migrated to warmer latitudes.

Pithecanthropus the dawn man was lord of the earth for 25,000 years of the first glacial era. Then the ice cap at the pole swung the earth from its axis, rendering his habitat incapable of supporting life, and Pithecanthropus disappeared.

He was succeeded 250,000 years later by a superior physical being, the Heidelberg man, who was eight feet tall, with huge shell and cruel teeth. He matched all his strength and cunning to cope with the monsters which roamed the European wilderness with him—the bears, hippopotami and rhinoceros much larger than any of today. The warm inter-glacial period in which the Heidelberg man held the center of the stage lasted perhaps 200,000 years.

Various types of humanity developed just before and after the last glacial period, which began only 25,000 years ago. Among them were the Neanderthal man, the Cro-Magon man and the Neolithic man, in whose various prehistoric types.

We are now in the receding post glacial era, the investigator declares, which for all anybody knows may be succeeded by another glacial period when animal life will be impossible. But in asmuch as such an eventuality is from 50,000 to 150,000 years off there is no occasion for alarm.

BLOWS NOISY SIREN WHISTLE

It usually surprises residents of North America to learn how large and important a city is Beunos Aires, and it is equally surprising to learn that one of the finest newspaper equipments on either American continent is that of La Presna, a daily paper published in that city.

On the office building of La Presna has been installed a loud and penetrating siren whistle. Whenever there is very important news La Presna puts out an enormous bulletin and then blows the siren.

Now the city officials of Bunecos aires have decided that the blowing of this penetrating whistle constitutes a public nuisance, and every time it is sounded La Presna's owners go to court and pay a fine of $500.

Naturally they do not use the siren except when the news that is to be announced is really important, but when they do have important information to communicate to the public they do not let the fact that it is going to cost them $500 interfere with their raucous tootings.

HEALTH FIRST

BY HELEN S. HARTLEY

IOWA ASSOCIATION FOR THE PREVENTION OF TUBERCULOSIS

DOES THE HIGH COST OF LIVING WORRY YOU

Good health costs little "to have and to keep," but it costs a lot "to lose and regain." For a long time we have been thinking about the high cost of living and including the cost of sickness. Both the cost of living and the cost of sickness will be considerably reduced when we pay more attention to keeping good health. Let us not confuse the two.

Sickness is tremendously costly. It costs the loss of time and energy, money, and often position. A recent investigation made by relief organizations showed that 75 out of every 100 "relief cases" came to poverty because of sickness, and most of our so-called health institutions have been for the purpose of relieving sickness.

Health costs, first of all, attention to yourself be yourself. You do not need money for that, nor does it cost anything to keep the windows open while you work and while you sleep. If this is impossible now, it will cost much less to move to a place where you can have them open, than to stay where you are and be less able to do good work. There is no monef price set upon your breathing exercises, standing and sitting erect, in wearing loose clothing, and cleansing your body. There is a heavy penalty attached to the neglect of evacuating the bowels daily and no one escapes the penalty, for although the connection isn't always apparent, nor the results immediate, they are sure to come.

It costs precious little to sit down calmly to three good meals a day, to chew your food well, and be pleasant while you do it. Anger and worry cause indigestion, and indigestion costs are high. Often there is no especial connection between high price and high nutritive value in foods. This is illustrated by the following, which are listed cheapest first, dearest last: glucose, cornmeal, wheat-flour, oatmeal, sugar, salt pork, rice, olemargarine, beans, peas, potatoes, butter, milk, cheese, beef stew, ham, mutton chops, beef, oysters.

It also takes money to take ordinary precaution against impure foods. For instance, the number of tuberculous cows is increasing in those states where the laws do not protect the people from infection of this kind (Iowa is one of them). Buy your meat from dealers selling only government inspected meats. Learn whether your milk comes from cows whose owners have the tested regularly. Ascertain whether the milk is handled in a sanitary manner by the dealer.

THE CAUSE OF THUMPS IN PIGS

[illegible] Dawson, national authority on swine and big Poland China breeders says of Thumps: "This is a very common ailment of pigs. The causes of the disease are lack of exercise and irritation to the stomach and intestines, resulting from irritating feed, overeating; and changes in the diet. This irritation to the nerves of the digestive tract produces sensations irritation to the nerves that go to the diaphragm and jerky contractions of this muscle occur. Young pigs lose flesh rapidly, older pigs become unthrifty and stunted." Treatment for young pigs consists in setting the mother a proper diet; and plenty of exercise. Growing pigs should be fed a ration that meets the needs of the system.

Start Standard Hog Regulator for Thumps—Give drinking water, but no feed for twenty to four hours. This empties the stomach and bowels and is beneficial. Then give one to two tablespoonsfuls Standard Hog Regulator in a mill feed or other slop for two feeds, one in the morning and one in the evening. Then feed half this amount twice a day in a light feed until relief is secured. The first two doses will act as a physic and the regular use after supplies the sodas and saltines, as well as the bitter tonics needed.

CHAPTER VI—(Continued) 6

Now, the janitor's wife, who occupied an apartment somewhat overcrowded, had surreptitiously borrowed the use of this closet the week before, in order to hang therein her Sunday gowns, whose front breadth was covered with grease spots, thickly overlaid with French chalk. The French chalk had done its work and removed the grease spots, and now lay thickly on the floor of the closet, but the imprisoned bridegroom did not know that, and he sat down quite naturally to rest from his unusual exertion and to reflect on what could be done next. The immediate present passed rapidly in review.

He could not afford more than 10 minutes to get out of that hole. He ought to be on the way to the church at once. There was no knowing what nonsense Celia might get into her head if he delayed. He had known her since her childhood, and she had always scorned him. The hold he had upon her now was like a rope of sand, but only he knew that. If he could but knock that old door down! If he only hadn't hung up his coat in the closet! If the man who built the house only hadn't put such a fool catch on the door! When he got out he would take time to chop it off! If only he had a little more room, and a little more air! It was stifling! Great beads of perspiration went rolling down his hot forehead, and his wet collar made a cool band about his neck. He wondered if he had another clean collar of that particular style with him. If he only could get out of this accursed place! Where were all the people? Why was everything so still? Would they never come and let him out?

He reflected that he had told the janitor he would occupy the room with his baggage for two or three weeks perhaps, but he expected to go away on a trip this very evening. The janitor would not think it strange if he did not appear. How would it be to stay here and die? Horrible thought!

He jumped up from the floor and began his howlings and gyrations once more, but soon desisted, and sat down to be entertained by a panorama of his past life, which is always unpleasantly in evidence at such times. Fine and clear in the darkness of the closet stood out the nicely laid scheme of deviltry by which he had contrived to be at last within reach of a coveted fortune.

Occasionally would come the frantic thought that just through this little mishap of a foolish clothespress catch he might even yet lose it. The fraud and trickery by which he had an heiress in his power did not trouble him so much as the thought of losing her—at least of losing the fortune. He must have that fortune, for he was deep in debt, and—but then he would refuse to think, and get up to batter at his prison door again.

Four hours his prison walls enclosed him, with inky blackness all around save for a faint glimmer of light, which marked the well fitted base of the door as the night outside drew on. He had lighted the gas when he began dressing, for the room had already been filled with shadows, and now it began to seem as if that speck of flickering gas light was the only thing that saved him from losing his mind.

Somewhere from out of the dim shadows a face evolved itself and gazed at him, a haggard face with piercing hollow eyes and despair written upon it. It reproached him with a sin he thought long forgotten. He shrank back in horror, and the cold perspiration stood out upon his forehead, for the eyes were the eyes of the man whose name he had forged upon a note involving trust money 15 years before, and the man, a quiet, kindly, unsuspecting creature had suffered the penalty in a prison cell until his death some five years ago.

Sometimes at night in the first years after his crime, that face had haunted him, appearing at odd intervals when he was plotting some particularly shady means of adding to his income, until he had resolved to turn over a new leaf, and actually gave up one or two schemes as being too unscrupulous to be indulged in, thus acquiring a comforting feeling of being virtuous. But it was long since the face had come. He had settled it in his mind that the forgery was merely a patch of wild oats which he had sown in his youth, something to be regretted, but not too severely blamed for, and thus forgiving himself he had grown to feel that it was more the world's fault for not giving what he wanted than his own for putting a harmless old man in prison. Of the shame that had killed the old man he knew nothing nor could have understood. The actual punishment itself was all that appealed to him. He was ever one that had to be taught with the lash, and then only kept straight while it was in sight.

But the face was very near and vivid here in the thick darkness. It was like a cell, this closet, bare, cold, black. The eyes in the gloom seemed to pierce him with the thought: "This is what you made me suffer. It is your turn now. It is your turn now!" Nearer and nearer they came looking into his own, until they saw down into his very soul, his little sinful soul, and drew back appalled at the littleness and meanness of what they saw.

Then for the first time in his whole selfish life George Hayne knew shame, for the eyes read forth to him all that they had seen, and how it looked to them, and beside the tale they told the eyes were clean of sin and almost glad in spite of suffering wrongfully.

Closer and thicker grew the air of the small closet; fiercer grew the rage and shame and horror of the man incarcerated.

Now, from out the shadows there looked other eyes, eyes that had never haunted him before; eyes of victims to whom he had never cast a half a thought. Eyes of men and women he had robbed by his artful, gentlemanly craft; eyes of innocent girls whose wrecked lives had contributed to his selfish scheme of living; even the great reproachful eyes of little children who had looked to him for pity and found none. Last, above them all were the eyes of the lovely girl he was to have married.

He had always loved Celia Hathaway more than he could have loved anyone or anything else besides himself, and it had eaten into his very being that he never could make her bow to him, not even by torture could he bring her to her knees. Stung by the years of her scorn he had stooped lower and lower in his methods of dealing with her until he had come at last to employ the tools of slow torture to her soul that he might bring low her pride and put her fortune and her scornful self within his power. The strength with which she had withheld him until the time of her surrender had turned his selfish love into a hate with contemplations of revenge.

But now her eyes glowed scornfully, wreathed round with bridal white, and seemed to taunt him with his foolish defeat at this the last minute before the final triumph.

Undoubtedly the brandy he had taken had gone to his head. Was he going mad that he could not get away from all these terrible eyes?

He felt sure he was dying when at last the janitor came up to the fourth floor on his round of inspection, noticed the light flaring from the transom over the door occupied by the stranger, who had said he was going to leave on a trip almost immediately, and went in to investigate. The eyes vanished at his step. The man in the closet lost no time in making his presence known, and the janitor, cautiously, and with great deliberation, made careful investigation of the cause and reason for the disturbance, and finally let him out, after having received promise of reward, which never materialized.

The stranger flew to the telephone in frantic haste, called up the house of his affianced bride, shouting wildly at the operator for all undue delays, and, when finally he succeeded in getting some one to the 'phone, it was only to be told that neither Mrs. Hathaway nor her son were there. Were they at the church? "Oh, no," the servant answered, "they came back from the church long ago. There is a wedding in the house and a great many people. They are making so much noise I can't hear. Speak louder, please!"

He shouted and raved at the servant, asking futile questions and demanding information, but the louder he raved the less the servant understood and finally he hung up the receiver and dashed about the room like an insane creature, tearing off his wilted collar, grabbing at another, jerking on his fine coat, searching vainly for his cuffs, snatching his hat and overcoat, and making off down the stairs, breathlessly, regardless of the demand of the janitor for the fee of freedom he had been promised.

Out in the street he rushed hither and thither blindly in search of some conveyance, found a taxicab at last, and, plunging in, ordered it to go at once to the Hathaway address.

Arrived there, he presented an enlivening spectacle to the guests, who were still making merry. His trousers were covered with French chalk, his collar had slipped from its confining button in front and curved gracefully about one fat cheek, his high hat was a crush, indeed, having been rammed down to his head in his excitement. He talked so fast and so loud that they thought he was crazy and tried to put him out, but he shook his fist angrily in the face of the footman and demanded to know where Miss Hathaway was. When they told him she was married and gone, he turned livid with wrath and told them that that was impossible, as he was the bridegroom.

By this time the guests had gathered in curious groups in the hall and on the stairs, listening, and when he claimed to be the bridegroom they shouted with laughter, thinking this must be some practical joke or else that the man was insane. But one older gentleman, a friend of the family, stepped up to the excited visitor and said in a quieting voice:

"My friend, you have made a mistake! Miss Hathaway has this evening been married to Mr. George Hayne, just arrived from abroad, and they are at this moment on their way to take the train. You have come to late to see her, or else you have the wrong address and are speaking of some other Miss Hathaway. That is very likely the explanation."

George looked around on the company with helpless rage, then rushed to his taxicab and gave the order for the station.

Arriving at the station, he saw it was within half a minute of the departure of the Chicago train, and none knew better than he what time that train had been going to depart. Had he not given minute directions regarding the arrangements to his future brother-in-law? What did it all mean anyway? Had Celia managed somehow to carry out the wedding without him to hide her mortification at his nonappearance? Or had she run away? He was too excited to use his reason. He could merely urge his heavy bulk onward toward the fast fleeing train; and dashed up the platform, overcoat streaming from his arm, coat tails flying, hat crushed down upon his head, his fat, bechalked legs rumbling heavily after him. He passed Jefferson and his mother; watching tearfully, lingeringly, the retreating train. Jefferson laughed at the funny spectacle, but the mother did not notice and only said absently: "I think he'll be good to her, don't you, Jeff? He has nice eyes. I don't remember that his eyes used to seem so pleasant, and so—deferential." Then they turned to go back to their car, and the train moved faster and faster out of the station. It would presently rush away out into the night, leaving the two pursuers to face each other, baffled.

Both realized this at the same instant and the short, thick set man with sudden decision turned again and plunging along with the train caught at the rail and swung himself with dangerous precipitation to the last platform of the last car with a half frightened triumph. Looking back he saw the other man with a frantic effort sprint forward, trying to do the same thing, and failing in the attempt, sprawl flat on the platform, to the intense amusement of a couple of trainmen standing near.

George Hayne, having thus come to a full stop in his headlong career, lay prostrate for a moment, stunned and shaken; then gathered himself up slowly and stood gazing after the departing train. After all, if he had caught it what could he have done? It was incredible that Celia could have got herself married and gone on her wedding trip without him. If she had eloped with some one else and they were on that train what would he have done? Kill the bridegroom and force the bride to return with him and be married over again? Yes, but that might have been a trifle awkward after all, and he had enough awkward situations to his account already. Besides, it wasn't in the least likely that Celia was married yet. These people at the house had been fooled somehow, and she had run away. Perhaps her mother and brother were gone with her. The same threats that had made her bend to him once should follow her wherever she had gone. She would marry him yet and pay for this folly a hundred fold. He shook a shaking hand of execration toward the train which by this time was vanishing into the dark opening at the end of the station, where signal lights like red berries festooned themselves in an arch against the blackness, and the lights of the last car paled and vanished like a forgotten dream.

Then he turned and hobbled slowly back to the gates regardless of the merriment he was arousing in the genial trainmen; for he was spent and bruised, and his appearance was anything but dignified. No member of the wedding company had they seen him at this juncture would have recognized in him any resemblance to the handsome gentleman who had played his part in the wedding ceremony. No one would have thought it possible that he could be Celia Hathaway's bridegroom.

Slowly back to the gate he crept, haggard, dishevelled, crestfallen, his hair in its several isolated locks downfallen over his forehead, his collar wilted, his clothes smeared with chalk and dust, his overcoat dragging forlornly behind him. He was trying to decide what to do next, and realizing the torment of a perpetual thirst, when a hand was laid suddenly upon him and a voice that showhow had a familiar twang, said: "You will come with me, sir."

He looked up and there before him in the flesh were the eyes of the man who had haunted him for years, the very eyes grown younger, and filled with more than reproach. They were piercing him with more than reproach. They were piercing him with the keenness of retribution. They said, as plainly as those eyes in the closet had spoken but a brief hour before: "Your time is over. My time has come. You have sinned. You shall suffer. Come now and meet your reward."

He started back in horror. His hands trembled and his brain reeled. He wished for another cocktail to help him to meet this most extraordinary emergency. Surely, something had happened to his nerves that he was seeing these eyes in reality, and hearing the voice, that old man's voice made young, bidding him come with him. It could not be, of course. He was unnerved with all he had been through. The man had mistaken him for some one—or perhaps it was not a man after all. He glanced quickly around to see if others saw him, and at once became aware that a crowd was collecting about them.

The man with the strange eyes and the familiar voice was dressed in plain clothes, but he seemed to have full assurance that he was a real live man and had a right to dictate. George Hayne could not shake away his grasp. There was a determination about it that struck terror to his soul, and he had a weak desire to scream and hide his eyes. Could he be coming down with delirium tremens? That brandy must have been unusually strong to have lasted so long in its effects. Then he made a weak effort to speak, but his voice sounded small and frightened. The eyes took his assurance from him.

"Who are you?" he asked, and meant to add, "What right have you to dictate to me?" but the words died away in his throat, for the plainclothes man had opened his coat and disclosed a badge that shone with a sinister light straight into his eyes.

"I am Norman Brand," answered the voice, "and I want you for what you did to my father. It is time you paid your debt. You were the cause of his humiliation and death. I have been watching for you for years. I saw the notice of your wedding in the paper and was tracking you. It was for this I entered the service. Come with me."

With a cry of horror George Haynes wrenched away from his captor and turned to flee, but instantly three revolvers were levelled at him, and he found that two policemen in brass buttons were stationed behind him, and the crowd closed in about him. Wherever he turned it was to look into the barrel of a gun, and there was no escape in any direction.

They led him away to the patrol wagon, the erstwhile bridegroom, and in place of the immaculate linen he had searched so frantically for in his apartment they put upon his wrists cuffs of iron. They put him in a cell and left him with eyes of the old man for company and the haunting likeness of his son's voice filling him with frenzy. The unquenchable thirst came upon him and he begged for brandy and soda, but none came to slake his thirst, for he had crossed the great gulf and justice at last had him in her grip.

CHAPTER VII.

Meanwhile the man on the steps of the last car of the Chicago Limited was having his doubts about whether he ought to have boarded that train. He realized that the fat traveller who was hurling himself after the train had stirred in him a sudden impulse which had been only half formed before and he had obeyed it. Perhaps he was following a wrong scent and would lose the reward which he knew was his if he brought the thief of the code-writing, dead or alive, to his employer. He was half inclined to jump off again now before it was too late; but looking down he saw they were already speeding over a network of tracks, and trains were flying by in every direction. By the time they were out of this the speed would be too great for him to attempt a jump. It was even now risky, and he was heavy for athletics. He must do it at once if he did it at all.

He looked ahead tentatively to see if the track on which he must jump was clear, and the great eye of an engine stabbed him in the face, as it bore down upon him. The next instant it swept by, its hot breath fanning his cheek, and he drew back shuddering involuntarily. It was of no use. He could not jump here. Perhaps they would slow up or stop, and anyway, should he jump or stay on board?

He sat down on the upper step the better to get the situation in hand. Perhaps in a minute more the way would be clearer to jump off if he decided not to go on. Thus he vacillated. It was rather unlike him not to know his own mind.

It seemed as if there must be something here to follow, and yet, perhaps he was mistaken. He had been the first man of the company at the front door after Mr. Holman turned the paper over, and they all had noticed the absence of the red mark. It has been simultaneous with the clicking of the door-latch and he had covered the ground from his seat to the door sooner than anyone else. He could swear he had seen the man get into the cab that stood almost in front of the house. He had lost no time in getting into his own car which was detailed for such an emergency, and in signalling the officer on a motor cycle who was also ready for a quick call. The carriage had barely turned the corner when they followed, there was no other of the kind in sight either way but that, and he had followed it closely. I must have been the right carriage. And yet, when the man got out at the church he was changed, much changed in appearance, so that he had looked twice into the empty carriage to make sure that the man for whom he searched was not still in there hiding. Then he had followed him into the church and seen him married; stood close at hand when he put his bride into a big car, and he had followed the car to the house where the reception was held, even mingling with the guests and watching until the bridal couple left for the train. He had stood in the ally in the shadow, the only one of the guests who had found how the bride was really going away, and again he had followed to the station.

He had walked close enough to the bridegroom in the station to be almost sure that mustache and those heavy eyebrows were false; and yet he could not make it out. How could it be possible that a man who was going to be married in a great church full of fashionable people would so dare to flirt with chance as to accept an invitation to a dinner where he might not be able to get away for hours? What would have happened if he had not got there in time? Was it in the least possible that these two men could be identical? Everything but the likeness and the fact that he had followed the man so closely pointed out the impossibility.

The thick-set man was accustomed to trust his inner impressions thoroughly, and in this case his inner impression was that he must watch this peculiar bridegroom and be sure he was not the right man before he forever got away from him—and yet—and yet, he might be missing the right man by doing it. However, he had come so far, had risked a good deal already in following and in throwing himself on that fast moving train. He would stay a little longer and find out for sure. He would try and get a seat where he could watch him and in an hour he ought to be able to tell if he were really the man who had stolen the code writing. If he could avoid the conductor for a time he would simply profess to have taken the wrong train by mistake and maybe could get put off somewhere near home, in case he discovered that he was barking up the wrong tree. He would stick to the train for a little yet, inasmuch as there seemed no safe way of getting off at present.

Having decided so much, he gave one last glance toward the twinkling lights of the city hurrying past, and getting up sauntered into the train, keeping a weather eye out for the conductor. He meant to burn no bridges behind him. He was well provided with money for any kind of a trip and mileage books and passes. He knew where to send a telegram that would bring him instant assistance in case of need, and even now he knew the officer on the motorcycle had reported to his employer that he had boarded this train. There was really no immediate need for him to worry. It was big game he was after and one must take some risks in a case of that sort. Thus he entered the sleeper to make good the impression of his inner senses.

Gordon had never held anything so precious, so sweet and beautiful and frail looking, in his arms. He had a feeling that he ought to lay her down, yet there was a longing to draw her closer to himself and shield her from everything that could trouble her.

But she was not his—only a precious trust to be guarded and cared for as vigilantly as the message he carried hidden about his neck, she belonged to another, somewhere, and was a sacred trust until circumstances made it possible for him to return her to her rightful husband. Just what all this might mean to himself, to the woman in his arms, and to the man whom she was to have married, Gordon had not as yet had time to think. It was as if he had been watching a moving picture and suddenly a lot of circumstances had fallen in a heap and become all jumbled up together, the result of his own rash but unsuspecting steps, the way whole families have in moving pictures of falling through a skyscraper from floor to floor carrying furniture and inhabitants with them as they descend.

He had not as yet been able to disentangle himself from the debris and find out what had been his fault and what he ought to do about it.

He laid her gently on the couch of the drawing room and opened the little door of the private dressing room. There would be cold water in there.

He knew very little about caring for sick people—he had always been well and strong himself—but cold water was what they used for people who had fainted, he was sure. He would not call in any one to help, unless it was absolutely necessary. He pulled the door of the stateroom shut and went after the water. As he passed the mirror, he started at the curious vision of himself. One false eyebrow had come loose and was hanging over his eye, and his goatee was crooked. Had it been so all the time? He snatched the eyebrow off, and then the other, but the mustache and goatee were more tightly affixed and it was very painful to remove them. He glanced back, and the white, limp look of the girl on the couch frightened him. What was he about, to stop over his appearance when she might be dying, and as for pain—he tore the false hair roughly from him, and, stuffing it into his pocket, filled a glass with water and went back to the couch. His chin and upper lip smarted, but he did not notice it, nor know that the mark of the plaster was all about his face. He only knew that she lay there apparently lifeless before him, and he must bring the soul back into those dear eyes. It was strange, wonderful, how his feeling had grown for the girl whom he had never seen till three hours before.

He held the glass to her lips and tried to make her drink, then poured water on his handkerchief and awkwardly bathed her forehead. Some hairpins slipped loose and a great wealth of golden brown hair fell across his knees as he half knelt beside her. One little hand drooped over the side of the couch and touched his. He started! It seemed so cold and lifeless.

He blamed himself that he had no remedies in his suit case. Why had he never thought to carry something—a simple restorative? Other people might need it though he did not. No man ought to travel without something for the saving of life in an emergency. He might have needed it himself even, in case of a railroad accident or something.

He slipped his arm tenderly under her head and tried to raise it so that she could drink, but the white lips did not move nor attempt to swallow.

Then a panic seized him. Suppose she was dying! Not until later, when he had quiet and opportunity for thought, did it occur to him what a terrible responsibility he had dared to take upon himself in letting her people leave her with him; what a fearful position he would have been in if she had really died. At the moment his whole thought was one of anguish at the idea of losing her; anxiety to save her precious life, and not for himself.

Forgetting his own need of quiet and obscurity, he laid her gently back upon the couch again, and rushed from the stateroom out into the aisle of the sleeper. The conductor was just making his rounds and he hurried to him with a white face.

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The contests comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and the sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, excellent social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

TOO KEEN ON THEIR SPORT

Anglers Would Have Done Better to Have Read the Other Side of the Notice Board.

The disciples of Izaak Walton had found a perfect stream for the exercise of their art, and they settled themselves for a day's fishing, underterred by a notice board. The board, which had been painted by an amateur, read:

"Notiss. These grounds is privet, and yer carn't fish 'ere. These fish ain't the kind to be tempted by worms, and there—"

Here space ran out, and the injunction was left uncompleted. For two hours the anglers sat by the stream, tempting the trout, not with worms, but with the very latest and most expensive bait."

But nothing happened. Then suddenly appeared the owner of the grounds and the author of the notice board.

"Hi, you two! 'Ave yer read that board?"

"Well, yes, we did. But — er — we thought you wouldn't mind, and we couldn't find your house, or we would have—"

"Oh, it don't matter! I on'y thought, seein' yer afishin' there, that you 'adn't read both sides of the board. If you 'ave, of course, go on amusing yourselves!"

A hasty glance at the other side of the board showed that it continued the exhortation begun on the front, as follows:

"—ain't no fish."—London Answers.

WHERE DEATH LURKS ALWAYS

Bullets Sing Without Ceasing, Birds Sometimes, in "No Man's Land" on Battle Front.

But it is a wonderful thing, this strip we call No Man's Land, running from the North sea to Switzerland, 500 miles. All the way along the line day and night, without a moment's cessation, through all these long months, men's eyes have been glaring across that forsaken strip, and lead has been flying to and fro over it. To show yourself means death. And I have heard a lark trilling over it in the early morning as sweetly as any bird ever sung over an English meadow. A lane of death 500 miles long, strewn from end to end with the remains of soldiers. And to either side of it all through those 500 miles a warren of trenches, dugouts, saps, tunnels, underground passages, inhabited, not by rabbits, but by millions of rats, it is true, and millions of living, busy men, with countless billions of rounds of death-dealing ammunition, and a complex organization, closely ordered and complete as the organization of any city in England.—From a British Officer's Letter in the Forum.

Too Great a Change.

"How did you enjoy those two weeks on your farm in the country?"

"Not as well as I expected. I suffered from a lack of my accustomed exercise."

NEW FRENCH METHODS SAVE MANY SOLDIERS

Mathematical Accuracy Developed Against Usual Obstacles By Experience

By Capt. Philippe Millet in London Observer

Paris Special Much has been written already about the new methods of the French army. I do not think, however, that the most remarkable feature of the present advance has been sufficiently noticed. In addition to [illegible] in men.

There is no mystery about it, as the figures are now more or less official. Since July 1 the French has not only been pushing on both banks of the Somme, on a front extending from the right of the British army to the south of Chilly, but they have had to fight around Verdun in order to repulse the last German attacks and to regain some ground. Their military effort is, therefore, never been greater since the days of the Marne. In spite of that the monthly losses are now less considerable than during the early months of the battle of Verdun. Moreover the average casualties of the French army are at present less than half what they were last year.

Such an encouraging result is due to the mere fact that the output in heavy guns and in ammunition has steadily increased. It is equally due to a quite recent improvement in the method of preparing and leading an attack. The Germans have been taught by a bitter experience all the details of the new French tactics; there is no harm in explaining the essential principles of these tactics to the public.

Roughly speaking the whole secret consists in establishing a narrow and almost mathematical connection between the work done by the artillery and the movements of the attacking troops. Such a difficult problem as this was not easy to solve. The French command make no difficulty about confessing that it took them a long time to find out exactly how to proceed. It was not only in the early days of the war that they had more or less to rely in the end on the dash of the infantry and wage war with men's breasts. All of us who spent the first 20 months at the front know that, even as late as in September, 1915 although we had many more heavy guns and shells the connection between infantry and artillery proved very imperfect and was responsible for many losses. Indeed it may be said that it is only since July last that owing to lessons drawn from Verdun the problem at last found a solution. Events have clearly shown that this solution was the right one.

Preparation and Attack.

Two things must be considered separately. First of all the preparation, secondly the attack itself.

The object of the preparation is to get rid of all the different obstacles which may delay the advance of the infantry. Now these obstacles [illegible] three heading. There is first the barbed wire then the defensive works (trenches and strongholds) finally the curtain fire (the defensive fire of the enemy's artillery). Experience and minute calculations have shown how to deal with every one of these points. The destruction of barbed wire is almost exclusively the task of the 75. The gunners know exactly how many shells are required per yard of wire entanglement—a fact which allows us to determine with accuracy what extension given the number of guns available, may be given to the front of attack.

The task is somewhat more complicated as regards the destruction of the defensive works. Experience has proved that the best way to deal with the front line trenches, especially when they are not easy to observe, is to use exclusively against them an enormous number of trench mortars of all sizes. It is quite pleasing to hear that these prehistoric instruments, at which we all used to laugh at first, are now firing with wonderful accuracy and make the Huns uncomfortable even when they hide in their underground caves.

Howitzers are only used at present against the second and third lines and all the works behind the first line trenches. As it is, their task is already a sufficiently heavy one, as it is assumed that every inch of ground must be plastered with shells. As for the curtain fire, it can only be dealt with by firing on the enemy batteries themselves; aerial observation is required and also long range guns.

Aeroplane Photography.

The minuteness of the preparation is surely one of the most comforting features of the new war. It is generally known that, in order to make sure that all the enemy works have been properly destroyed, photographs are repeatedly taken by aeroplanes. But this is not considered enough. All these photographs are submitted not only to the divisional staff concerned, but to all the company commanders who are to lead the attack, they are required to state whether they think that the destruction is complete, and, whenever there appears to be a doubtful point, to send out a patrol to confirm by direct inspection of the ground the results shown by the photograph. Then, and not before, the infantry attack is launched. Here begins the second stage.

Everyone acquainted with trench warfare knows what the root difficulty was up to the present advance. It had been quite rightly assumed that the attacking troops must only advance under a protective curtain of shells. On the other hand, as all the wires are cut as soon as a battle begins, one did not see how to make sure that the moving curtain of shells would precede the attacking infantry without going too fast or—which was a more ominous danger—too slow. The difficulty seemed so insuperable that some of the best artillery officers suggested that the only way out was to time exactly beforehand the movements of the attacking troops with the lengthening of the range. Any advance under such a system would have had to proceed according to a sort of railway timetable.

The Work of Coordination.

Fortunately, another solution was found since the allies have achieved the mastery of the air. The connection between the advancing infantry and the artillery is now insured by the so-called infantry aeroplanes. Each French division is provided with a number of these. Their task is to follow closely the advancing lines, not in order to fire on the enemy, but simply to report to the gunners and let them know exactly what is going on. As soon as the infantry has reached a given point, the 75s are informed that they must lengthen their range beyond it so as not to hit our own men. Information is similarly given if the infantry happens to be held up by any unsuspected obstacle, or if a German counter attack is seen coming up from the rear.

The way in which this new device has worked on the Somme is simply marvelous. It is mainly to this scientific system that the troops owe the fact that they have been able to advance under a curtain of shells which moved continuously ahead of them at a distance of 200 or 300 yards.

These few technical points explain why the French losses have been reduced by such a margin in spite of an almost continuous offensive. Of course things might and will be still more satisfactory. The main handicap the French are still contending with arises from the fact that they have not a sufficient supply of long range guns to completely smash the most deadly German gun the long range 210. The Germans are therefore still able to delay in some way our advance by their curtain fire and some time will lapse before this last difficulty will be met as successfully as the others.

But the only conclusion which ought to be drawn from this fact is that the efforts of the French army has not yet reached its climax. The cooperation between the workshops which are daily increasing their output and the high command who devise the best way of using the new weapons placed at their disposal has still to yield its best fruits. It is however very gratifying to see that the results attained have already allowed the nation to spare her own blood while increasing her offensive power.

Sawmill Waste.

From Dun's Review

There are more than 48,000 sawmills in the United States, and their output in waste in the form of sawdust, shavings, slabs and other wood refuse is estimated at 36,000,000 cords a year. This is equal to over 4,500,000,000 cubic feet of waste, which is the capacity of a bin one-half mile high with a base covering a 40-acre lot. Or, considering each cord to contain 80 cubic feet of solid wood with all the cracks and air spaces taken out, these 36,000,000 cords would make a block of wood more than a quarter of a mile on each edge.

Perhaps one-half of this so-called waste product is not strictly speaking wasted, but serves a useful purpose as fuel under the boilers. Much of the remaining 18,000,000 cords not only serves no useful purpose, but in most cases is a source of inconvenience and danger, and costs the mill time and money.

Sawmill waste is disposed of in various ways. Some goes to the local fuel market, some to pulp mills or to good distillation plants. Shavings and long cuttings, as well as other mill waste, are sometimes used to fill low places in the yards. However, the most common method of getting rid of waste is by burning either in a fire pit having an open fire which sometimes has a protecting wall on the side toward the mill, or in a burner inclosed on all sides and having a spark arresting screen at the top and a fire grate near the bottom. In both cases some kind of a conveyer is necessary to bear the waste from the mill to the fire. This is usually a sort of trough with a metal bottom along with a slowly moving chain or cable, equipped with cleats or buckets, carries the waste to the fire.

A closed burner and conveyer costs about $12,000 for a mill of 100,000 feet daily capacity. Forty per cent of the larger mills, cutting more than 55,000 board feet daily, are equipped with closed burners. Forty-five per cent have fire pits. The remainder have neither, and dispose of their waste in some other way.

It is estimated that for a mill of 100,000 feet capacity, the cost of conveying the waste from the machine where it is made, and destroying it in a closed burner, is 42 cents a cord, or $10.05 a day. Burners seldom bring in any revenue, although in a few cases ashes are sold for fertilizer, and in a number of others the burner furnishes hot feed water for the boilers.

Both burners and fire pits add to the insurance rates on lumber, and in the case of the pit on the mill itself. In order to reduce the fire hazard to zero, in the case of the burners, it is necessary to keep all lumber piles at least 15 feet away from the burner. The matter is much worse in the case of the pits, especially the open ones, which must be kept 300 feet away from the mill and 500 feet away from the lumber piles. When nearer than these distances from the mill and yard respectively, the insurance rates mount up rapidly with closer proximity, until they become practically prohibitive when the fire pit is nearer than 100 feet.

No well managed mill would produce waste if it could be avoided. This, however, is not possible, so the next best thing is to seek out some method of utilization of the waste so it will pay for its disposition. The forest service is working on this problem, but has not yet found a satisfactory solution.

Says Jury Was Hilarious.

From the Baltimore Sun.

The hilarity of the jury which rendered a verdict for James C. Smith, the 75-year-old widower, in the suit of Mrs. Matilda Newcomb, 58 years old and a widow, for $20,000 damages for alleged breach of promise of marriage is one of the grounds on which the court will be asked to grant a new trial of the case.

Misconduct of the jury" is alleged in the formal motion of a new trial. The plaintiff's attorney explained that he meant the actions of the jurors during the trial, and especially when Mr. Smith was testifying, and the jurymen were laughing.

The jurors were not the only ones who laughed, as the judges and the lawyers, and even Mrs. Newcomb, joined in it.

"—Loved I Not Honor More."

From the Youth's Companion.

The war in Europe has touched us lightly but it seemed a few months ago that we too should soon be fighting, though in another war. Our mothers were asked to give their sons to guard the Mexican border; and, if need be, to fight. How did they answer? Here is the letter of one mother whose two sons wished to go:

I am not the kind of woman to hold either one of you back from the call of your country. To my mind there is no higher honor than a soldier's duty faithfully performed; and, even though my heart might break with the sorrow of giving you two up, I should hang my head in shame if either one of you proved unworthy.

"So, if you find that the honorable thing to do, is to share in your company's duty, do it, my boy, with a free heart. There is nothing finer, braver or truer in the life of man than to follow your flag when your country is in danger, and no mother is worthy the honor of having borne a son who would hold him in a coward's or a shirker's place."

Such a letter as that should put courage into a man of straw, and in all ages all good women have written or said the same thing, although not always so beautifully or with such dignity. Richard Lovelace addressed his noble couplet to his sweetheart, but high minded women have always addressed it to their men:

"I could not love, thee, dear so much,
Loved I not honor more."

The Debt We Owe.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

Someone has thought of a pay-up day, or maybe it is a pay-up week; for some of us couldn't get started paying up in one day. When that time comes, we wonder how many of us think of the debt we owe to the people who do the things we say we are "too busy" to do. In boyhood, we used to stop often at a clear, cold spring where some one had hung a cup. Pretty much everybody who walked that way used it, and naturally we didn't ask who had put it there. It refreshed us, that was enough. The cup wore out at length and we wondered why somebody didn't get a new one.

All through life, most of us stop to refresh ourselves at fountains of some kind that some one has thoughtfully made ready. While the fountain runs and the up in there, how few stop to wonder how it came there. A fellow human being asks for shelter. There is the Rescue mission, we tell him, and so there is. When did we think of it last? When shall we think of it again? Here is a little paper, the Wisconsin Humane Herald, that somebody sends us who loves animals and hates cruelty. Someone who cares for the weak and helpless and those who have no advocate. He loves his fellow men, too. That kind of man does; and women and little children. We are glad of it. We are glad someone is on the job helping to keep Wisconsin's record straight. There ought to be people to look after those things, and it's comfortable not to lie awake wondering if it isn't a part of our business, too. Maybe it is part of our business. Anyhow we're glad someone is preaching manliness: we should be sorry if the spring went dry or the cup wore out. Sometime we're going to look into this debt of ours. Sometime.

Values.

From the Kansas City Times.

Percy Haughton, president of the Boston Braves, has signed with Harvard as football coach at a salary of $15,000. This probably overtops the earning capacity of the president of that institution of learning and considerably overtops that of the chief justice of the United States supreme court. Moreover, if Coach Haughton puts the eleven in shape to win the Yale game Harvard will give him anything else he wants—Stoughton hall to make a bonfire of or the chair in philosophy left vacant by the late Professor Royce.

The country has a lot more need of the sort of ability of President Lowell or ex-President Eliot than it has of the sort of a football coach. But it doesn't realize the fact in the cash it pays. Measured by cash standards the world thinks more of a successful chewing gum maker than it thought of Darwin or Pasteur or any of the great men of science who made modern progress possible.

Some day when we get more civilized the standard of compensation are going to be [illegible] the way around. In the meantime we are going to permit men with [illegible] that line to cash in on our fancies.

SCOTCH WOMEN LIKE COAL MAN'S JOB

Two jolly Scotch coal "men."

In some parts of Glasgow women have taken the places of coal men. In the east end of the city they are to be seen daily and from the expressions on their faces they evidently enjoy taking the place of the man who is "doing his bit" for king and country on the firing line.

Drinking of Water

(By V. M. PIERCE, M. D.)

The general conclusions of the latest Medical Scientists proves that drinking plenty of pure water both between meals and with one's meals is beneficial to health. It has now been proven by means of the X-rays and actual tests upon many healthy young men that the drinking of large amounts of water with meals is often beneficial. Therefore if you want to keep healthy drink plenty of pure water (not ice water), both with your meals and between meals. If you ever suffer from backache, lumbago, rheumatism, or any of the symptoms of kidney trouble—such as deep colored urine, sediment in urine, getting out of bed at night frequently and other troublesome effects, take a little Anuric before meals. These Anuric Tablets can be obtained at almost any drug store.

"Mother, how do they hang people?" asked Wallace.

"I don't know, dear, and I should not tell you if I did know. Don't let your thoughts run on such awful things."

"But, mother, the boys say that Sheriff Jackson does it, and he's a real nice man. I was going to ask him to let me see him do it some day."

"Oh, these terrible man-children," said mother, as she put her fingers in her ears.

RECIPE FOR CREAM TORTE.

SHOWER FOR A BRIDE.
For a miscellaneous shower any present that a bride might like would be entirely proper. There are always many things in linen—things useful and beautiful—many quantities of silver novelties and china of all kinds, with the ever popular cut glass galore. And, if none of these appeals to you, one is never far wrong in giving a bride a handsome edition of some well known author, or a good reproduction of a famous picture. But give enough thought to your selection to lead you to the purchase of something that the bride will like. In choosing her gift bear in mind her individual taste. Then the gift will come from the mind and heart, and not from the purse alone.

R-R-REVENGE.
Doctor—I knew cod-liver oil tastes pretty bad at first but you will get used to it in time and get to like it.
Patient—Get to like it? Well, if I ever do I'll punish a lot of it just to get even.

County Sunday School Convention

The Thirty-sixth annual convention of the Hancock County S. S. Association has passed, leaving, to all those who attended its sessions, a larger vision of better things to come.

Besides the two State workers W. D. Stem and Walter Hulton, there were in attendance. 11 pastors, 7 county officers and many S. S. superintendents and teachers. It was a noticeable fact that those who attended this convention were vitally interested in the maintenance and up building of the S. S. work of the county.

Many good and inspiring thots were given at every session and the theme of the entire program was "Going Forward!" The majority of the addresses given were along the line of the efficiency standard for S. S.'s and all the speakers were agreed as to the importance and far reaching results of a successful S. S.

Seventeen of the twenty eight S. S.'s of the county were represented with the U. B. S. S. of Goodell leading with 8 delegates. We are sure that a greater number of he S. S.'s would have been represented if the roads had been in condition for cars to run as many had planned on going to the convention via. the auto route.

Officers elected for the ensuing year—

President	O. C. Swanson
Vice-Pres.	J. W. Ramsay
Sec. & Treas.	Mrs. S. B. Durant
Elementary Div. Supt.	Mrs. E.I.Doty
Secondary Div. Supt.	Earl Ruka
Adult Div. Supt.	Dr. F. E. Heacox
Teacher Training Dept.	Mrs. Geo. Gruetzmacher
Temperance Dept.	Mrs. Herman Gelner

Let us all go forward in the year to come acting on the beleif that "The End of the Convention is the Beginning of Effort."

Mrs. Richter a Suicide

News reached Garner this week from California that Mrs. W. L. Fitkin had ended her lift by firing a bullet from a 38 calibre revolver into her brain. She was in the bedroom of her own home and Mr. Fitkin was in the kitchen when she fired the shot. A neighbor lady heard the shot and rushed to the Fitkin home just in time to see Mr. Fitkin take his dying wife in his arms. Mrs. Fitkin had said to her husband that she wished they were back in Iowa just about ten minutes before the tragedy. It is reported that she had several attacks of meloncholy but showed no intention of doing such a deed. No cause for the rash act is known. The Fitkins moved to California about 2 years ago and will be remembered by Garner people. Mrs. Fitkin leaves her husband, a daughter, Miss Gretchen, and two sons, Wayne and Robert.

Governor-Elect Harding

Sioux City Journal—The Journal is not disposed to do any gloating over the election of William L. Harding as governor of Iowa. After his remarkable victory at the primary this news paper never entertained a doubt of his election by a handsome majority. Nothing is to be gained by rubbing salt on the sore spots accumulated by the losers in the course of their ultra strenuous endeavors. There are a few things that ought to be said in good temper, however, to complete the record of what probably will be remembered as the least edifying political campaign recorded in Iowa's political history.

The election of Harding by an over whelming vote is another exemplification of Iowa reliance in the republican party and another proof of the ability of the Iowa electorate to discriminate between real and false issues. The Sioux City candidate offered to the public a better promise of satisfactory service than any man who has come to the front in state politics in recent years. He was made the objective of a series of assaults that established a new state record for political pulsillanimity. Some of the most guiless of the good people of Iowa were fooled by the misrepresentation brought into play in the absence of real argument against Mr. Harding's election. The fact that he has been elected by the largest majority ever given an Iowa candidate for a state office shows how reactionary, in the main, was the effect of the palpably unfair tactics of the opposition.

The tremendous vote or Harding in all sections of the state is in part a testimonial to the personal and political popularity of Sioux City's favorite son. In part it is a rebuke to the little clique of politicians that organized the fight against him and a warning that Iowa wants no more of this yellow campaigning. There is very little real danger that it will soon be repeated on the same scale.

To those who remain honestly doubtful of the capacity of the governor-elect for able and conscientious public service the Journal has this word of advice to offer: Watch the smoke of the next governor of Iowa!

CHAPTER VII (Continued).

"Is there a doctor on board or have you any restoratives There is a lady —" He hesitated and the color rolled freshly into his anxious face "That is—my wife" He spoke the word unwillingly, for in the instant of speaking to Lizzie he must say this to protect her good name It seemed like uttering a falsehood or stealing another man's property and yet, to be morally, it was true and for her sake at least he must not cowardly let it

"My wife" he began again in more connected style "is ill very ill"

The conductor looked at him sharply He had stood at many a wedding party when the train came down the platform toward the train The young man's blasé confidence was supposed on "I'll see" he said briefly Go back to her and I'll bring some one

It was just as Gordon turned back that the thickset man entered the car from the other end and met him face to face, but Gordon was too distraught at that moment to notice him for his mind was at rest about his pursuer as soon as the train started

Not so with the pursuer however His keen little eyes took in the white, anxious face, the smear of sticking plaster about the mouth and eyebrows, and instantly knew his man His instincts had not failed him after all

He put out a pair of brawny fists to catch at him, but a lurch of the train and Gordon's swift stride out purposed him, and by the time the little man had right ed his footing Gordon was disappearing into the stateroom, and the conductor with another man was in the aisle behind him waiting to pass He stepped back and watched At least he had driven his prey to quarry and there was no possible escape now until the train stopped He would watch that door as a cat watches a mouse, and perhaps be able to send a telegram for help before he made any move at all It was well that his impulse to take the man then and there had come to naught What would the other passengers have thought of him! He must of course move cautiously What a blunder he had almost made It was no part of his purpose to make public his errand The men who were behind him did not wish to be known, nor to have their business known

Wee Bart Peters stood watching the door of the stateroom as the conductor and doctor came and went He gathered from a few questions asked by one of the passengers that there was some one sick, probably the boy he had seen faint as the train started It occurred to him that this might be his opportunity, and when the conductor came out of the drawing room the second time to inquire if any assistance was needed and stood at the door as if he would be a sentry to guard his attention from everything but his self appointed task, and he never stirred at any question or request

[illegible] was aroused at the porter's cry of "All out for [illegible] and stood with his eyes on the [illegible] with [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Hunting the Wild Turkey.

Scenes In The Virgin Forests of Arkansas.

TURKEYS ARE PLENTIFUL

The Story of the Turkey, and How the American Bird Became Famous.

It is an easy matter to go to market for your Thanksgiving turkey, but out West they do it differently. Down in the deep bottom land forests of Arkansas is the home of the wild turkey, and this fall the game has been so plentiful and so easy to get at that hardly a home in the States of Arkansas and Kansas will be without its turkey dinner on Thanksgiving Day. There was a time when the wild turkey made his home east of the Alleghanies, but the memory of living man runneth not to the time when they were plentiful there, for this shyest of all birds is absolutely incompatible with civilization, and he has retired year by year until now only the most secret places in the Alleghanies and the vast swamps of the Southern States give any hope for the persevering turkey hunter. The wonder is that the bird still exists at all. For ever since the white man came all manner of nefarious schemes have been concocted for his destruction.

Out in the wilds of Arkansas, where the railroads have just begun to penetrate, the wild turkeys have not yet learned that civilization has laid claim to this land, and this fall they often perch calmly on the branches of trees along the railway track. The train crews noticed this and engineer and firemen have a daily hunt for the game. They sit on their engine boxes with their shotguns in their hand while the train ambles along at the easy rate of twelve miles an hour. When they run into the turkey regions they fire at them, and if they kill any they stop the train, back up to the spot, and retrieve the game. The passengers enjoy the sport, and occasionally some who are going to or from a hunt join in it.

Some of the older sports men who were in this country when the Kansas Pacific Railway was built remember when passengers and train crews shot from the car windows on the Kansas plains and this Arkansas diversion recalls it to their mind. The sport will not last long however as there is no wild game more wary than the wild turkeys. They will soon become acquainted with the dangers along the railroad and then railroading in Arkansas will once more drop back to the steady pace it holds elsewhere.

Taking him by and large an old turkey gobbler is the quickest, swiftest, shyest and most knowing animal with wings or without. He can run like a greyhound, smell like a deer, see like an eagle, and fly like a wild turkey. You may have spent two hours in crawling on your hands and knees over a mountain open or in moving with noiseless footsteps, each one of which is considered with careful deliberation, and a single sudden turn of your head, snap of a twig or gleam of sunshine on your gun will send a whole gang a mile away and up the mountain. Upward it always is. When a wild turkey does not like the looks of things he wants the rockiest and roughest summit of the highest headland of the topmost ridge of a whole range, and he generally gets it. If it is steep, he runs, and he can run up faster than you can fall down. If it is a gentle rise he thrasnes the air with his mighty wings, clear up obstructing tree tops, and then away he sails with the velocity that belongs to a twenty-pound feathered cannon ball.

Never for a moment are all off their guard. One, two or three of their tall necks are always stretched aloft, full of eyes and ears, in statuesque suspicion. Now the old gobbler straightens up his head, poised four feet from the ground, trim, graceful, powerful, the sun glinting on the dark, iridescent feathers of his back and lower neck. Now you decide he is in range. Your 38-calibre bullet strikes his noble breast with a muffled thump, and the giant wings wildly beat down the dry ragweed while your magazine is emptied vainly at the dark forms shooting off toward the wooded mountain side.

He is a royal creature this wild turkey, and you may hope to see an old gobbler tip the scales at twenty or twenty-five pounds. Slung over your shoulder by the foot, his head dangles against your heels. He is a wild monarch, eloquent of the woods and mountains and their innermost secrets, fed only by the most delicate wild fruits and crystal spring water, formed for the highest beauty and strength known to American bird kind, with a flesh more delicious than his stall-fed cousin, because of the gamy flavor imparted by the wild food. To a man who has killed and eaten a November wild gobbler, Thanksgiving Day has a meaning blank to other mortals.

An English writer has delved into the history of the turkey and this is the interesting story he tells:

The time of the first appearance of the turkey in the eastern hemisphere is doubtful. M. Brillat Savarin and other French writers attribute its introduction to the Jesuits of Paraguay, and the above-named learned gastronome adduces in proof of the debt we owe the followers of Loyola the fact that in many parts of France turkeys are called 'Jesuits,' by reason of the first brood having been reared at a large farm belonging to the brotherhood named Bourges. This statement is however, decidedly at variance with another authenticated by Montluc, who says that the first turkey ever served at table in France appeared at the nuptials of Charles IX. (A. D. 1570), who ate a wing of the fowl for his supper. But the probability is that the Spaniards introduced the turkey among us at a much earlier period, mention being made of it in Europe in the year 1524. The first turkeys came to Germany in 1534. Let the date, however, be what it might—whether the turkey followed in the train of Cortez or of Pizarro—to America we are indebted for it, and there in its wild state, in some parts, it still ranges, its plumage, as in the case of the Honduras turkey (meleager ocellata), growing more lustrous and magnificent as the family extends southward.

The males, usually termed "gobblers" and no doubt meriting the name, associate in parties of from ten to 100 to seed their food apart from the females, which either go about singly with their young or form troops with other hens and their families, sometimes to the number of seventy or eighty. These all avoid the old males, who attack and destroy the younger whenever they can by reiterated blows on the skull. But all parties travel in the same direction and on foot unless the dog of a hunter or a river on their line of march compels them to take wing. When about to cross a river they select the highest eminence, that their flight may be more sure, and in such position they sometimes stay for a day or more, as if in consultation. The males on such occasions gobble obstreperously, strutting about with extraordinary importance, as if to animate their companions, and the females and young assume much of the pompous air of the males and spread their tales as they move silently around. Having mounted at length to the tops of the highest trees, the assembled multitudes, at the signal note of their leader, wing their way to the opposite shore.

The old and fat birds, contrary to what might be expected, cross without difficulty, even when the river is a mile in width; but the wings of the young and meager, and, of course, those of the weak, frequently fall them before they have completed their passage, when in they drop and are forced to swim for their lives, which they do cleverly enough, spreading their tails for a support, closing their wings, stretching out their feet. All do not succeed in such attempts, and the weaker often perish. The wild turkeys feed on all sorts of berries, fruits and grasses; also beetles, tadpoles, young frogs and lizards are occasionally found in their crops. When the turkeys have arrived at the land of abundance they disperse in flocks, devouring all the mast as they advance.

The beginning of March is the pairing time for a short time previous to which the females separate from their mates and shun them, though the latter pertinaciously follow, gobbling loudly. The sexes roost apart, but at no great distances, so that when the female utters a call every male within hearing responds rolling note after note in the rapid succession, not as when spreading the tail and strutting near the hen but in a voice resembling that of the tame turkey when he hears any unusual or frequently repeated noise. Where the turkeys are numerous, the woods, from one to the other, sometimes for scores of miles, resound with this voice of their wooing, uttered responsively from their roosting places. This is continued for about an hour, and, on the rising of the sun, they silently descend from their perches, and the males begin to strut for the purpose of winning the admiration of their mates.

If the call be given from the ground the males in the vicinity fly toward the individual, and, whether they perceive her or not, erect and spread their tails, throw the head backward, distend the comb and wattle, strut pompously and rustle their wings and body feathers, at the same time ejecting a puff of air from the lungs. While thus occupied they occasionally halt to look out for the female and then resume their strutting and puffing, moving with as much rapidity as the nature of their gait will admit. During this performance the males often encounter each other and desperate battles ensue, when the conflict is only terminated by the flight or death of the vanquished. The usual fruits of such victories are reaped by the conqueror, who is followed by one or more females, which roost near him, if not upon the same tree, until they begin to lay, when their habits are altered with a view of saving their eggs, which the males will break, if he can get at them.

The New Flexible Jewelry.

Pall Mall Gazette: Flexibility is the leading characteristic of all the newest jewelry, many of the diamond necklets being decorated with flexible ends, in the form of loops and tassels, carried out entirely in the same precious stones. A diamond corsage ornament has two flexible ends, each being a mass of tiny stones, a sort of diamond rain, drooping downwards from a scroll shaped top, and finished with two large pearl drops. Many large pearls appear, too, in a beautiful diamond necklace which is so contrived that it can be used when required in the form of a tiara, or even as an ornament for the bodice.

The Origin of Thanksgiving.

The first recorded instance of anything like the nature of Thanksgiving in the history of our country is the following entry in an old bible belonging to one of the first pilgrims: "Sonne born to Susanna White, December 19th, 1620, yt six o'clock morning. Next day we meet for prayer and Thanksgiving." This, however, is not generally accepted as the first observance of that nature, since it hardly partook of the character of a general thanksgiving but fifteen months after the pilgrims landed from Holland they held a harvest festival which lasted a week. This is generally appointed as a day of Thanksgiving, in New England, but it was not a day set apart by the governor, nor was it attended by any religious observance.

A few years later precisely the same thing occurred. Thereupon July 30, 1623, was appointed as a day of Thanksgiving, and before the second sunset a relief ship arrived. Fast days and Thanksgiving days came at irregular intervals for a number of years, the latter following some marked event of a beneficent nature, such as getting rid of Anne Hutchinson, whose preaching caused such a turmoil in New England, for the termination of King Philip's war and the close of the revolution and the triumph of independence in America. Then came the practice of the governor of each state naming a day for general thanksgiving. These at first were not coincident, but the beautiful custom has prevailed for considerable time, and doubtless will prevail for ages to come, of the president appointing such a day, generally the last Thursday in November, to which the governor of each state assents by naming the same day. Thus there is one day each year when the forty-five states and the territories from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from British America to the gulf return thanks to od for his manifold blessings and mercies.

DO IT NOW, GOOD WATCHWORD

Habit of Procrastination Has Never Yet Failed to Bring Train of Evils in Its Wake.

"Sometime" is a useful word that is often overworked, remarks the Milwaukee Journal. One says, 'Sometime I will do it,' but the time never comes. Sometime is no time when a kind deed is to be done. Sometime is no time when a definite task is to be done. A thing put off beyond its rightful time encroaches on time allotted by right to other duties. One may think he is gaining time by postponing the duty of the hour. In fact he is wasting time. "Tomorrow and ever 'tomorrow' has been the ruin of many. Do now the thing that should be done now. Have you had a quarrel, and are you ready for reconciliation? Do not postpone it. The other person may get hardened in his views and become unwilling to be reconciled. He may die and leave you to a lasting regret that you had not made friends. Would you help someone? Do not wait till help is past being help. Put off till "tomorrow" mending the fence, and your neighbor's cattle will have found the weak place and made havoc with your grain. Put off paying your insurance, and perhaps a fire will destroy all you have. Debts do not grow less by postponing payment. "Do it now" is a good watchword. Say the kind word, do the kind deed, perform the duty of the hour.

Tough Luck.

"Van Cush is an extremely unlucky chap."

"He isn't exactly considered so."

"I know, but you ought to hear him talk about his misfortunes. Six months ago he decided that he had made all the money he could possibly use, so he bought a farm, and retired. He started to sink an artesian well in order to insure a supply of pure water. And what did he do but strike oil? Now he's got to get back in harness again and make a whole lot of money that he doesn't need at all out of that oil well. Don't you pity him from the bottom of your heart?"

Kidney Disorder

(By DR. V. M. PIERCE.)

The most simple methods are usually the most effective ones when treating any disorder of the human system. The mere drinking a cup of hot water each morning, plenty of pure water all day, and a little Anuric before every meal has been found the most effective means of overcoming kidney trouble. Death would occur if the kidneys did not work day and night in separating poisons and uric acid from the blood.

The danger signals are backache, depressions, pains, heaviness, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, chilliness, rheumatic twinges, swollen joints or gout.

Since it is such a simple matter to step into your favorite drug store and obtain Anuric, anyone who earnestly desires to regain health and new life will waste no time in beginning this treatment.

CARE OF DAIRY CALVES

The Production of a Profitable Cow Depends Largely Upon the Methods of Handling the Calf.

Careful attention on the part of a dairyman during the two weeks that follow a calf's birth will often mean the ultimate addition to his herd of a large, well developed animal, instead of sickly, undersized stunted animal. The problem of raising calves is today a more complicated one than when it was customary to feed a larger amount of whole milk. The dairyman will therefore find it to his advantage to take the best possible care of his calves from the very beginning.

Immediately after birth the naval of the calf should be washed with an antiseptic solution and tied with a silk thread in order to prevent infection. For the first feed the calf should have the first milk from the cow after calving and should have its mother's milk for several feeds thereafter. The sooner the weaning takes place the better, but ordinarily it should not be postponed later than the fourth day. The sooner the calf is weaned the more easily it is taught to drink. When first fed from the pail, 8 to 10 pounds of milk a day, fresh and warm from the cow and divided into two feeds, are sufficient. The feeding times should be as nearly regular as possible, and at first it is advisable to feed more than twice a day. The amount fed should be constant; and to insure this, scales should be used, as variation tends to get the digestive organs out of order. At all times the utmost care should be taken to prevent any digestive disorder, as all such trouble hinders the growth and development of the animal. Calf scours is the most common indication of this condition.

The following named precautions to a great extent, tend to prevent scours:

Feed regularly.

Be sure that the milk is always sweet and warm.

In feeding use only clean pails.

Feed the calf a little less than it wants.

Reduce the amount of milk one-half if the animal becomes sick.

The amount of milk fed can be gradually increased until at the end of the second week the calf receives from 14 to 16 pounds of milk a day. At this time the gradual substitution of skim milk for whole milk may commence. Hay and grain should be placed before the calf at this period, and it will be found to nibble at them a little. At the end of the third week the substitution of the skim milk will be complete. By slow changes the milk can be increased thereafter until 20 pounds a day are fed, the amount will be found sufficient when fed with the grain and hay. If skim milk is plentiful more may be fed, but the added amount will not give proportionately better results.

Corn meal, bran, and oil meal, mixed in the proportion of three, two, and one, make an excellent grain mixture. This grain when fed with plenty of fine clover hay makes an ideal supplement to skim milk in balancing the ration.

Calves should be allowed all the grain that they will eat until they consume three pounds a day; from this point the feeder should use his judgment as to whether an increase is justified.

The calf, from the time it is two weeks of age, should always have access to plenty of clean, pure water.

The general practice is to feed calves skim milk for from two to six months. In the latter case, with fall calves the time of final weaning from milk comes in the spring when pastures are ready. Under this system the calves usually make excellent growth during the entire period without any break in gains.

CAT CLEANEST OF ANIMALS

Makes Toilet Carefully as Do Others of Her Kind

Cats make the most careful toilet of any class of animals. Lions and tigers wash themselves in exactly the same manner as the cat, wetting the dark, rubberlike ball of the forefoot and inner toe and passing it over the face behind the ears. The foot is thus at the same time a sponge and brush, and the rough tongue cleans the rest of the body.

Raise Fruit

One of the most important features of a home, from the standpoint of health, if for nothing else, is a fruit garden maintained for the purpose of supplying the family fruits. Yet it is amazing that many persons who have suitable situations and facilities for raising fruit and who cannot purchase because of remoteness from market have not established home fruit gardens.

The inhabitants of this country are notably a fruit loving and fruit eating people. Notwithstanding this fact fruit culture has grown to be a science among specialists, and those who consume fruit are the growers. The possibilities [illegible] upon restricted [illegible] have been got [illegible] the result that many persons [illegible] own a suburban home or a farm [illegible] upon fruit as a luxury. A great deal [illegible] of the land which is now practically [illegible] and entirely unremunerative [illegible] be made to produce fruits in [illegible] quantity to give them a regular place upon the family bill of fare [illegible], at the same time, add greatly [illegible] the attractiveness of the table and [illegible] healthfulness of the diet.

"DOCTOR BAIN" LIVES ALONE ON FARM; HAPPY

His Little Home Contains Many Articles that Mark Back to Days of the Stage Coach.

Windsor, Vt.—The day of the alchemist on the back streets of the cities are probably gone, but the unusual continues to keep abreast of its record in the country district. Living alone on the farm where he was born 60 years ago at least, in Hartland, Vt., is Dr. Samuel Eugene Stevens, known generally as Dr. Sam, who works in a little printing office where he writes his books and sets them into type.

The doctor never served an apprenticeship to the printer's trade but is a very careful compositor and better than the average man on the job press, so that the work turned out by him would pass as that of a finished craftsman. The doctor says he enjoys this pastime the best of anything that he has attempted since he retired from the practice of medicine about ten years ago.

The little farmhouse where he lives alone in the summer has many articles that hark back to the days of the stage coach. The old melodeon which has been in the family for many years occupies a prominent place in the household furniture. Yet there is a modern piano there upon which the aged doctor printer plays to while away the loneliness.

The once well tilled farm of his ancestors no longer shows the furrows of the plow. It is all meadow land now but looks all the more in harmony with the spirit of leaving nature alone that seems to pervade the surroundings of this cloistered spot. Dr. Stevens has had a varied experience as a have had who at the close of a busy life seek such removed places and pass the evening of their life in contemplation.

It is the metaphysical that interests this retired doctor now. He compiled a book in the year 1908 called "The Philosophy of the Great Unconscious." The title would mislead the casual person, but the text shows that the writer has an intimate knowledge of the works of Darwin, Huxley and other scientists. The title of the book that the doctor is now writing is called "The Economy of Matter."

Dr. Stevens is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania in the class of 1871, practiced in Iowa and in Iowa, and is still a registered pharmacist. The doctor says science is a more or less science. He advises people to avoid doctors because, as he puts it, it is a great thing to be able to cheat death.

The old home farm where the man lives has been christened as "Stevens Lodge." Perhaps it gets its name from the spring water that is piped from the house. The water is cold all the year round and was on a hot day that the correspondent visited the place, and the taste of spring water at that time was a good one to test its virtue.

Dr. Stevens never married to which fact he attributes his ability as a housekeeper and cook. He can cook skilfully and his home betrays no sign of masculine neglect. He is happy in the unique work he is doing, and he observes where a person has found happiness, [illegible]

WASHINGTON MOST WASTEFUL

Leads all American Cities in Throwing Away Food

Washington, D. C.—The federal government conducts many kinds of investigations, but Washington was hardly prepared to learn that United States agents had been digging into the garbage dumps of the country.

As a result of this latest inquiry, the department of agriculture announces that Washington is the most wasteful city in the United States. Careful examinations of the contents of garbage cans were made with a view to determine what percentage of food products daily thrown away might have been put to wholesome use had housewives of the various cities conducted their establishments more economically.

A complete report on the Federal Government's investigation will be published soon.

An' a funny kissin' sound'

He can throw a snake-curve ball,
An' can mew an' bark an' g
An' he doesn't mind at all
When I pin things on his back.
Often evenin's when he comes
I'm downstairs till after eight
While he helps me do my sums,

Once when he was here I s

That he's only jest a beau!

When Pigs Go Down In the Back.

and drag their hind quarters as a result of paralysis or loss of control of the muscles by the nerves, they need attention.

This condition is brought about by poor care or the feeding of improper food. (It is most common during the late winter or spring.)

In the large majority of cases this can be prevented. Plenty of exercise and the feeding of the proper ration is the best preventive.

As soon as the symptoms develop, the animal should be separated from the rest of the herd. A light diet should be fed. As constipation is a prominent symptom in this disease, the bowels should be kept loose by feeding plenty of Standard Hog Regulator. We have neve known of a case of paralysis in a herd that was fed Standard Hog Regulator regularly. We are ready to supply you.

Every one who keeps an aquarium knows that it is advisable to place a few snails in the tank, not only because snails are interesting in themselves, but because they are good cleaners, says the Popular Science Monthly. If the keeper of the aquarium knows that too much sunlight will produce too much plant growth, and has placed the vessel in a partly shaded place where the proportion of light and shade is about right, the snails, if they are numerous enough, can then control the growth. Nature has provided them with a peculiar anatomical structure resembling a narrow ribbon, which in detail is like the band of teeth on a carpenter's rasp. Under the microscope these so called "lingual ribbons" or tongues are seen to be set thickly with rows of sharp edged teeth which are themselves toothed and which rasp off microscopic plants and carry them into the mouth.

An event which was not without its regrettable aspects was the recent wrecking of the beautiful buildings and monuments of the exposition at San Francisco, which were erected only about two years ago. Despite any desire to preserve them that admirers may have had, the temporary character of the buildings made their demolition advisable. Governor Clarke will remain at the head of the state government for 11 days after January 1. All elective state officers take office January 1, except the governor and lieutenant governor The vote on these two officials is not canvassed by the state executive council. It is counted by the general assembly on the second day of the session

The Twenty-seventh general assembly will open January 8, on Monday. The vote on governor and lieutenant governor will be counted on the day following The custom then is to fix Thursday as the date for inauguration, giving the committees Tuesday and Wednesday to make preparations for the event

Twice Governor Clarke recommended that the number of doorkeepers and clerks in the general assembly be reduced. He terms the employment of excessive numbers of clerks as graft. The message to the last general assembly stirred up considerable trouble Politicians are speculating as to whether the retiring governor will include in his message a paragraph referring to this matter again.

JONES LEFT CHURCH ON NIGHT OF MOORE MURDER.

Red Oak, Ia., Nov. 18.—Otto Wilkey, chief of police of Blue Island, Ill., now in Red Oak is said to have in his possession an ax with which he claims the Blue Island and Villisca ax murders were committed He was here as a witness for J B Wilkerson a detective, who is being sued for $60 000 damages by J F Jones of Villisca, on a slander charge growing out of efforts to run down the Villisca murders

Further testimony was introduced today to show that Wilkerson accused Jones of complicity in the murder of the Moore family

An admission was secured on cross examination of Joe Aldrich, a Jones witness, that there had been a rumor ever since the Moore murder that Jones had something to do with it which was before Wilkerson entered the case.

And you were telling the truth," continued Mr Mitchell, Wilkerson's attorney "Yes, sir responded the witness

Witness Roth testified that it was said at the called pasture meeting that Mr Jones came into his church on the Sunday evening of the murder, occupied a rear seat for a time, went out and returned again, something unusual for him to do.

Cross examination of witness appears to be for the purpose of showing keen business rivalry between Jones and the slain Joe Moore once business associates, also to make it appear Jones is unpopular in the county.

A witness testified to circulating a subscription paper to bury a citizen of Villisca and that when presented to Jones he offered to credit the dead man with a certain sum on a bill owing him and asked that the balance be paid him after the funeral expenses had been paid

Plaintiff asked for damages because of the overflow of his lands, which he alleged was due because of the defendant's right of way backing the water on to his land. At the close of plaintiff's evidence Judge Anderson directed a verdict for the defendant, as the plaintiff failed to show that the defendant company was at fault.

A divorce was granted to Goldie Freel of Onawa, from her husband, Lewis Freel, on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment

WILKERSON ACCUSED JONES BEFORE VILLISCA CITIZENS

Red Oak Ia Nov 18—Testimony is now being presented in the $60,000 damage suit of Sen F F Jones against Detective Wilkerson The early evidence relates to a meeting held near Villisca, at which the detective is said to have made direct statements connecting Senator Jones with the famous Villisca ax murders

Gill Roth a Villisca barber, who said he was at the now famous meeting or the banks of the Nodaway river or known as the meeting in the pasture, swore that Wilkerson talked for five hours and there declared that Jones furnished the money to pay for the murder of Joe Moore Other witnesses testified along the same lines, that Wilkerson openly accused Jones of being instrumental in causing the murder

Witnesses also testified to statements made by Wilkerson to the effect that he would defeat Jones for renomination to the state senate

In his statement to the jury Attorney Mitchell acting for Wilkerson said

We do not claim that Mr Jones ever advised anybody to murder anybody but Joe Moore The murderer was compelled to slay the seven other sleeping people to conceal his identity"

MARSTON WANTS LEGISLATION FOR EXPERIMENT STATIONS

Washington, D C Nov 18 Legislation to establish engineering experiment stations in connection with state agricultural and mechanical colleges was recommended in resolutions passed tonight by the annual convention of the American Association of Agricultural colleges and experiment stations Speakers advocated the principle of the Newlands' bill which would provide engineering stations along the general lines of the present government agricultural experiment stations.

Rapid development of engineering efficiency in Europe during the war has made it imperative said Dean A Marston, of Iowa State college, that organized engineering research work be started in the states under encouragement of the federal government

Efforts that have been made to shape legislation so as to provide separate institutions for engineering research drew sharp condemnations from some speakers. It was declared unfortunate that already state universities and state agricultural institutions are under separate direction

TO FORFEIT ESTATE AND SATISFY HEART

Dr. Roy Goes on Bender When Alternative Is Submitted, But Does Not Weaken.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 16.—Dr. T. Roy, formerly an interne in a local hospital, will marry his sweetheart, Miss Fay Wilson, of Gravity, Ia., even though it will cost him an estate of $200,000. That is what Dr. Roy told the police judge today when he was arraigned for intoxication and fined $15.

The physician told the court that his fiancee had come from Gravity to marry him. Just prior to her arrival, however, he said he had received a letter from his attorney at Syracuse, N. Y., stating that his aunt, Anita Roy, would disinherit him if he married before two years.

He declared that it was due to his worry over the situation that he imbibed more freely last night than he should have done and created a disturbance at the Randolph hotel

"What do you propose to do?" asked Judge Mershon.

"I'm going to marry the girl," replied Dr Roy.

"HAS BEENS" STAGE HUSKING CONTEST NEAR RED OAK

Red Oak, Ia, Nov 16—A corn husking contest that attracted considerable attention was put on here Previous to the contest there was probably no one in Red Oak aware of the fact that I. L. Hawley, proprietor of the Hawley Music store, was a corn husker of even ordinary ability, but, being challenged to a contest, he demonstrated his prowess.

D. W. Shultz, manager of the wholesale house for the Edison machines in Omaha was in the city, and while here he boasted of his ability in former days as a corn husker. He bantered Mr. Hawley to a contest, naming as the reward for the winner a $200 Edison machine. Mr. Hawley accepted the challenge.

The field chosen was on the Sture Sandholm farm north of Evergreen cemetery, and the time limit for the contest was agreed upon as two hours. The news soon spread that the race was on, and nearly 50 people from Red Oak went out to watch it. The corn had fallen badly in the field, but Mr. Hawley made a record of 23 bushels and 40 pounds in two hours, winning over his opponent by two bushels and 10 pounds.

Red Oak, Ia Nov 16—The work of selecting a jury to try the 60,000 damage suit of F F. Jones, former state senator, against J. N Wilkerson, a private detective of Kansas City, is progressing slowly. The case grows out of the murder of the Moore family at Villisca in 1912. Jones charges slander and defamation of character in associating his name with the crime. Judge R Rockafellow is presiding over the special session of the court which is hearing the case

After the filing of two motions in the damage suit, the court ordered the impaneling of a jury. TWO SUPERVISORS CHOSEN LIVE IN SAME TOWNSHIP

Dubuque Ia., Nov 16—A peculiar mixup here is the result of the election. Two candidates for the board of supervisors, both residents of Julien township, were elected. It is now found that the law says two members of the board may not be residents of the same township.

It is believed the candidate receiving the next highest number of votes will be declared legally elected and seated, though the one of the two in Julien township receiving the lowest vote is expected to put up a fight for the office.

GIVE THANKS FOR THRIVING NATION

President In His Thanksgiving Proclamation Urges Americans to Give Liberally to Bleeding Europe.

Washington, Nov 17 President Wilson today formally by proclamation, designated Thursday, November 30, as Thanksgiving day Here follows the president's proclamation

"It has long been the custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in prayer and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us and the nation

"The year that has elapsed since we last observed our day of thanksgiving has been rich in blessings to us as a people, and the whole face of the world has been darkened by war In the midst of our peace and happiness our thoughts dwell with painful disquiet upon the struggles and sufferings of the nations at war and of the people upon whom war has brought disaster without choice or possibility of escape on their part

I cannot think of our own happiness without thinking of their pitiful distress

'Now therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States of America, do appoint Thursday, the 30th of November as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer and urge and advise the people to resort to their several places of worship on that day to render thanks to Almighty God for the blessings of peace and unbroken prosperity which He has bestowed upon our beloved country in such unstinted measure

"And I also urge and suggest our duty in this a day of peace and abundance, to think with deep sympathy of the stricken peoples of the world upon whom the curse and terror of war has pitilessly fallen and to contribute out of our abundance to the relief of their sufferings

Our people could in no better way show their real attitude towards the present struggle of the nations than by contributing out of their abundance to the relief of the suffering which war has brought in its train

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed

Done at the City of Washington, this 17th day of November in the year of our Lord 1916 and of the independence of the United States the 141st

BREAK DOWN WALLS TO ESCAPE LIONESS

Panic In Theater Follows When Beast Escapes From Its Cage.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov 18 - A trained lioness, which escaped from her cage in a theater in Kansas City, Kan. last night, caused an audience of more than 300 persons to flee in panic So great was the force of the crowd as it rushed for safety that the front and sides of the one-story building were pushed out in the rush for the street and a score of persons were injured The trainer and several policemen caged the animal before she could attack the audience.

The lioness was being put through a series of tricks when she suddenly rushed with great force upon the gate of the cage. The trainer was knocked aside and the animal bounded over the cage toward the audience. Electric connections were broken and the house thrown into darkness as the crowd pushed against the walls, fighting for the exits. The lioness was crouched upon the stage. Policemen were ready for her, when the trainer asked that they shoot into the floor They complied, the shots intimidating the beast, and she was driven back into the cage with sticks and poles

Prisoners In Conquered France Suffer Severely

Hague Tribunal Official Declares That Captives of Germans Are Dependent Upon What Friends and Charitable Associations Are Able to Send Them.

New York, Nov 18.—Prisoners from the invaded portions of France, held in German prison camps, virtually have to subsist on such supplies as are sent to them and those unfortunates who have no one to look after their individual wants face a "truly terrible" fate, according to Dr. M H. Rooseboom, assistant secretary of the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague, who arrived here today from Rotterdam on the steamship Nieuw Amsterdam Dr. Rooseboom in a statement issued on his arrival said his mission here was mainly to interest Americans in the relief work now being carried on in Holland for these prisoners.

"Recently,' said Dr Rooseboom, "I was able to visit several prison camps in Germany in an unofficial way, an advantage in that my visit was not announced before hand, and I was able to see conditions as they actually are. The poor prisoners can get no news or parcels from their home people and are likely to starve unless help is sent them.

"Their plight is being relieved to the fullest extent possible by the people of Holland, individuals there adopting an individual prisoner and sending packages at least twice a month containing the necessaries of life. We cannot care for all of them, and many of the pitiful appeals we receive have to be ignored because of lack of funds."

CHARGE COAL MEN BREAK CONTRACTS

Refuse to Fill Cars When Furnished, Claim—Commerce Commission Demands Explanation.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 18.—Charges that coal operators are breaking contracts made yesterday at hearings in progress here promise to result in a widening of the scope of the investigation the Interstate Commerce commission is making into the questions surrounding exchanges and return of freight cars by the railroads of the country.

The charge was made by counsel for the Louisville & Nashville railroad that mines had refused to load cars furnished for the specific purpose of enabling them to meet contract requirements. Asked by Commissioner C. C. McChord, of the Interstate Commerce commission, who is presiding at the hearing, the reason for this refusal, counsel for the railroad answered that no reason was known, but that it was believed the operators wished to take advantage of the high prices being offered on the open market.

Commissioner McChord demanded that he be furnished with all the records available to the Louisville & Nashville, showing where any operator has failed to fill his contracts when furnished with a supply of cars for that purpose.

"These operators," he said, "are constantly coming to the commission asking for relief of various sorts. Now, if they are not going to serve the public, there is a question in my mind as to whether they deserve, or ought to have, any relief."

Petrograd, Nov. 18.—The minister of foreign affairs has sent a telegram to all Russian representatives in allied countries, declaring Russia's firm determination not to make a separate peace under any circumstances, according to the Semiofficial News agency. The text of the telegram is as follows

"Petrograd, Nov. 16.—Reports spread abroad recently by the press of certain countries of pretended secret pour parlers being carried on between Russia and Germany, with the object of signing a separate peace, are futile and make no impression on the Russian government. The imperial government desires to declare in the most categorical manner that these absurd rumors can find force in only enemy countries.

"Russia will maintain intact the intimate union which binds here to her valiant allies; and, far from thinking of the making of a separate peace, will fight by their side the common enemy without the slightest faltering until the hour of final victory. Nothing that our enemies can do will shake in any degree the irrevocable decision of Russia.

"You are charged to give the largest publicity to the preceding and to bringing the contents of this telegram to the knowledge of the government to which you are accredited."

BRITISH TO PUSH THEIR OFFENSIVE AGAINST GERMANS

There Will Be No Letup In Operations Calculated to Harass Enemy Throughout the Winter.

BIG BATTLES CONTINUE

Heavy Fighting In Progress on the Rumanian and Macedonian Fronts Shows No Marked Change.

London, Nov. 17.—The capture by the British of the town of Barakli on the eastern end of the Macedonian front is announced officially London, Nov. 18—Maj. Gen. F. B. Maurice, chief director of military operations at the war office, in an interview with the Associated Press today predicted that the British gains in the Ancre valley were only the forerunner of further equally important advances which would be made on the western front during the winter months.

"Our success on the Ancre," said General Maurice, "means that we are not going to give the enemy much rest this winter. It means that whenever weather conditions permit, we are going to attack and subject the enemy to unceasing pressure during the coming months, so as to prevent as far as possible the Germans from establishing themselves in new positions.

"All the attempts of the enemy to minimize our successes will not explain away the fact that in three days the British troops, by the capture of Beaumont and St. Pierre, Division and the semicircular ridge they defended, have gained an important strategical advantage. This ridge formed a salient jutting into our lines from the northern bank of the Ancre. Thus the enemy was able to direct the fire of his artillery massed behind it.

"Our troops advanced from below through sticky white chalk and a network of defenses. They gained the ridge and forced the enemy back across the valley to the next hill. As a result, we dominate the situation in this territory and are consolidating the positions for further activities."

Another attack along the Ancre yesterday netted further gains for the British. The war office announced today that the British front had been extended east from Beaumont along the north bank of the Ancre.

This attack failed as did a night attack west of Le Sars, in the Somme area, the official statement declare. On the road from Flers to Thilloy, German troops drove the British westward and captured five machine guns.

HOLD ALLIES AT BAY.

Berlin, Nov. 17.—(by wireless to Sayville)—Entente forces have made renewed attacks in strong force on the German-Bulgarian positions about Monastir on the Macedonian front, the war office announced today. The Klemme Creamery paid 36c per pound for butter fat for the last half of October and expect to pay 40 c for the first half of November. Farmers should not hesitate to milk cows at these prices as it more than offsets the high cost of feed stuffs and Butter maker Grimer thot the prospects are that the highest prices ever paid for cream will undoubtedly be paid during this winter season. Klemme has an excellent creamery and always pay the highest market prices as their products are always sold at a premium. When you have cream to sell do not pass up the local creamery.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
¶ Advertising creates sales. The up-to-date business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

Josten-Schlei Nuptials

A beautiful home wedding took place on Wednesday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock at the home of Mrs. F. Schlei when her youngest daughter, Miss Ellen was united in marriage to Edwin A. Josten also of Klemme, Iowa. The bride was beautifully attired in a gown of white satin, carrying a bouquet of white roses. The groom wore the conventional blue. While the wedding march was being played by Miss Lydia Beir the bride and groom entered the room and took their place under a beautiful arch decorated with festooning and Chrisanthiums After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding dinner consisting of four courses was served to about fifty eight guests. The following out of town guests were present: Mr. and Mrs. Ed Weisbrod, Mr. and Mrs. Edd Schlei from Fenton, Iowa, Mrs. Struck from Minneapolis.

Both the groom and the bride are industrious and highly respected young people and well known in the community and their many friends join in wishing them a long and successful life. They will settle on a farm near Klemme.

Rev. A. H. Meyer of the Methodist Church performed the wedding ceremony.

Use Plenty Printer's Ink

The following article by Auctioneer Pringle of Buffalo Center, one of the most successful auctioneers in Northern Iowa, should be read with interest by anyone intending to hold a sale The following is taken from last week's Buffalo Center Tribune:

"There is no man who can use advertising more efficiently than the farmer who is holding a public sale, or having anything to sell or trade in the way of animals, vehicles, implements or grain. Show me a public sale that has been well advertised around Buffalo Center and I will show you a good sale. A great many farmers are so averse to letting loose of a little money for advertising that they greatly reduce their receipts on day of sale. In my estimation the average farm sale should be advertised to the extent of $15.00 to $25.00 and there may be many that could spend twice as much and have more returned on sale day; there are men who expect to sell several thousand dollars worth of property who think they have advertised liberally by furnishing their auctioneer with a few bills to stick up; they save a few dollars by leaving the newspapers alone, but one aditional buyer would more than make up for all the advertising, as the average newspaper is read by hundreds of prospective buyers whom the bills never reach. That newspapers are the most valuable medium for advertising the public sale will be admitted be everyone that gives the matter a thought. The farmer of today thinks nothing of driving fifteen miles to a sale if in reading over the list of stock offered he sees some horses or cattle that he thinks would suit him, and it is these farmers that live several miles away from the sale that would learn of it from the bills but must depend upon the newspapers for information concerning it. A farmer sits in his home and reads in his paper a description of the property that someone at a considerable distance is offering and makes up his mind to attend, and that kind of a visitor to a public sale is worth a dozen who come with no definite intention of buying unless things are extremely cheap. The farmer who is going to have a sale should look well to the advertising proposition for more money is lost by those holding a public sale by advertising too little than is wasted by advertising too much."

Yours Respectfully,
Milton Pringle,
Buffalo Center, Iowa.

Drove All Night With Wife's Body

Pitiful Tale of Murder and Suicide Revealed Following Crime

The story of how Melvin Seefeldt, elderly farmer living near Wesley, killed his wife while in a rage over a domestic dispute, and then drove all night about the neighboring country with his wife's body in his automobile with him before committing suicide the next morning had gradually been brought to light since the bodies of the two were found last Wednesday.

Seefeldt, it appears, shot his wife with a shotgun Tuesday afternoon. He scrubbed the floor of the porch, which was bloodstained as a result of the crime, took his wife's body and buried in his farm yard, and then retrned to his house and got supper for a husking crew which was working for him.

After supper he exhumed the body, placed it in an automobile and started his grewsome wanderings. He evidently drove all night, passing thru Britt and Thompson, and stopping for gasoline at Britt.

He finaly stopped at the roadside between Wesley and Titonka the next morning, and shot himself.

He mailed a letter before he committed suicide, in which he told one of his sons what he had done of how he wished his property disposed of.

The funeral was held from the family home. They were buried in the same grave.

Double Wedding

Last week Wednesday afternoon the Jacob Groh home of the Kanawha neighborhood was the scene of a double wedding when their daughter, Miss Katherine. became the bride of Henry Nuehring, and their niece, Miss Louise Groh, was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur D. Knoke. The ceremony was performed at two o'clock before a large number of invited guests and Rev. Meyer of Belmond officiated.

All of the contracting young people are among the most popular of that neighborhood and enter their new relations with well wishes of a large circle of friends. Each of the grooms have farm homes prepared for their brides and the Times takes pleasure in joining with their many friends in wishing for them a very pleasant voyage over life's seas.

Two Runaways

Two runaways Monday livened up the monotony of local affairs. Fred Nuehring's team became scared while on the dump at the Lau elevator with a load of corn and ran from the elevator to the Frank Greutzmacher corner before they stopped. They scattered about 15 bushels of shelled corn from the elevator to where they stopped. At the present price of corn this means quite a loss to Mr Neuhring. Clark Bredbenner team took a notion to take a spin while the wagon was being loaded with junk in the rear of the Kirkwood restaurant in the afternoon but could not decide which side of one of the electric light poles that they wished to go and came to a very sudden halt after they had straddled the pole.

Because we have two eyes the things we see seem solid and not flat, with the result that we can judge their distance from us with fair correctness, says Popular Science Monthly. Look through a window at a house across the street with one eye closed, and then with the other eye closed. The bars of the window frame will cut across the opposite house in different places. The two fields seen with the eyes separately, although in the main alike, differ. When you look at the house with both eyes open the two fields seen by the two eyes are combined and the house across the street assumes depth and relief. Although we see a house with each eye we see only one house with both eyes. This makes the stereoscope possible—an instrument designed that the two eyes are made to converge on a single point and yet to see two different pictures. If these pictures represent a chair as it would appeal to the right and left eyes, respectively, they are perceived as one solid obect.

JONES AND MANSFIELD NEAR JOE MOORE HOME?

Woman Testifies on Night of the Ax Murders She Recognized Them and Others.

Red Oak, Ia., Nov. 25.—Mrs. Alice Willard, of Villisca, who testified yesterday in the Jones-Wilkerson damage suit, swore that on the night of the ax murders she was returning home from a drive and saw five men in close and earnest conversation near the Joe Moore home, where the eight people were slain, and that she recognized them to be Senator F. F. Jones, William Mansfield, W. B. McCaull, Harry Whipple and John Oviat.

The witness testified she was near enough to overhear a part of their conversation and that she heard talk of "money; after church; get Joe first, the rest will be easy." She testified that the first person she told the story to was Detective Wilkerson, many months after the crime; that she kept silence for fear of personal violence.

Dictaphone Plot Fails.

Following her talk with Wilkerson, Mrs. Willard related how she became interested in the case and made trips to Sioux City, where it was hoped to see John Oviat and bring him in touch with Wilkerson; also to Missouri Valley, where it had been arranged to get McCaull into a room in conversation while Wilkerson had a dictaphone in position for taking the conversation. In both instances she says she failed.

Mrs. Willard was on the stand most of the day.

W. R. Tilson, county treasurer of Nodaway county, Missouri, told of the visit of a man to his office the second day after the Villisca ax murders, who asked if any money had been left there for him. The witness testified the visitor gave the name of William Mansfield, and partly identified the Kansas City suspect by a peculiar mark on his neck and a photograph. The stranger acted like a dope fiend and said he was in Villisca the night of the murder.

Jones' son, A. V. Jones, was brought into the case by witnesses testifying to seeing him in Grant early on the morning of the murder.

The suspicious actions of two strangers seen near Villisca were related by witnesses.

M. Sully told of attending the Methodist church in Villisca on the Sunday evening of the murder and of seeing Senator Jones come in and take a rear seat when the exercises were just starting. He was carrying a cravenette on his arm, according to Sully's testimony. Mr. Jones left the church before the services were over, but returned after a brief interval.

MANY LAY CLAIM TO HUSKING CHAMPIONSHIP

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 25.—If James Wall, of Johnson county, isn't Iowa's champion cornhusker, he desires to know who is entitled to that gonfalon. He has husked, during the past week, from 140 to 157 bushels a day—working 10 hours daily. His farm is producing from 60 to 70 bushels to the acre.

A dispatch from Charter Oak states that Ed Keim, of that place, without the spur of a wager, made what is believed to be the husking record for that section of the country and which, his friends say, is the record for western Iowa. In nine hours and 15 minutes he husked and cribbed 134 bushels of corn.

That may be the husking record for Crawford county, but it will have to be just about doubled before Mr. Keim can claim the championship of western Iowa. On December 6, 1911, Bert Van Houten, of Sidney, in 10 hours husked 254 bushels and 50 pounds. Fremont county has held the world's championship in corn husking for the past 12 years. Ora Hopkins, of Farragut, in the fall of 1904 made a record of 217 bushels and 20 pounds in 10 hours, and Early Neely in 1911 a record of 231 bushels and 50 pounds.

Up at Wiota the other day a bunch of would be sports made a number of bets from $1 up to $20 that a man could not pick off the ground with one hand 200 bushels of corn in 10 hours, put it into a wagon and then scoop it into a crib. Shim Taylor, a restaurant man, turned the trick and won the $20.

WOODBURY COUNTY GIRL CHAMPION BEEF FEEDER

Ames, Ia., Nov. 25.—"Best baby beef feder in Woodbury county" was the title bestowed upon Alfreda Johns, aged 13, Moville, when it was announced that she had won first prize in her county in Iowa's great baby beef contest conducted by the Iowa Beef Producers' association in cooperation with the agricultural extension department of Iowa State college.

This girl wins a trip to the International Stock show at Chicago offered by the Union Stock Yards company. She and 32 other baby beef winners will meet at Ames December 3 and from there travel to Chicago for a week's visit under the guidance of E. C. Bishop, of the agricultural extension department at Ames.

The girl won her prize by feeding a Hereford steer from an initial weight last November of 370 pounds to a final weight of 685 pounds in 200 days. The calf made a total gain of 315 pounds, an average daily gain of 1.57 pounds, at a cost of $6 per hundredweight of gain. SHIPPERS CRIPPLED BY CAR SHORTAGE, CLAIM

Roads Refuse to Permit Cars to Leave Lines, Forcing Dealers to Unload Contents In Yards.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 22.—Many railroads of Iowa, owing to the car shortage, are refusing to permit freight cars to be turned over to other roads for placing on sidetrack for unloading, according to reports received by state officers.

Complaints of the new rule are being made by shippers at many points in Iowa. Des Moines is not affected owing to the fact that by agreement, all cars are returned to the various roads making claim on them, after being unloaded.

According to one report, a commission house was required to transfer a carload of potatoes sent from Colorado to Sioux City, and sold to a firm in Council Bluffs. The road bringing the potatoes into Iowa does not enter Council Bluffs and refused to permit its car to go farther than Sioux City.

In several cities, shippers say that although they have a sidetrack to their building, roads competing with the lines from which the branch extends, refuse to send cars for unloading. The railroad men say they are obliged to keep all the cars they now have in order to meet the demand. They claim that when they turn cars over to competing roads the cars never get back home again.

Coal operators in Iowa say they have received fair service from the railroads so far as to coal cars. None of the mines in the vicinity of Des Moines was required to shut down at any time in the last week for lack of cars, it is said. Every mine operator is trying to increase production owing to the good prices being offered.

To Expedite Appeal.

"The assistance of this court has been invoked to facilitate a final and au- thoritative determination of the con- stitutional question The case was presented but yesterday, and a decision is expected today It is far from being an agreeable duty for a judge to record a judicial conclusion without the care and deliberation essential to a con- viction that he would stand to in every circumstance Upon the merits of a case the government neither asks nor receives from a court greater consid- eration than is required by the settled rules and presumptions of law, but a request by the department of justice to aid the progress of a case consistent- ly with the rights of every one cannot be declined, certainly not for personal consideration.

EMBARGO ON FOOD NOT INTERNATIONAL MATTER--LANSING

State Department Holds Foreign Powers Would Have No Complaint If Exports Were Stopped.

UNLIKE MUNITIONS ISSUE

Action Could Be Construed Only as Measure of Public Safety —Federal Agents on Trail of Conspirators.

Washington Nov 24—"The department of state has no views on the subject of the proposed food embargo," Secretary Lansing said today "That is purely a domestic question."

The department, he said, has neither urged nor opposed nor discussed such embargo, and he does not think it concerns international relations in any way Such action, it is said, could hardly be objected to by any foreign government in view of the fact that they have taken such action where necessary for public safety.

No similarity could be drawn, it was said, between the proposed embargo and the shipments of munitions.

Federal Agents Unearth Plot to Advance Prices

Chicago, Nov 24.—A voluminous report, said to contain evidence of collusion between wholesale and retail dealers to advance the price of food products, was turned over to United States District Attorney Charles F. Clyne by Hinton G. Clabaugh, head of the local bureau of the department of justice, yesterday The report is the result of an investigation begun several weeks ago and the evidence will be presented to the special United States grand jury recently sworn in to inquire into the high cost of food.

The report is said to show the price of food sold to consumers has been raised in many instances without regard to the increased cost of production. One specific case is cited in the report where the cost of a certain food product was raised 1 cent a pound by the wholesalers, and the retailers immediately raised the price to consumers 5 cents a pound.

In conducting the investigation, special agents of the department of justice visited and interviewed consumers as well as wholesalers, retailers, manufacturers, producers, jobbers and farmers in a number of cities in the middle west.

The alleged collusion between the wholesale and retail dealers is said to have been carried on by means of circulars In this way prices are alleged to have been standardized.

Vigorous Action May Be Taken Against Coal Men

New York, Nov. 24.—Definite steps were taken here today by the federal, state and municipal authorities to ameliorate if possible the admittedly serious condition resulting from the steadily mounting cost of living.

Agents of the justice department virtually completed a thorough investigation into the increase in the price of coal, and a report is now in preparation for submission to Attorney General Gregory It was predicted that the report, which will include the result of investigations in the mining regions will result in vigorous action by the attorney generals of several states.

"The high cost of living is not due to the war, but to the cupidity of food speculators," said District Attorney Swann. But conspiracy in these cases is very hard to prove."

Mayor Mitchell announced that he will appeal to the legislature for relief.

CALL OF DUTY ENDS LOVE AFFAIR OF HELEN KELLER

Famous Blind Girl Breaks Off Engagement With Her Secretary, Thus Ending Her First Heart Romance to Remain With Her Mentor.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 23.—Helen Keller, the famous deaf, dumb and blind girl, whose intellectual prowess despite her handicaps has astonished the world, has abandoned a matrimonial career for the sake of the woman who has enabled her to learn to talk and offset her innate infirmities, Mrs. John A. Macy.

Miss Keller was engaged to Peter Fagan, a young socialist, who became acquainted with her while a reporter for a Boston newspaper and was employed by her as secretary. But romance came into her life much against the wishes of her mentor, Mrs. Macy, upon whom she is absolutely dependent for communication with the world, for the development of her powers of speech and observation, and to whom she is indebted practically for her life.

Mrs. Macy's opposition to her pupil's marriage was based not upon selfishness, but on realization that it would hinder the further development of a marvelous girl, and so the romance has been shattered. Fagan has sailed for Tampa, Fla.

A week ago Fagan took into his own confidence the editor of a Boston paper by which he had been employed and for which Mrs. Macy's husband had been literary editor. He told the editor that he and his employer were madly in love with each other, and that they desired to be married in secret. They planned a literary career, and Miss Keller was to abandon the lecture field, in which Mrs. Macy was her necessary interpreter.

Miss Keller, it is said, will leave for the Adirondacks shortly. Fagan was formerly a student at the University of Michigan, where he was known among his classmates as a radical and an advocate of extreme socialistic doctrines.

HUGHES CONCEDES WILSON ELECTION

Defeated Candidate Congratulates President—Willcox Says There Will Be No Contest —Pay Off Bets.

New York, Nov. 24.—Charles E. Hughes, republican candidate for president in the recent election, last night sent from Lakewood, N. J., to President Wilson a telegram congratulating him upon his reelection.

In his telegram Mr. Hughes said:

"Because of the closeness of the vote I have awaited the official count in California, and now it has been virtually completed permit me to extend to you my congratulations upon your reelection. I desire also to express my best wishes for a successful administration."

William R. Willcox, chairman of the republican national committee, issued the following statement in reference to Mr. Hughes' telegram to President Wilson

"Having conferred by telephone during the day and late this afternoon with the republican state committee and the republican national committeeman in California, I am informed that the official canvass of the vote has been so nearly completed that no change will result from the new precincts not counted in the returns thus far compiled.

Will Not Ask Recount.

"This means that the majority for the Wilson electors in California ranges from about 1,200 to 3,800 votes, and that this is the final result of the canvass for which we have been waiting. So far as any recount is concerned, the national committee is not advised that there are sufficient grounds to call for such an application."

Holders of some of the largest wagers made in Wall street on the presidential election began paying the bets today on the assumption that there now was no doubt President Wilson had been reelected.

Estimates of the sum wagered in the financial district range from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000. Probably half was paid within a week after election, but the balance was held by stakeholders pending a final agreement between bettors.

Fresno, Cal., Nov. 23.—Chester H. Rowell, republican national committeeman, last night issued a statement criticising Secretary of State Frank Jordan for his threat to withhold certificates of election to Wilson electors unless certain small discrepancies and omissions in the returns from Yuba and Orange counties were corrected. The omissions are trivial and would not affect the outcome either way, and Mr. Rowell said could not justify Jordan in withholding the certificates of the electors.

Washington, Nov. 23.—President Wilson today sent a telegram to Charles E. Hughes, acknowledging his message of congratulation received last night. The president's telegram said:

"I am sincerely obliged to you for your message of congratulation. Allow me to assure you of my good wishes for the years to come."

After the president had telegraphed to Mr. Hughes the White House made public several thousand telegrams of congratulation from cabinet members, governors of states, democratic leaders in practically every state, and from the presidents of several Latin-American republics. No messages were received from any of the belligerent nations.

Replying to the congratulations of the cabinet, the president said:

"One of the best things about the result is that it means four years more of active association in public service and in that we are genuinely rejoiced."

This was taken by some to forecast an invitation from the president to the members of the cabinet to remain in office.

Former Secretary Bryan telegraphed:

"I am proud of the west, including Nebraska. The states beyond the Missouri have rallied to your support and saved the day and in doing so have honored themselves no less than you. They have been largely benefitted by the great reforms secured under your leadership and they stand with you for peace, prosperity and progress."

JORDAN STANDS PAT.

Sacramento, Cal., Nov. 23.—Secretary of State Frank C. Jordan reiterated today his determination to insist on full returns from all precincts of the state before certifying to the vote for presidential electors from California. He also assails Chester H. Rowell, chairman of the republican state central committee, of Fresno, and others who have been quoted as criticising his stand as absurd.

IRON MONEY WILL BE USED IN SCANDINAVIA

Copenhagen, (via London), Nov. 23.—The National Tidende says that as a result of negotiations between Denmark, Sweden and Norway, iron money is shortly to be issued in place of copper coin, in two and five ore pieces. These coins hitherto have been made from copper plates imported from England, but the export of these was recently stopped, owing, it is stated; to the British belief that large quantities of the copper had reached Germany.

GREECE DECLINES TO GIVE UP ARMS

Claims That to Comply With Entente Demands Would Be Unneutral Act, Says Dispatch.

London, Nov. 24.—The Greek government has refused to comply with the demand of the entente allies for the surrender of part of its supplies of arms and ammunition, Reuter's Athens correspondent cables.

The dispatch follows:

"The Greek government has refused the demands of Vice Admiral Du Fournet that Greece surrender 18 field batteries, 16 batteries of mountain artillery with 1,000 shells for each, 40,000 Mannlichers with 220 cartridges each, 14 machine guns with ammunition and 50 motor vans.

"Referring to Admiral Du Fournet's contention that the cession of war material to the Bulgarians and Germans had disturbed the equilibrium, the government replies that although it does not desire to enter into the details of that operation, it must point out that the cabinet then in power could not approve of resistance to the central powers without abandoning neutrality, but duly protested. It also contends that the guns already taken by the entente are modern, while those taken by Bulgaria were obsolete.

"The reply concludes that the surrender of war material for financial compensation or otherwise would constitute a flagrant violation of neutrality and moreover that public opinion would not admit of the forces of Greece being so neutralized as to be unable to defend her vital interests if these were endangered."

WITHDRAWAL ADMITTED.

Bucharest, (via London), Nov. 23.—The Rumanian troops in the Jiul valley in western Wallachia have been withdrawn and now occupy their old positions, the war office announced today.

In the Alt valley the statement says the Rumanians have maintained their positions.

ATTACKS ARE REPULSED.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Nov. 23.—An attack by the British yesterday on the Somme front near Gueudecourt and one by the French in the vicinity of St. Pierre Vaast wood were without success, it was announced officially.

SHELL BRITISH LINES.

London, Nov. 23.—"During the night the enemy shelled our new front on both sides of the Ancre and in the neighborhod of Hebuterne," says today's official report from the Franco-Belgian front. "Otherwise, there is nothing to report."

ALLIES FALL BACK.

Berlin, Nov. 23, (by wireless to Sayville).—The entente forces that have been engaged with German-Bulgarian troops on the Macedonian front in the region east of Lake Ochrida, west of Monastir, have fallen back, the war office announced today.

MORE RUSSIANS ARRIVE.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Nov. 23.—Russian reinforcements have arrived on the Transylvanian front, the war office reports.

BRITONS MUST HOLD DOWN FOOD IMPORTS

Runciman Prevails Upon Hotels to Cut Out Expensive Holiday Menus.

London, Nov. 24.—Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade, addressing a meeting of leading London hotel keepers last night demanded an immediate curtailment of menus. He declared that there must be an immediate and drastic cutting down and a decrease in the use of imported foods.

"I have just seen," he said, "a specimen of a Christmas menu which is being circulated as an advertisement by a leading London hotel. Such an elaborate program would be wasteful even in peace time and is little short of scandalous in war time. Such a situation cannot be allowed. All menus must be drastically cut down and there must be one or two fishless and meatless days weekly.

"There must be an immediate decrease in the use of imported foods. Waste is especially noticeable in the use of expensive cakes and confections. If the trade interests will not take the necessary action, the government must force them to do so."

SLAY MORE ARMENIANS.

BERLIN FORESEES TENSE RELATIONS OVER SUBMARINES

United States Has Filed Ten or More Complaints With Germany, Most of Which Are Unanswered.

ANTICIPATE DIFFICULTIES

German Officials Intimate They Are Prepared to Defend Acts Which Uncle Sam Complains Of.

Berlin, Tuesday, Nov. 21, (by wireless to the Associated Press via Sayville, Nov 24.)—A period of complications may again be impending in the German-American relations. Germany's conduct of submarine warfare has brought forth a new crop of inquiries of which Joseph C. Grew, the American charge, recently has filed no less than 10 cases, five of them today.

Six remain to be answered including the cases of the Marina, on which a number of Americans appear to have been killed and the liner Arabia, the sinking of which the American government says appears to be inconsistent with the promises of the German government in the treatment of passenger liners.

The United States bases its attitude in the case of the Arabia on the assumption that it was unarmed and torpedoed without warning, and is unable to say that there was adequate justification for forcing the passengers into the boats. Washington believes the submarine commander on ascertaining there were women and children on the decks should have refrained from making an attack.

Germany in the four cases in regard to which replies already have been made was found to have fairly convincing answers, which, it is believed, may put quite a different aspect on affairs. It is pointed out here, for example, that according to the testimony of her own passengers, the Arabia was armed and used her cannon, that the sea was smooth and that other vessels were near. It is argued that the Arabia, having on board a large number of coolie war workers, should be regarded as a transport.

WASHINGTON ON ALERT.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The wording of the Berlin dispatch that a "period of complications may be pending in German-American relations, aroused much interest in official circles, especially as the dispatch was allowed to pass a very strict censorship.

Officials refused to discuss details of the inquiries sent to Berlin, on the ground that they were only inquiries for facts and would have a very bad effect on public opinion if an alarm were given, only to be shown groundless.

Many of these cases now being investigated, it is admitted, may fail to develop any violation of Germany's pledges, but some are known to be serious.

In the Marina case, American affidavits seem conclusive, but no action will be taken until Germany's reply has been received.

WILSON MAY BACK COMPULSION PLAN

Reported President Has Been Converted to Universal Military Service For the United States.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 24.—Advocates of universal military training are not only preparing to work hard in and out of congress this winter, but they are greatly encouraged over developments.

A declaration by the Navy League of the United States that President Wilson will advocate universal military training coincides with the opinion of well informed men here that the president is leaning toward universal training, or at least has become convinced that the volunteer system cannot be depended on for preparedness.

Secretary Baker, of the war department, who has been attacked for wanting military training in public schools, by the anti-preparedness elements in the American Federation of Labor, is inclining more and more toward universal training, according to army men.

With Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the Senate military committee, preparing to push a universal training plan this winter, and many others in congress converted to it and with anti-preparedness exponents active, it is clear that a bitter controversy is ahead over this subject.

CONCESSIONS ARE WRUNG FROM CZAR

Nature of the Recent Compact With Duma Not Yet Known —Separate Peace Talk At an End.

Petrograd, Nov. 22—(Delayed.)—Favorable developments in the last few days which witnessed the recovery of Russia from a most serious political crisis make it now possible to describe briefly events which brought about a collision between the government and the duma The crisis was an inevitable clash between the present cabinet and the insistence of public opinion which more and more loudly against the government

The Associated Press is informed on the best authority that an agreement had been reached which has satisfied the representatives of the people. The nature of this agreement probably will be disclosed in the course of a few days. The event is interpreted generally as a victory for the duma Its chief significance is the political awakening of the nation and the development of real public consciousness, which for perhaps the first time in Russian history has become articulate and can be ignored no longer. Among the effects expected from the present agreement is the final burial of all rumors of a separate peace The gravity of the recent crisis is indicated by an article in the Russkiva Vedemonti, of Moscow, which is permitted to publish an unusually candid analysis of the situation This newspaper states

"The crisis in obtaining supplies and the experiments in remedying the situation, the present status of foreign politics, the new limitations of the press, dark rumors and dark facts which are making the masses of the population nervous—all these are only single aspects of the question. Events clearly foretell a collision between the interests of the country and the present system of government. The disorganization to which the country has been brought at a critical moment, when occupied with an enemy without, is final judgment upon the existing order"

HUGE HOSPITAL SHIP SUNK; 50 LIVES LOST

Brittanic, Largest Craft of Her Kind Afloat, Goes Down In Aegean.

Athens, Nov 23.—(via London)—The White Star line steamship Brittanic, serving as a hospital ship for wounded soldiers of the entente allies has been torpedoed and sunk, according to an official announcement made here today

London, Nov. 23.—The British hospital ship Britannic has been sunk, with the loss of about 50 lives, says a British official announcement, today.

The Brittanic was sunk by a mine or a torpedo yesterday morning in the Aegean sea, according to the official statement. There were 1,106 survivors, of whom about 28 were injured. Full particulars of the disaster, it is announced, will be published as soon as they are received.

It was reported in a special dispatch from London on December 6, last, that the 47,000-ton White Star liner Brittanic, then recently completed, would be used as a hospital ship by the British government, making her the largest hospital ship in commission, with an equipment of 6,000 beds.

SCHOOL CONSOLIDATION

The matter of general education in this country has reached a point where more and serious conconsideration will have to be given the question of consolidation of rural schools..

Of one fact there can be no question, our country has reached a period in its history when its people must be given education. Ignorance and illiteracy are no longer compatible with twentieth century life.

Every person at all familiar with conditions under which the country schools are maintained, knows that under these conditions it is absurd to even hope that a child may obtain a competent education therein. With a school house to every two or three miles of territory, dividing up the attendance and multiplying the number of teachers, two unavoidable consequences result–terms are shortened and inferior teacters are employed.

It is a fact, patent to all intelligent observers, that to attain to any proficiency in teaching, the person must choose this as his or her life work, and must labor to equip themselves for efficient service. To this end there must be sufficient inducement. The utter absurdity of a three or four months term at $25 or $30 per month furnishing that inducement, is plain to all.

One of our greatest possible detriments to the proper education of a child is an incompetent teacher, and that the conditions just discribed are fast flooding the land with a lot of incompetents is plain to all. And the child is the sufferer. Where he should be rightly and thoroughly grounded in all the different branches, in reality he frequently has but an imperfect, and sometimes even a wrong ground-mark to build on, the results of which are seen in the woefully inefficient lives of so many of our people.

Again, it is too plain even for argument, that no community can educate its children on three and four months terms of school. Practically the entire accumulations of the short term are forgotten during the long vacation.

There are, then, two indisputable requisites to the proper education of our rural population competent instructors and school terms sufficiently long. Of course, in the densely populated districts, schools can be maintained of sufficient size to guarantee the length of term, as this depends almost entirely on the per capita, and given the term, with an adequate salary, the competent teacher is easily secured and the children's best interests conserved.

But in the sparsely settled districts this is not the case, and here arises the imperative need of consolidation–reducing the number of schools, thereby increasing the funds available for each. thus insuring the desired results of a longer term and more competent teachers.

As to just how consolidation may best be accomplished, must be left almost entirely to local conditions to determine. The public conveyance plan is working well in many sections. The developement of good roads is also having a beneficial effect and aiding in the solution. But as we stated, this is entirely a local question and must be worked out locally.

The important point is that the people be brought to see the absolute necessity for sufficient consolidation of our schools to accomplish the desired results. Given this convicition, we have no fears but the solution of the problem of ways and means will be worked out.

——O——

SPEAKING OF ELECTIONS

Many the national election nowadays whose issue is determined–and determined correctly–two or three hours after the closing of the polls, so that before they go to bed the nominees and all their friends know just how grateful to be towad Providence and the Great American People. In 1916 we have been treated to a different sort of experience, and though the candidates went to bed duly elated and depressed, each in accordance with his party fortunes, they were noisily awakened. So it was in 1876, when only thirty-eight states were voting, instead of forty-eight; then, too, by a coincidence, election fell on November 7, and one reads in Mr. Edward Stanwood's "History of the Presidency" that "the returns came in so unfavorably for the Republicans that there was hardly a newspaper organ of the party that did not, on the following morning, concede the election of Mr. Tilden." In the end the question whether our nineteenth president should be Tilden or Hayes hung on the single vote let us hope that the country will never again be so severely tested in political sanity, and that so grave a pressure of corruption will never again be exerted, from both sides, against individual members of the Electoral College. In 1796 John Adams was chosen over Jefferson by but three electoral votes; in 1800 Jefferson and Burr were tied in the College with 73 votes each, and it was the House of Representatives which seated Jefferson–but in the Tilden-Hayes contest the Democratic aspirant not only lost out by the smallest conceivable majority, but he was also able to point to the fact that he had received over a quarter million more ballots than Hayes. Mr. Cleveland's plurality of 98,017 votes over Benjamin Harrison in 1888 (when, however, he received only 168 electoral votes to Harrison's 233) was a less striking case, but more of us remember it. The choice of our presidents by the Electoral College, and not by the direct majority vote of the people, is a reminder of the fact that we are, after all, a federation of sovereign States–an international organism which has found a way of fighting at the polls and in the court room rather than on the battle field. Will there be, in due season, that United States of Europe of which idealists are beginning to talk–and in 2016 will its electoral college be sitting to determine whether a Frenchman or a Russian or a Teuton has been elected president of their United States?

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. No one would think of riding in a freight car if he could enjoy the comfort of a big, comfortable easy riding Pullman parlor car.

So with automobiles. Most of the popular priced cars ride like freight cars. This is due to the old fashioned type of spring.

Many manufacturers still continue to use them.

The Overland does not. The 75 B Overland has the latest type of cantilever shock absorbing springs. As a result it is one of the easiest riding cars in the world.

COW TESTING WORK

North Iowa has proven itself to be a most suitable place for dairying, and with the rapidly increasing number of cows will be kept and a much larger amount of milk will be produced The producing quality of the cows kept for service will have a large bearing on the profits received. For the purpose of weeding out the inferior animals, and bringing the herd up to the highest profit, the extension department of the Ames Agricultural College is interesting farmers in the organization of cow testing associations. Two of these associations have been at work in this county and the reports given out have been very favorable. One of our subscribers, Mr. J. T Galford of Union township, is a member of one of these associations, and his experience, we beleive will be helpful to others who may be considering going into an association. Mr. Galford says:

"I am a member of the Klemme cow testing association. This association was organized by Mr. Howard C. Barker and is in the second year of its work. The work in the main I think has been very satisfactory. In the re-organization of the association this spring, some of the old members dropped out, but enough new ones were added to make the full compliment of twenty-six. This enables the man in charge of the work to visit each member once each month, and from samples obtained from the night and mornings milking the tester obtains his samples and makes his tests, and from this test makes his computations of amount of milk for the month, cost of feed, amount of butterfat, and profit and loss from each cow. At the end of each month each member can know definitely what his cows are doing. It enables a man to become acquainted with his cows and know which ones are profitable and which are not. I think every one who is interested in dairying, and wants to build up a good milking herd would derive great benefit from a cow testing association. It would enable him to weed out his herd and get better cows. Some eight or ten families can organize with a president, secretary and treasurer. Then the work has only begun. It is necessary to have at least twenty-six members with an average number of cows from each of about thirteen. The herds probably from twenty-six members would not average more than that number. This would give about 340 cows at $1.50, would give about $500 together with a membership fee of $1.00 would be sufficient to cover all expenses for the year. I regard the work, so far as my personal benefit, to be of very great value, and not as great to me as it would have been were not for the fact that for years we had been weighing and testing our milk and know to a certainty what each cow is doing. Every dairyman who becomes interested in his cows to the extent of weighing the milk daily and keeping a record of it will realize the importance of this work at the end of the year. Breifly this is the outline of the work. Mr. Howard C. Barker of Ames, who has charge of the extension work along this line, will gladly give you definite information on the subject.

Very truly yours,
J. T. GALFORD.

When Pigs Go Down In the Back

and drag their hind quarters as a result of paralysis or loss of control of the muscles by the nerves, they need attention.

This condition is brought about by poor care or the feeding of improper food. (It is most common during the late winter or spring.)

In the large majority of cases this can be prevented. Plenty of exercise and the feeding of the proper ration is the best preventive.

As soon as the symptoms develop, the animal should be separated from the rest of the herd. A light diet should be fed. As constipation is a prominent symptom in this disease, the bowels should be kept loose by feeding plenty of Standard Hog Regulator. We have neve known of a case of paralysis in a herd that was fed Standard Hog Regulator regularly. We are ready to supply you.

CHAPTER VIII—(Continued.)

Softly, reverently, he stooped and brought his face close to the opening in the curtains. Celia felt his eyes upon her. Her own were closed, and by a superhuman effort she controlled her breathing, slowly, gently, as if she were asleep.

He looked for a long moment thrilled by the delicate beauty of her sleeping face, filled with an intoxicating joy to see that her lips were no longer white, then, turning reverently away, he unlocked the door and stepped forth.

The other occupants of the car were still wrapped in slumber. Loud snores of various kinds and qualities testified to that. A dim light at the further end contended luridly, and losingly, with the daylight now flooding the outside world and creeping mischievously into the transoms.

Gordon closed the door of the compartment noiselessly and went down the aisle to the end of the car.

A door was open, and he could hear voices outside. The conductor stood talking with two brakemen. He heard the words: "Three-quarters of an hour at least," and then the men walked off toward the engine.

Gordon looked across the country, and for the first time since he started on his journey let himself remember that it was springtime and May.

There had been a bitter wind the night before, with a hint of rain in the air. In fact, it had rained quite smartly during the ride to the hospital with the hurt child, but he had been so perturbed that he had taken little notice of the weather. But this was a radiant morning.

The sun was in one of its most charming moods, when it touches everything with a sort of unnatural glory after the long winter of darkness and cold. Every tree trunk in the distance seemed to stand out clearly, every little grass-blade was set with a glowing jewel, and the winding stream across a narrow valley fairly blazed with brightness. The very road with its deep, clean wheel-grooves seemed like a well taken photograph.

The air had an alluring softness mingled with its tang of winter that made one long to take a walk anywhere out into the world just for the joy of being and doing. A meadow lark shot up from somewhere to a telegraph pole, let go its blithe note and hurried on. It was glorious. The exhilaration filled Gordon's blood.

And here was the chance he craved to slip away from the train before it reached a place where he could be discovered if he had but thought to bring his suitcase! He could slip back now without being noticed and get it! He could even go without it! But he could not leave her that way could he? Ought he? Perhaps he ought. But it would not do to leave his suit-case with her, for it contained letters addressed to his real name. An explanation would of course be demanded, and he could not satisfy his own conscience, which he knew he never could. He simply could not leave her and yet he must get away from that train as soon as possible. Perhaps this was the only opportunity he would have before reaching Buffalo and it was very risky indeed dangerous, to dare enter Buffalo. It was a foregone conclusion that there would be private detectives ready to meet the train in Buffalo with full descriptions and particulars and only too ready to make way with him if they could do so without being found out. He looked nervously back at the door of the car. Dared he attempt to waken her and say that they had made a mistake and must change cars? Was she well enough? And where could they go?

He looked off toward the landscape for answer to his question.

They were decidedly in the country. The train stood at the top of a high embankment of cinders, below which was a smooth country road running parallel to the railroad for some distance till it met another road at right angles to it, which stretched away between thrifty meadow-lands to a nestling village. The glorified stream he had first noticed far up the valley grew narrower here in the morning light, with a suggestion of watercress and forget-me-nots in its fringes as it veered away under a bridge toward the village and hid itself in a tangle of willows and cat-tails.

How easy it would be to slide down that embankment and walk out that road over the bridge to the village, where of course a conveyance of some sort could be hired to bear him to another railroad town and thence to—Pittsburgh, perhaps, where he could easily get a train to Washington. How easily if only he were not held by some invisible hands to care for the sweet sleeper inside the car! And yet, for her sake as well as his own, he must do something, and that right speedily.

He was standing thus in deep meditation, looking off at the little village which seemed so near and yet would be so far for her to walk when he was pervaded with that strange sense of some one near. For an instant he resisted the desire to lift his eyes and prove to himself that no one was present in a doorway which a moment before he knew had been unoccupied. Then, frowning at his own nervousness, he turned.

She stood there in all the beauty of her fresh young girlhood, a delicate pallor on her cheeks, and a deep sadness in her great dark eyes, which were fixed upon him intently, in a sort of puzzled study. She was fully dressed, even to her hat and gloves. Every wave of her golden hair lay exquisitely in place under the purple hat, as though she might have taken an hour or two at her toilet; yet she had made it with excited haste, and with trembling fingers, determined to have it accomplished before the return of her dreaded liege lord.

She had sprung from her berth the instant he closed the door upon her, and fastened the little catch to bar him out. She had dashed cold water into her face, fastened her garments hurriedly, and tossed the glory of her hair into place with a few touches and what hairpins she could find on the floor. Then putting on her hat, coat, and gloves, she had followed him into the outer air. She had a feeling that she must have air to breathe or she would suffocate. A wild desire filled her to go alone into the great out-of-doors. Oh, if she but dared to run away from him! But that she might not do, for all his threats would then probably be made good by him upon her dear mother and brother. No, she must be patient and bear to the end all that was set down for her. But she would get out and breathe a little before he returned. He had very likely gone into the smoker. She remembered that the George of old had been an inveterate smoker of cigarets. She would have time for a taste of the morning while he had his smoke. And if he returned and found her gone what mattered it? The inevitable beginning of conversations which she so dreaded would be put off for a time.

She never thought to come upon him standing thus alone, looking off at the beauty of the morning as if he enjoyed it. The sight of him held her still, watching, as his sleeping face had held her gaze earlier in the morning. How different he was from what she had expected! How the 10 years had changed him! One could almost fancy it might have changed his spirit also—but for those letters—those terrible letters! The writer of those letters could not change, except for the worse!

And yet, he was handsome, intellectual looking, kindly in his bearing, appreciative of the beauty about him—she could not deny it. It was most astonishing. He had lost that baggy look under his eyes, and the weak, selfish, cruel pout of lip she remembered so keenly.

Then he turned, and a smile of delight and welcome lit up his face. In spite of herself, she could not keep an answering smile from glimmering faintly in her own.

"What! You up and out here?" he said, hastening closer to the step. "How are you feeling this morning? Better, I'm sure, or you would not be here so early."

"Oh, I had to get out to the air," she said. "I couldn't stand the car another minute. I wish we could walk the rest of the way."

"Do you?" he said, with a quick, surprised appreciation in his voice. "I was just wishing something like that myself. Do you see that beautiful straight road down there? I was longing to slide down this bank and walk over to that little village for breakfast. Then we could get an auto, perhaps, or a carriage, to take us on to another train. If you hadn't been so ill last night, I might have proposed it."

"Could we?" she asked earnestly. "I should like it so much," and there was eagerness in her voice. "What a lovely morning!" Her eyes were wistful, like the eyes of those who weep and wonder why they may not laugh, since sunshine is still yellow.

"Of course we could," he said, "if you were only able."

"Oh, I'm able enough. I should much much rather do that than to go back into that stuffy car. But wouldn't they think it awfully queer of us to run away from the train this way?"

"They needn't know anything about it," he declared, like a boy about to play truant. "I'll slip back in the car and get our suit cases. Is there anything of yours I might be in danger of leaving behind?"

"No, I put everything in my suit case before I came out," she said, listlessly, as though she had already lost her desire to go.

"I'm afraid you are not able," he said, pausing solicitously as he scaled the steps.

She was surprised at his interest in her welfare.

"Why, of course I am," she said, insistently. "I have often taken longer walks than that looks to be, and I shall feel much better for being out. I really feel as if I couldn't stand it any longer in there."

"Good! Then we'll try it!"

He hurried in for the baggage and left her standing on the cinder roadbed beside the train looking off at the opening morning.

CHAPTER IX.

It was just at that instant that the thick set man in his berth not 10 feet away became broadly conscious of the unwonted stillness of the train and the cessation of motion that had lulled him to such sound repose. So does a tiny, sharp sound strike upon our senses and bring them into life again from sleep, making us aware of a state of things that has been going on for some time perhaps without our realization. The sound that roused him may have been the click of the stateroom latch as Gordon opened the door.

The shades were down in the man's berth and the curtains drawn close. The daylight had not as yet penetrated through their thickness. But once awake his senses were immediately on the alert. He yawned, stretched and suddenly arrested another yawn to analyze the utter stillness all about him. A sonorous snore suddenly emphasized the quiet of the car, and made him aware of all the occupants of all those curtained apartments. His mind went over a quick resume of the night before, and detailed him at once to duty.

Another soft clicking of the latch set him to listening and his bristly shocked head was stuck instantly out between the curtains into the aisle, eyes toward the stateroom door, just in time to see that a man was stealing quietly down the passageway out of the end door, carrying two suit cases and an umbrella. It was his man. He was sure instantly, and his mind grew frantic with the thought. Almost he had outdone himself through foolish sleep.

He half sprang from his berth, then remembered that he was but partly dressed, and jerked back quickly to grab his clothes, stopping in the operation of putting them on to yank up his window shade with an impatient click and flatten his face against the window pane.

Yes, there they were down on the ground outside the train, both of them: man, woman, baggage and all slipping away from him while he slept peacefully and let them go! The language of his mind at that point was hot with invectives.

Gordon had made his way back to the girl's side without meeting any porters or wakeful fellow passengers. But a distant rumbling greeted his ears. The waited for express was coming. If they were to get away, it must be done at once or their flight would be discovered, and perhaps even prevented. It certainly was better not to have it known where they got off. He had taken the precaution to close the stateroom door behind him, and so it might be some time before their absence would be discovered. Perhaps there would be other stops before the train reached Buffalo, in which case their track would not easily be followed. He had no idea that the evil eye of his pursuer was even then upon him.

Celia was already on the ground, looking off toward the little village wistfully. Just how it was to make her lot any brighter to get out of the train and run away to a strange little village she did not quite explain to herself, but it seemed to be a relief to her pent up feelings. She was half afraid that George might raise some new objection when he returned.

Gordon swung himself down on the cinder path, scanning the track either way. The conductor and brakemen were not in sight. Far in the distance a black speck was rushing down upon them. Gordon could hear the vibration of the rail of the second track, upon which he placed his foot as he helped Celia across. In a moment more the train would pass. It was important that they should be down the embankment, out of sight. Would the delicate girl not be afraid of the steep incline?

She hesitated for just an instant at the top, for it was very steep. Then, looking up at him, she saw that he expected her to go down with him. She gave a little frightened gasp, set her lips and started.

He held her as well as he could with two suitcases and an umbrella clutched in his other hand, and finally, as the grade grew steeper, he let go the baggage altogether, and it slid briskly down by itself, while he devoted himself to steadying the girl's now inevitable and swift descent.

It certainly was not an ideal way of traveling, this new style of "gravity" road, but it landed them without delay, though much shaken and scratched and divested of every vestige of dignity. It was impossible not to laugh and Celia's voice rang out merrily, showing that she had not always wept and looked sorrowful.

"Are you hurt?" asked Gordon anxiously, holding her hands and looking down at her tenderly.

Before she could reply, the express train roared above them, drowning their voices and laughter; and when it was past they saw their own train take up its interrupted way grumblingly, and rapidly move off. If the passengers on those two trains had not been deeply wrapped in slumber, they might have been surprised to see two fashionably attired young persons, with hats awry and clasped hands, laughing in a country road at 5 o'clock of a May morning. But only one was awake, and by the time the two in the road below remembered to look up and take notice, the trains were rapidly disappearing.

The girl had been deeply impressed with Gordon's solicitude for her. It was so out of keeping with his letters. He had never seemed to care whether she suffered or not. In all the arrangements, he had said what he wanted, indeed what he would have, with an implied threat in the framing of his sentence in case she dared demur. Never had there been the least expression of desire for her happiness. Therefore it was something of a surprise to find him so gentle and thoughtful of her. Perhaps, after all, he would not prove so terrible to live with as she had feared. And yet—how could anyone who wrote those letters have any alleviating qualities? It could not be. She must harden herself against him. Still, if he would be outwardly decent to her, it would make her lot easier, of course.

But her course of mental reasoning was broken in upon by his stout denunciations of himself.

"I ought not to have allowed you to slide down there," he declared. "It was terrible, after what you went through last night. I didn't realize how steep and rough it was. Indeed I didn't. I don't see how you ever can forgive me."

"Why, I'm not hurt," she said gently, astonished at his solicitation. There was a strange lump in her throat brought by his kindness, which threatened tears. Just why should kindness from an unexpected quarter bring tears?

"I'm only a little shaken up," she went on as she saw a real anxiety in his brown eyes, "and I don't mind it in the least. I think it was rather fun, don't you?"

A faint glimmer of a smile wavered over the corners of her mouth, and Gordon experienced a sudden desire to take her in his arms and kiss her. It was a strange new feeling. He had never had any such thought about Julia Bentley.

"Why, I—why, yes, I guess so, if you are sure you're not hurt."

"Not a bit," she said, and then, for some unexplained reason, they both began to laugh. After that they felt better.

"If your shoes are as full of these miserable cinders as mine are, they need emptying," declared Gordon, shaking first one well shod foot and then the other, and looking ruefully at the little velvet boots of the lady.

"Suppose you sit down"—he looked about for a seat, but the dewy grass was the only resting place visible. He pitched upon the suitcases and improvised a chair. "Now, sit down and let me take them off for you."

He knelt in the road at her feet as she obeyed, protesting that she could do it for herself. But he overruled her, and began clumsily to unbutton the tiny buttons, holding the timid little foot firmly, almost reverently, against his knee.

He drew the velvet shoe softly off, and, turning it upside down, shook out the intruding cinders, put a clumsy finger in to make sure they were all gone, then shyly, tenderly, passed his hand over the sole of the fine, silk stockinged foot that rested so lightly on his knee, to make sure no cinders clung to it. The sight and touch of that little foot stirred him deeply. He had never before been called upon to render service so intimate to any woman, and he did it now with half averted gaze and the utmost respect in his manner. As he did it he tried to speak about the morning, the departing train, the annoying cinders, anything to make their unusual position seem natural and unstrained. He felt deeply embarrassed, the more so because of his own double part in this queer masquerade.

Celia sat watching him, strangely stirred. Her wonder over his kindness grew with each moment, and her prejudices almost dissolved. She could not understand it. There must be something more he wanted of her, for George Hayne had never been kind in the past unless he wanted something of her.

She dreaded lest she should soon find it out. Yet he did not look like a man who was deceiving her. She drew a deep sigh. If only it were true, and he were good and kind, and had never written those awful letters! How good and dear it would be to be tenderly cared for this way! Her lips dropped at the corners, and her eyelids drooped in company with the sigh; then Gordon looked up in great distress.

"You are tired!" he declared, pausing in his attempt to fasten the little pearl buttons. "I have been cruel to let you get off the train!"

"Indeed I'm not," said the girl, brightening with sudden effort. At least, she would not spoil the kindness while it lasted. It was surely better than what she had feared.

"You never can button those shoes with your fingers," she laughed, as he redoubled his efforts to capture a tiny disc of pearl and set it into its small velvet socket. "Here! I have a buttonhook in my hand-bag. Try this."

She produced a small silver instrument from a gold-link bag on her arm and handed it to him. He took it helplessly, trying first one end and then the other, and succeeding with neither.

"Here, let me show you," she laughed, pulling off one glove. Her white fingers grasped the silver button hook, and flashed in and out of the velvet holes, knitting the little shoe to the foot in no time. He watched the process in humble wonder, and she would not have been a human girl not to have been flattered with his interest and admiration. For the minute she forgot who and what he was, and let her laugh ring out merrily; and so with shy audacity he assayed to take off the other shoe.

They really felt quite well acquainted and as if they were going on a day's picnic, when they finally gathered up their belongings and started down the road. Gordon summoned all his ready wit and intellect to brighten the walk for her, though he found himself again and again on the brink of referring to his Washington life, or some other personal matter that would have brought a wondering question to her lips. He had decided that he must not tell her who he was until he could put her in an independent position, where she could get away from him at once if she chose. He was bound to look after her until he could place her in good hands, or at least where she could look after herself, and it was better to carry it out leaving her to think what she pleased until he could tell her everything. If all went well, they might be able to catch a Pittsburgh train that night and be in Washington the next day. Then, his message delivered, he would tell her the whole story. Until then he must hold his peace.

They went gaily down the road, the girl's pale cheeks beginning to flush with the morning and the exercise. She was not naturally delicate, and her faint the night before had been the result of a series of heavy strains on a heart burdened with terrible fear. The morning and his kindness had made her forget for the time that she was supposed to be walking into a world of dread and sacrifice.

"The year's at the spring,
The day's at the morn," quoted Gordon gaily.

"Morning's at seven;
The hill-side's dew-pearled—"

He waved an umbrella off to where a hill flashed back a thousand lights from its jeweled grass-blades thickly set.

"The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn," went on Celia suddenly catching his spirit, and pointing to a lark that darted up into the blue with a trill of the morning in his throat.

Gordon turned appreciative eyes upon her. It was good to have her take up his favorite poet in that tone of voice—a tone that showed she too knew and loved Browning.

"God in His heaven, All's right with the world," finished Gordon in a quieter voice, looking straight into her eyes. "That seems very true today, doesn't it?"

The blue eyes wavered with a hint of shadow in them as they looked back into the brown ones.

"Almost—perhaps," she faltered wistfully.

The young man wished he dared go behind that "almost perhaps" and find out what she meant, but concluded it were better to bring back the smile and help her to forget for a little while at least.

Down by the brook they paused to rest under a weeping willow, whose green-tinged plumes were dabbling in the brook. Gordon arranged the suitcases for her to sit upon, then climbed down to the brookside and gathered a bunch of forget-me-nots, blue as her eyes and brought them to her.

She looked at them in wonder, to think they grew out here, wild, untended. She had never seen them before, except in pots in the florist's windows. She touched them delicately with the tips of her fingers, as if they were too ethereal for earth, then fastened them in the breast of her gown.

"They exactly match your eyes!" he exclaimed involuntarily, and then wished he had not spoken, for she flushed and paled under his glance, until he felt he had been unduly bold. He wondered why he had said that. He never had been in the habit of saying pretty things to girls, but this girl somehow called it from him. It was genuine. He sat a moment abashed, not knowing what to say next, as if he were a shy boy, and she did not help him, for her eyelashes dropped in a long becoming sweep over her cheeks, and she seemed for the moment not to be able to carry off the situation. He was not sure if she were displeased or not.

Her heart had thrilled strangely as he spoke, and she was vexed with herself that it should be so. A man who had bullied and threatened her for three terrible months and forced her to marry him had no right to a thrill of her heart nor a look from her eyes, be he ever so kind for the moment. He certainly was nice and pleasant when he chose to be, she must watch herself, for never, never, must she yield weakly to his smooth overtures. Well did she know him. He had some reason for all this pleasantness. It would surely be revealed soon.

She stiffened her lips and tried to look away from him to the purply green hills, but the echo of his words came upon her again, and again her heart thrilled at them. What if—oh what if he were all right, and she might accept the admiration in his voice? And yet how could that be possible? The sweet color came into her cheeks again, and the tears flew quickly to her eyes, till they looked all sky and dew, and she dared not turn back to him.

The silence remained unbroken, until a lark in the willow copse behind them burst forth into song and broke the spell that was upon them.

"Are you offended at what I said?" he asked earnestly. "I am sorry if you did not like it. The words said themselves without my stopping to think whether you might not like it. Will you forgive me?"

"Oh," she said, lifting her forget-me-not eyes to his, "I am not offended. There is nothing to forgive. It was—beautiful!"

Then his eyes spoke the compliment over again, and the thrill started anew in her heart, till her cheeks grew quite rosy, and she buried her face in the coolness of the tiny flowers to hide her confusion.

"It was very true," he said in a low, lover like voice that sounded like a caress.

"Oughtn't we to hurry on to catch our train?" said Celia, suddenly springing to her feet. "I'm quite rested now." She felt if she stayed there another moment she would yield to the spell he had cast upon her.

With a dull thud of consciousness the man got himself to his feet and reminded himself that this was another man's promised wife to whom he had been letting his soul go out.

Since the beginning of the war the output of Swiss asphalt mines has decreased.

BLINDNESS OF BABIES.

One half of all the blindness is preventable. One-tenth of all the preventable blindness is due to babies' sore eyes. Stephenson describes babies' sore eyes as "an inflammatory disease of the conjunctiva usually appearing within the first few days of life and generally due to micro-organisms."

These terms may be too technical. Let us state it again in simpler language. Within two days after the birth of the baby some matter is noticed in the corner of the eyes. Within an hour or two it will be noticed that the eyes are red and yellow pus is oozing from between the lids. A little later the eyelids are noticed to be puffed. If a little of this pus be placed under a microscope it will be seen that the suppuration is due to pus germs.

The more frequent pus germs causing babies' sore eyes are gonococci, chain-cocci, and pneumonia cocci.

Babies' sore eyes is preventable, is contagious, is curable if treatment is started early. If treatment is delayed a single day it may be found that the sight is gone, since the disease runs a very rapid and violent course.

Some mothers think that babies' sore eyes are due to the light or to cold. Some even think that it is due to the conjure put on the baby by some evil person. The first group of mothers laugh at the ignorance and superstition of the second group, but without justice since their opinion is no nearer the truth than that of those at whom they laugh.

Babies' sore eyes are an infection and are due to pus cocci getting into the eye during birth, at the time of birth, or soon after. Thirty-six years ago a German hospital surgeon, by name Crede, noted that one-tenth of the babies born in his hospital developed babies' sore eyes. He commenced the policy of dropping a 2 per cent solution of nitrate of silver into the eyes of each baby as soon as it had had its bath. In six years the babies' sore eyes rate in his hospital dropped from one in 9 to one in 400.

The result of this experiment was a new policy in caring for the eyes of a newly born babe. Immediately after birth the baby is given his bath and his eyes are treated. Each eye is wiped with a piece of absorbant cotton dipped in a saturated solution of boric acid (boiled water will do as well as boric acid solution). A separate pledget of cotton is used for each eye. The cotton is not put back into the solution after touching the eye. Next the eyelids are gently separated with the fingers and one drop or two drops of 1 per cent solution of nitrate of silver is dropped into each eye. This is done only once. It is done not to cure sore eyes but to prevent eyes from becoming sore.

If the eyes begin to suppurate the doctor must be sent for without delay. The sight cannot be saved unless treatment is begun at once.

Essentially the above facts are taken from an illustrated pamphlet on "Saving the Sight of Babies," issued by the national committee for the prevention of blindness. This committee, located at 130 East Twenty-second street, New York, has issued a series of six pamphlets on preventable blindness. They will give one pamphlet to any person sending a stamped addressed envelope. The pamphlets can be bought for a few cents each.

The Vindication of Brandeis.

From the Duluth Herald.

Six years ago Louis D. Brandeis, now a justice of the supreme court of the United States, but then an attorney for the people in railroad rate investigations, declared that the railroads of the country could save $1,000,000 a day by economies in operation.

Promptly a flood of ridicule from railroad officials and railroad writers poured upon him from all parts of the country.

Yet today Mr. Brandeis stands thoroughly vindicated, and by railroad authority at that.

Ivy L. Lee, former assistant to the president of the Pennsylvania railroad and of late a trusted lieutenant of Mr. Rockefeller, in an address on "The Problem of the Railroads," furnishes this conclusive testimony:

Justice Louis D. Brandeis has been a far better friend of the railroads than either he or they knew. Mr. Brandeis, in the rate advance case of 1910, said and pointed out methods whereby the railroads could, by instituting proper economies, save $1,000,000 a day.

That, of course, was a mere graphic estimate. But it is an astonishing fact—and more than a coincidence, that the railroad net operating income for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, was about $208,600,000 more than what it was for the preceding year, or about $1,000,000 increase for each business day in the year!—the fiscal year in which the railway plant has been utilized to capacity since Mr. Brandeis made his estimate. The railroads have found that their capacity for handling traffic was greater than they had thought, and they have found it feasible to institute economies which they had considered impossible.

Marvelous improvements are being made in locomotive efficiency, especially through the use of the superheater. The Pennsylvania railroad saved over 10 per cent in its coal bill last year, and such further improvements are now considered possible that perhaps 50 per cent of that company's coal bill may be saved within another year or two. Such a saving on the Pennsylvania railroad alone would mean over $5,000,000 a year, or 1 per cent on the company's capital stock.

So long as the railroads could get whatever rates their fancy or nerve might lead them to demand, what was the use of bothering about economies?

When it became plain that the railroads could get only such rates as they could thoroughly justify in a fair and full hearing, then business like economies became obviously matters worth studying, and Mr. Lee notes the result, at the same time finally and thoroughly justifying the stand taken by Justice Brandeis when he was speaking for the public interest six years ago.

Chicago Kansans Hold Picnic.

From the Chicago Herald.

Two hundred members of the Kansas club of Chicago gamboled in the sunshine of Judge J. S. Goodwin's big farm at Naperville recently.

It was the club's fourth annual picnic on the judge's farm.

"The day was ideal for a picnic and the guests romped all afternoon over every foot of the 500 acres of the farm, just as if they were so many kids turned out of school for a day because 'teacher was sick,'" said Judge Goodwin.

Lieutenant Governor Morgan, Fred Stanley, Joseph Chapman and H. C. Clarkson were among the guests of honor. Mr. Clarkson, who had just celebrated his 84th birthday, was one of the livest and gayest of the party.

Bicycling in a riding habit—this is the latest dictate of milady of fashion. It combines exercise and beauty and therefore is expected to take a strong hold on the feminine smart set.

Miss Cleo Mayfield, who sets off fashions of the day in "The Blue Paradise" at the Chicago theater, has introduced this innovation. She may be seen any day pedaling her way from her North Side hotel to the theater.

BIG LESSON OF THIS WAR

The lesson of the war, as far as it concerns the monarchial principle in general, is that only the constitutional monarch and the patriot king can survive under modern conditions. For constitutional monarchy in its various degrees, from that of our own crowned but democratic republic to that of Italy, Belgium, or Rumania, there is a great deal to be said, not merely from the point of view of wont and custom, but of hard common sense. It is on such monarchies as those just named and on such kings as King George, King Victor, King Albert, and King Ferdinand, and not upon such kings as those of Greece or Bulgaria—let alone the two kaisers and the sultan—that the defenders of monarchy, if they are wise, will base their case. He is no true friend of monarchy, but its deadliest enemy, who would try to save King Constantine, not on his personal merits as a monarch, for that of course is impossible, but lest the cause of monarchy should receive injury. The thing is so evident as hardly to need argument. Who can doubt, in spite of the immediate accidents of the war—merely local and temporary as we are certain they are—whether King Ferdinand of Rumania or King Constantine of Greece has the firmer seat upon his throne? The king of Rumania has played the true part of a constitutional monarch. He has acted the part of the patriot and the democratic king. The facts that he is a member of the Hohenzollern family, and that Rumania was before the war a member of the triple alliance, though with a limited liability, might have seemed to afford excuses for an attempt to play the game played by the Greek monarch, or at any rate for the maintenance of neutrality and the sterilization of his kingdom. King Ferdinand made no attempt to seize them. Instead he at once recognized that his duty lay in thinking not of his personal or dynastic position but of the will of the people over whose destiny he presides. When that will was clearly shown he not only made no attempt to hold Rumania back, but loyally accepted the part of interpreter of his people's wishes. Who can doubt that it is he who has given strength to the monarchial principle in Europe, and not his Greek brother?

A Teutonic Argument.

The German emperor, feebly supported by the aged emperor of Austria and by that most abject of dynasts, the king of Bulgaria, has been endeavoring in every neutral and allied court to instill into European rulers the poisonous and deadly notion that the monarchical principle must stand or fall with the Hohenzollerns. "Remember that if the Hohenzollerns fall, monarchy in Europe falls with them!" was the actual words which the kaiser or his emissaries are said to have used in this context. Nothing could possibly be more false, more contrary to the facts. In reality, if we can imagine a temporary success for German arms, it would not be too much to say that the ultimate downfall of the dynastic principle was certain. In spite of the temporary success, monarchy would have been on its trial and have failed. It could never stand the shock of so fatal, so disastrous a triumph. All true friends of the monarchical system, if they are wise, will recognize that the future of that system depends upon constitutionalism and upon its development.

Unless the peoples can be brought to see that kings are useful trustees of democratic and national interests, provide continuity of government, a mitigation of the party system, a protection from the worst forms of corruption, and from the passions too often excited, especially in small and undeveloped communities, by the scramble for power and for the flashy symbols of authority, then indeed monarchy in Europe is doomed beyond reprieve. Even if the glorious traditions of our crowned republic preserved it as a unique anomaly, and, in the words of the act of settlement, secured the throne to the heirs of the body of the electress Sophia who obey the limitations set forth in the bill of rights and other statutes governing the succession to the crown, it would only remain in the opinion of civilized mankind as "a freak of the mad islanders," not as a reasonable type of free government.

When Dame Necessity Urges.

From the Washington Times.

Ever since it began to be noised about that dyestuffs were going to be scarce and high, there has been a tendency to bring marvelous colors into vogue. Last spring and summer saw milady arrayed in tints that formerly she would have scorned. Now it is announced that the most vernal of greens, the yellowest of yellows, the acutest of reds, are to be the fashion next spring. Makers of dyes—so goes the pretty tale—have been compelled to reorganize their brews repeatedly in order to get the shades and colors sharp and dazzling enough to satisfy the styles' demands.

It might be assumed that, just when coloring matter was positively not to be had for love or anything less than all the money, the ladies had insisted that they must have the most gaudy array of colors. Probably the dear ones themselves foolishly and fatuously suspect that they did it. But, if common report in certain trade circles may be credited, they had nothing at all to do with it. Instead of leading, they followed. Particular shades and tints that could still be produced most easily and inexpensively were taken up and exploited. They were made fashionable by sheer power of bootstrap tugging; lifted right into the height of popularity by main strength. The difficult, rare, and expensive colors disappeared. They were not pushed. The buyer must perforce choose among the things that were laid before her. She took the things that served her purpose best, made them fashionable, won the fight for bewildered dyemakers, and imagined that she had set the pace! Not at all: she had merely fallen into step with the time that necessity set.

Prompt Pay.

A man runs up a little bill, and when it's due he pays it, he comes up for the merchant's till, and no excuse delays it. Unlike the deadbeats and the bums, he makes a proper showing; the merchants bless him when he comes, and praise him when he's going. This man, in season, and reverse, as all men strike disaster; and then, when empty is his purse, and hard luck is his master, the dealers say, "Buy all you wish, until your hair grows stable; we'll gladly trust a square oddfish, who pays up when he's able." Another man runs up a bill, he keeps climbing steady; when asked to pay he says, "I will, when I get good and ready." Though he has roubles in his belt, and other roubles handy, he'd rather lose his freckled pelt than up like a dandy. And when misfortune dogs his feet, and want has frayed him, and he has but his last to eat, the merchants will not aid him; you are building in your town a pay reputation, some day that repays knock you down, and hurt like all creation.

Two Ways of "Cleaning Up."

Some years ago a young man from a small country town, on visiting Cincinnati, walked into one of the down town barber shops to have his hair cut.

After the barber had clipped for some time on the young man's head he asked him if he hadn't better have his hat released up. The young man, after glancing at the hair on the floor and thinking the barber was trying to put one over on him said he "guessed not."

After asking the same question several times to no avail the barber gave it up. The young man paid his bill and went from the shop, laughing to himself, thinking he wasn't so green after all.

Afterward it dawned on him that the barber wanted only to give him a shampoo.

The League to Enforce Peace— It Had a Predecessor

From the Spectator, London, Eng.

Nothing is more astounding, and also in a sense more pathetic, than the way in which the world forgets its past and all the lessons of history when its emotions are moved, and when there is something which it longs for greatly. Take the case of peace and the attempts to devise some scheme for abolishing war. Men see the horror and the wickedness of war, and recognize also its folly and futility. At once they set to work devising schemes for making, as they say, fresh wars impossible. But they forget that during almost every great war of which we have a record similar schemes were drawn up to lay the foundations of a lasting concord and to prevent future appeals to arms, in fact to enforce peace. Yet these previous efforts, though they were quite as carefully thought out and quite as sincerely entertained as are the new efforts, failed entirely.

A league to enforce peace was established in America some 15 months ago. Its aims and efforts were described by Mr. Taft in the "American number" of the Manchester Guardian, noticed by us last week. Mr Taft sets forth the four objects of the League to Enforce Peace, and the methods by which the league seeks to attain them. The objects themselves are excellent, but the methods for attaining them are we venture to say, either quite futile or else positively dangerous. However we are not going to argue that point with Mr Taft on general grounds, for we should not convince him or his friends, and we might very likely give an impression which is the last we desire to give, that we are careless of the interests of peace or do not realize the vast evils of war. What we desire to point out is that the proposals of the League to Enforce Peace were tried 100 years ago with the most unsatisfactory results. No doubt we shall be told. Even if this be so, why not try again? "It is worth while to break a thousand lances in an effort to free the world from the demon of war." We agree, and however hopeless we thought the task of enforcing peace we should say to the league. "Do your best with God's blessing. If we were not firmly convinced that not merely must the efforts of the leaguers fail but that their attempts to attain the impossible will do positive harm to the cause of peace. If only the leaguers can be persuaded to try for much less than their present program, and to try for it in a different way they may attain a much greater practical success.

The grounds on which we rest our contention that there is nothing to be got out of the League to Enforce Peace are set forth in a book of true historical learning and insight by Mr. Alison Phillips, "The Confederation of Europe," published by Messrs. Longmans in 1914. The sub-title of the volume, "A Study of the European Alliance, 1813-823, as an Experiment in the International Organization of Peace," shows the nature of the work—a work which we may add was founded on lectures delivered in Oxford in 1913, and therefore before the war. For present purposes one of the most important things that Mr. Alison Phillips shows us is that before the great French war was half way through statesmen here and elsewhere had as now begun to consider not merely how to bring the war to a successful issue but how to insure peace for the future. They saw as now that they were really fighting to secure peace. But what was the use of securing peace unless that peace could be made permanent? Therefore we find not only men of a visionary character like Alexander I of Russia, but practical statesmen of moderation and sound common sense like William Pitt, throwing themselves enthusiastically into the plan of a League to Enforce peace. In answer to the very striking, if somewhat vague instructions given by Alexander in 1804, which were laid before Pitt the great English statesman declared that the concert or third coalition for carrying on the war against France which Pitt was then constructing should have as one of its three essential objects the establishment of "a convention and guarantee for the mutual protection and security of the different powers, and the establishment in Europe of a general system of public law." Pitt's remarks on the third proposal were as follows:

"Much," he says, "will have been done for the repose of Europe by the carrying out of the proposed territorial re-arrangements, but in order to make this security as perfect as possible, it seems necessary that at the time of the general pacification a treaty should be concluded, in which all the principal European powers should take part by which their possessions and their respective rights, as then established, should be fixed and recognized and these powers should all engage reciprocally to protect and support each other against all attempts to violate it. This treaty would give to Europe a general system of public law, and would aim at repressing as far as possible future attempts to trouble the general tranquility and above all to defeat every project of aggrandizement and ambition such as those which have produced all the disasters by which Europe has been afflicted since the unhappy era of the French revolution. The first 'separate and secret' article of the treaty of April 11 1805, between Russia and Great Britain embodied these views in a formal engagement. 'Their majesties,' it ran 'who take the most lively interest in the discussion and precise definition of the law of nations and in the guarantee of its observance by general consent and by the establishment in Europe of a federative system to insure the independence of the weaker states by erecting a formidable barrier against the ambition of the more powerful will come to an amicable understanding among themselves as to whatever may concern those objects and will form an intimate union for the purpose of realizing their happy effects.'"

Though Pitt did not live to see the attempt to carry out the third clause of the coalition, its spirit was kept alive by Alexander and we find that the preamble of the treaty of Kalisch made between Prussia and Russia in 1813 contained sentiments to which not only Mr Taft, but every pacificist in the new world or the old, would gladly agree:

> The time will come when treaties shall be more than truces, when it will again be possible for them to be observed with that religious faith, that sacred inviolability, on which depend the reputation, the strength, and the preservation of empires."

We are not going to weary our readers by pointing out again, what we have so often pointed out in these columns, that the holy alliance, though started with the most genuine and sincere desire to form a League to Enforce Peace, ended in the erection of a reactionary tyranny, and that it took all the efforts of Castlereagh, Wellington and Canning, together with enlightened whig opinion in Britain, to prevent it from bringing about the destruction of liberalism throughout the world. How this happened is one of the most curious examples of the terrible nature of logic when working unrestrained in human affairs. If you have leagues of powers bound by a great common object which demands large sacrifices, the first thing that the constituent powers must and will demand is a mutual guarantee of each other's national rights and interests. Before they can be sure of acting unanimously as a league they must be sure of not quarrelling among themselves. But they cannot be sure of doing this unless they are sure that there will be no interference—no attempt to curtail their own possessions and alter their own system of government. Hence any kind of international league is always bound to guarantee the status quo. But the status quo may in some particular country be the "negation of God erected into a system." This first stumbling block, the holy alliance tried to some extent to remove by means of periodic international conferences which were to meet every three years and keep the various states of the world in good order. For example, the sixth article of the holy alliance bound the high contracting powers to hold at fixed intervals "meetings consecrated to great common objects and the examination of such measures as at each one of these epochs shall be judged most salutary for the peace and prosperity of the nations and for the maintenance of the peace of Europe." The first of these meetings, the conference held at Aix-la-Chapelle, can hardly be described as a success, except that it produced a perfectly admirable memorandum from Castlereagh in which he, like a true Briton, tried to find a sensible via media between the two extremes, and, while not attempting the impossible, to do something practical for the cause of peace. The words in which he discusses the Emperor Alexander's idea of a universal union of the powers are so good that we cannot resist the temptation to quote them.

The problem of a universal alliance for the peace and happiness of the world," the memorandum runs, "has always been one of speculation and hope, but it has never yet been reduced to practice, and if an opinion may be hazarded from its difficulty, it never can. But you may in practice approach towards it, and perhaps the design has never been so far realized as in the last four years. During that eventful period the quadruple alliance formed upon principles altogether limited has had, from the presence of the sovereigns and the unparalleled unity of design with which the cabinets have acted the power of travelling so far out of the sphere of their immediate and primitive obligations, without at the same time transgressing any of the laws of nations or failing in the delicacy which they owe to the rights of other states, as to form more extended alliances * * * to interpose their good offices for the settlement of differences between other states, to take the initiative in watching over the peace of Europe, and finally in securing the execution of its treaties. The idea of an alliance solidaire, by which each state shall be found to support the state of succession, government and possession within all other states from violence and attack, upon condition of receiving for itself a similar guarantee, must be understood as morally implying the previous establishment of such a system of general government as may secure and enforce upon all kings and nations an internal system of peace and justice. Till the mode of constructing such a system shall be devised, the consequence is inadmissible, as nothing would be more immoral or more prejudicial to the character of government generally, than the idea that their force was collectively to be prostituted to the support of established power, without any consideration of the extent to which it was abused. Till a system of administering Europe by a general alliance of all its states can be reduced to some practical form, all notions of a general and unqualified guarantee must be abandoned, and the states must be left to rely for their security upon the justice and wisdom of their respective system, and the aid of other states according to the law of nations.

Before we leave the subject of the conference at Aix-la-Chapelle we must not forget to mention the curious, but no doubt inevitable, result of the attempt to mitigate the hard logic of the guaranteed status quo. The conference was, in effect, asked to act, and attempted to act, as a kind of European supreme court which heard appeals and received petitions of all kinds from sovereigns and subjects alike. For example, the elector of Hesse asked to be allowed to exchange his meaningless title for that of "King," a request which, Mr. Alison Phillips tells us, was refused because it was not considered expedient to make the royal style too common! The people of Monaco, again, presented a list of grievances against their prince, while Bavaria and the Hochberg line of princes referred to the conference their quarrel about the succession in Baden. Finally, the situation of the Jews in Austria and Prussia was brought under discussion. But though these minor issues were either settled or got rid of, it will be found that jealousy of British sea power at once awoke, and threw obstacles in the way of even so great a benefit to humanity as the suppression of the slave trade. Though the powers had agreed in principle to our carrying out this immense reform, they were not willing to accept that mutual right of search by which we sought to suppress it. Again, when it came to an attempt to mediate between Spain and her revolting colonies, the powers could not agree. It is true that they succeeded in calling the king of Swedon to order; but, while obeying, he protested against the dictatorship arrogated to themselves by the great powers, a course in which he was backed up by the indignant king of Wurttemberg. No wonder that, when the conference broke up with a considerably damaged reputation, Canning made the cynical but common sense comment that "things are getting back to a wholesome state again. Every nation for itself and God for us all! Only bid your emperor be quiet, for the time for Areopagus and the like of that is gone by." That, we fear, must be our comment on all schemes like that of the league to enforce peace.

But is there no hope for peace? Yes, there is. If, as the result of this war, the world learns that it does not pay to act the part of Frederick the Great, and that in the end severe punishment falls on the promoters of such an evil policy, and if, further, the system of military autocracy can be made to give way to that of government of the people for the people by the people, we see no reason to doubt that peace may be maintained for another generation. More than that it is not safe to prophesy. But let us remember always that even if universal peace could be bought, the price we should have to pay for it would be too high. The price is international slavery.

Amputation Now In Disfavor.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Dr. William C. Woolsey, Brooklyn surgeon who has returned from France where he has been a member of the staff of Hospital B of the American ambulance, told of the new surgery the war has brought.

"When the war broke out surgeons were quite prone to amputate a limb when it was injured at all seriously," said Dr. Woolsey. "Today to amputate a leg or arm, unless it has been completely shattered by a shell beyond any possible hope, is considered a reflection upon a surgeon's ability. The men over there are accomplishing some marvelous things in war surgery which is going to save many a poor fellow from having to have an artificial limb. The French have now become masters of the art of saving a soldier who has been mangled by a big shell, and returning him as nearly whole as possible."

"Poe? Perhaps some of your family worked for Edgar Allan Poe."

The man's eyes opened with great surprize. "Why," he gasped, pointing a dusky forefinger to himself, "why, Ah am Edgar Allen Poe."

"Say, young feller," said Bronco Bob, "have you got a gun on you?"

"No, sir," replied the man with the brand-new cowboy uniform. "I was told that it was better to be unarmed so as to avoid any impression that I was seeking a quarrel."

"Well, that's a big disappointment. I needed a brand new gun an' thought you'd be bringin' along at least a pair of 'em. Don't you let anything like this occur again."—Washington Star.

Getting Old Too Fast?

Late in life the body shows signs of wear and often the kidneys weaken first. The back is lame, beat and achy, and the kidney action distressing. This makes people feel older than they are. Don't wait for dropsy, gravel, hardening of the arteries or Bright's disease. Use a mild kidney stimulant. Try Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands of elderly folks recommend them.

A South Dakota Case

Mrs. Henry Hofert, Salem, S. Dak., says: "For a year I was tortured by backache. The trouble made me so weak that I could hardly turn in bed and awful pains shot into my head. The kidney secretions were unnatural and I knew my kidneys were disordered. Three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up in good shape after everything else failed. I am now able to work all right and seldom have any sign of kidney trouble."

Bodily Housekeeping

(By V. M. PIERCE, M. D.)

The subject of drinking water with meals has been misunderstood.

In recent years investigation by means of X-rays, the observations of scientists such as Cannon, Grutzner, Pavlov, Fowler, Hawk, prove that an abundance of water taken during digestion is necessary in good bodily housekeeping.

If your kidneys are sick, or you suffer with lumbago or rheumatism at times, pain in the back or back of the neck, take a little Anuric before meals. This can be found at any good drug store. Therefore my advice to young or old is, always drink plenty of pure water. And for long life, occasionally take tablets of Anuric three or four times a day.

Anuric acts much more quickly than lithia. Many find that it dissolves uric acid as water does sugar.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS

New Ulm, Minn.—"Over twenty years ago I started to take 'Favorite Prescription.' It kept me in splendid condition during the expectant period, and I had a comparatively easy time and was in unusual health afterwards; also during middle life and it certainly has helped me. I do not suffer with hot flashes or dizziness at all or any other ailment which I have known other women to have at this time of life. I am glad to recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription."—MRS. GERTRUDE BUSHARD, 614 N. State Street.

NEW POLICY NEEDED IN GOVERNMENT RAILWAY CONTROL

Helpfulness and Encouragement Urged by Alfred P. Thom.

CREDIT MUST BE IMPROVED

Increase of Transportation Facilities Necessary to Secure Relief From High Cost of Living May Thus Be Provided For by the Railroads.

Washington, Nov 28.—A new policy of government railroad regulation, based on constructive principles of helpfulness and encouragement instead of upon principles of repression and punishment, was urged by Alfred P. Thom, counsel for the Railway Executives' Advisory Committee, the first witness on behalf of the railroads before the Newlands Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has instituted a general inquiry into the problems of railroad regulation.

"It is proposed by the joint resolution of Congress," said Mr. Thom, "to go into a comprehensive study of the whole subject of transportation, to make a new assessment, after 29 years of experiment, of its history, its present conditions and its future needs. The railroads accept the view that regulation is a permanent and enduring part of government in America and that the first duty of the carriers is to the public. That duty is to afford reasonable facilities on reasonable terms and at reasonable rates, and this must be done before any private interests can be considered."

Certainty, Safety and Sufficiency.

Mr. Thom contended that the real interest of the public is in being assured of certainty, safety and sufficiency of transportation facilities, rather than in rates. The first consideration of the public is to obtain transportation facilities. What the cost is, is in reality a second consideration, he said.

Mr. Thom proposed an increase of transportation facilities as a method of securing relief from the high cost of living. "There have been less than 1,000 miles of new railroad constructed in the United States during the past year," he said, "less than in any year since 1848, except the period of the Civil War, and yet the cost of living is daily advancing owing to a shortage of supplies which might be remedied by securing access to new areas of production.

Credit Must Be Improved.

"This leads to the consideration as to whether railroad credit is as good as the public interest requires. It is impossible for railroads to earn enough to supply the necessary new facilities from current revenue. They must be provided from credit. Investors cannot be coerced, but must be attracted."

Among the conditions affecting railroad credit which deter investors he mentioned the following:

"First, Railroad revenues are not controlled by investors, but are fixed and limited by governmental authority and not by one but by several governmental authorities, which do not recognize responsibility for assured results to investors and are uncoordinated.

"Second, Railroads cannot control and the government cannot and does not limit the expense account.

"Third, The present system of regulation is based on a policy of regulation and correction and not on a policy of helpfulness and encouragement.

"Fourth, The outstanding obligations of the railroads have already exceeded the financial rule of safety and involve a disproportionate amount of obligations bearing fixed charges.

"Fifth The investor must accept a subordinate obligation or security with no assurance of a surplus of earnings to support it.

"Sixth, Other competitive lines of investment present superior attractions.

"Seventh, The railroad business is largely controlled by political instead of business considerations.

Look Forward, Not Back.

"We may debate about what has caused the present conditions," said Mr. Thom, "but we cannot debate about what the people need. The President has taken the view that we must look forward in this matter and 'make a fresh assessment of circumstances' in order to deal helpfully and intelligently with the problem. Abuses are no more prevalent in the railroad business today than in any other business humanely conducted. The great question now is whether the existing system of regulation gives the public reliable assurance of sufficient present and future railroad facilities.

"Those who oppose any change must make their appeal on the ground that the present systems assure the public of the continued adequacy of transportation facilities. If they do not, no argument based on the desirability of the present dual system of regulation will be accepted by public judgment. The question of 'states' rights' is not involved. If the regulation of transportation facilities privately owned should fail government ownership must follow, and then all power of the states over the railroads would disappear.

"Let us debate this question, then, not upon any mere theory or jealousy as to the distribution of governmental power, but upon the large issue of what the public interest requires in respect of the assurance of adequate transportation service."

ANTIQUITY.

A chair encumbers our dim hall.
Moth-eaten is its faded seat;
Its legs are short, its back is tall;
'T is but a trap for passing feet.
You cannot sit upon the Chair,
Its framework is so very weak;
But Wife insists its place is there
Because it's real antique.

A Table came from our home town.
'T was shaky, scratched, and full of nicks,
One leaf folds up and one folds down;
It holds a brace of candlesticks.
It wobbles if you go too near;
The knobs are chipped, the drawers all leak;
Yet it has come to stay, I fear,
Because it's real antique.

A Bed has shown up to replace
The staunch couch where I sought repose;
Bold Cupids stare me in the face;
The hanging draperies brush my nose;
And each one of the post quartette
Has a distinctly different squeak;
Yet Wife is singing paeans yet,
Because it's real antique.

All through our house it's just the same;
I'll grin and bear it, I suppose.
Perhaps, when I get worn and lame,
And dull and careless of my clothes
Perhaps, I say, they'll prize me then,
And in endearing terms they'll speak,
And praise me to my fellow-men,
Because I'm real antique!

The portable kitchens being used in Berlin and other German cities for distributing hot cooked food in the poorer districts at a low price are the maximum of economy and efficiency. Their shape has given them the name of "goulash cannon," but underneath the cannon is a small charcoal fire which keeps the hot stew at a boiling point. A boxlike contrivance below gives space for the storage of the pieces of bread served with each order. The kitchen is mounted on wheels similar to those of a small express wagon and in many instances is drawn by a dog. Occasionally a boy or an old man or woman will supply the motor power.

Up California's Tamalpais runs the crookedest railroad in the world. Of the eight miles of track the longest tangent is only 418 feet. In one instance the road makes five complete loops and ties two complete bow knots to attain an elevation of 90 feet. The end of the line is about half a mile higher than the starting point, and there is not one particularly steep grade in the entire system.

COSSON WANTS LAW TO REMOVE SAFETY HEADS

Des Moines Ia Dec 2.—Attorney General George Cosson in preparing his biennial report, will include a recommendation that the removal law be extended so as to make it possible to remove superintendents of public safety for neglect of duty

The experience of the attorney general in Keokuk and other cities, as well as recent developments in Des Moines, convinces him of the absolute necessity of providing a way of removing superintendents of public safety.

At the present time the police officers including the chief of police and mayor may be removed for cause, but the man who is in direct charge of the police officers and who may be wholly responsible for failure to enforce the law cannot be reached except under the old jury method or the recall. These remedies are ineffective, experience has pointed out.

In view of the fact that the republican platform declared for such additional laws as are necessary to enforce the law, it is believed that the legislature and the governor will favor the recommendation.

DEMANDS HUMMELL RESIGN JOB, REPORT

Des Moines Civil Service Head Lining Up Faction to Resist Mayor.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 1.—Mayor MacVicar has sent a letter to C. W. Hummell, chairman of the Des Moines civil service board here, which is understood to have demanded the resignation or Hummell from his position, with the alternative of impeachment. The letter has not been made public, but its contents are matters of common discussion.

MacVicar conferred with the civil service board and says he is going to the bottom of the situation which led the board to drop its investigation of charges brought against W. E. McDowell, former assistant police chief but now demoted to the ranks on charges of participating in a booze party Hummel declares that a document which was read to the civil service board by Woolgar was a "frameup" to intimidate him. This document was signed by Maude Wells, 612 East Twelfth street, and criticised Hummel on the grounds that he was criticising McDowell. Woolgar declares that he has now destroyed the letter.

"Did you ask Hummell to resign?" the mayor was asked

"You will have to draw your own conclusions," he replied "My letter was very brief."

Hummell is understood to be lining up the city commission to find out where they stand on an impeachment proceeding. He refuses to make a statement

UNKNOWN MAN FOUND DEAD ON CREEK BANK

Sioux City Resident Finds Body of Man Who Terrorized Plymouth Community.

Milnerville, Ia., Nov. 30.—The body of the man who terrorized a number of families in the Milnerville community, Plymouth county, about three weeks ago, was found on the banks of Broken Kettle creek last night. Thus far his identity has not been established and it is not certain whether he committed suicide or died from natural causes.

Robert Banks, of Sioux City, found the body on the Banks farm, near here. The man was last seen about two weeks ago and is supposed to have been dead about that long. The body was taken to LeMars this morning and an inquest will be held by Coroner Wiltgen. So far as known here, there were no marks of identification. The man apparently was about 50 years of age. He had $211 in cash on his person, but no letters or papers.

When the man made his appearance in this community he had every appearance of being demented. He called at several homes without apparent motives and frightened the inmates by his peculiar actions. At the Milnerville blacksmith shop he bumped his head violently against the wall of the building several times, apparently trying to injure himself

After a conference among the men of the community, it was decided that he should be placed in restraint and a delegation was organized for that purpose. The men made a search for the eccentric stranger, but could not find him They had no further trace until the dead body was found on the creek bank last night.

WORKMEN CASE TO BE HEARD IN FEBRUARY

Lodge Officials Want an Early Hearing—Woodbury County Is Interested.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 29.—The Iowa supreme court has ordered advanced to the February, 1917, period the case of Tusant et al vs. A. O. U. W., appellant.

The request for an early hearing was made by the grand lodge in order to get a decision without delay on the question whether the society has a right to raise its rates.

The attorneys for the A. O. U. W. say that two cases against the lodge have originated in Polk county, six cases are threatened in Lucas county and one in Woodbury county, all involving the question of the legal right of the lodge to pass a bylaw rerating its membership as to the amount of their assessment in payment of their insurance.

Grand Master Workman E. B. Evans says that this litigation has injured the A. O. U. W. and that as long as the question of rates is unsettled the society will be handicapped in getting new members. He declares that organizers have met with great difficulties owing to the publicity given the suits. The lodge claims it has the legal right to rerate its members.

The bylaws rerating the members was adopted at a special meeting of the legislative body of the lodge in February, 1916. The meeting was held in Des Moines.

Two cases developed in Polk county as the result of the new rates. In one case a member attempted to recover $90 the amount of money he had paid to the order in assessments since he joined alleging the adoption of the bylaw was a violation, and a repudiation, of his contract with the order. In this case Judge Dudley decided in favor of the lodge.

In the second case the district court granted an injunction restraining the defendant society from requiring the four plaintiffs in that case and about 100 other members of the order who joined in an early day before the society began attaching a copy of the application to the policy, to pay the rates of assessment adopted at the special session. As to all other members, the right of the society to raise rates was sustained.

FARMER DROVE ALL NIGHT WITH WIFE'S BODY IN AUTO

Algona, Ia. Nov. 29.—The story of how Melvin Seefeldt, elderly farmer living near Wesley, killed his wife while in a rage over a domestic dispute, and then drove all night about the neighboring country with his wife's body in his automobile with him before committing suicide the next morning had gradually been brought to light since the bodies of the two were found last Wednesday

Seefeldt, it appears, shot his wife with a shotgun Tuesday afternoon. He scrubbed the floor of the porch, which was bloodstained as a result of the crime, took his wife's body and buried it in his farmyard, and then returned to his house and got supper for a husking crew which was working for him.

After supper he exhumed the body, placed it in his automobile, and started his gruesome wanderings. He evidently drove all night, passing through Britt and Thompson, and stopping for gasoline at Britt.

He finally stopped at the roadside between Wesley and Titonka the next morning and shot himself.

He mailed a letter before he committed suicide, in which he told one of his sons what he had done and told of howe he wished his property disposed.

RUMANIANS, A... BY RUSSIA, ... DESPERATE S...

Civil Population Flees ... est as Germans A... Within Gunshot—... Battles Raging.

SLAVS START DRIVE

Counter Attacks Made ... Mile Front as Teuton... Tightens—Still Hope... Avert Disaster.

London Dec 2 The Exchange telegraph company says it has received information from Zurich by way of Berlin that the Rumanian military authorities are making preparations for a desperate defense of Bucharest. The civilian population is said to have evacuated the city and the government officials have retired to a town near the Russian frontier. This probably refers to the Rumanian town of Jassy, to which the government and diplomatic corps were said several days ago to have gone

Berlin (by Wireless to Sayville) Dec. 2.— The Russians and Rumanians have begun violent attacks yesterday over a front of nearly 200 miles the war office announces. Their efforts are characterized as a waste of blood and ammunition, and it is said that they have gained no important advantage

An offensive movement in Dobrudja was begun yesterday by the Bulgarians and Rumanians who made previous attacks on the Bulgarian left wing, the war office announces. The attacks broke down under the Bulgarian fire.

The advance on Bucharest continues notwithstanding the resistance of the Rumanians Field Marshal Von Mackensen's force which crossed the Arges river is approaching the Arges River in the direction of Bucharest. The Berlin statement says the Rumanians suffered heavy losses in the fighting. The Teutonic forces took 2,500 prisoners and 21 cannon

The Teutonic grip on Rumania remains unshaken and at last accounts was tightening with three columns of forces continuing unchecked, the center advance toward Bucharest

Despite tenacious resistance by the Rumanians, which appears to have increased as Bucharest was neared, the armies of Field Marshal von Mackensen and General von Falkenhayn, the invaders are now almost within shot of the capital They are reported their objective on the southwest front, Tzomana, 16 miles distant, has been reached. From the west the Rumanians driven to within 45 miles of the capital, Glaviatzlotza. On the northern front they have broken the Rumanian line, permitting of a new influx of German troops by way of the Predeal pass, and Campulung

The Russians meanwhile have been attacking heavily along all the front, particularly tier of Moldavia the Rumanian province which projects northward between Transylvania and Bessarabia. This is an evident attempt to create a diversion in Rumania s favor Today, Russia reports a pronounced success in the offensive, declaring the whole of the heights along the frontier south of Kirlibaba has been taken by the Russians.

Whether this success will have any immediate effect on the operations of the Teutonic armies engaged in the main attack on the Rumanians has not yet been indicated. Apparently they will require a considerable penetration of Transylvanian territory by the Russians to affect the southern campaign.

Petrograd, (via London), Dec. 2. The Russian offensive has been successful along the whole Bessarabian frontier south of Kirlibaba, says the official statement issued today by the Russian war department. In the violent German counter attacks, the statement adds, the Russians gained the whole range of heights.

Petrograd, (via London), Dec. 2. The violent attack begun by the Russians in the Carpathians, it is expected by military critics, will relieve the pressure upon Rumania and possibly avert the crisis caused by the concentric advance on Bucharest by the three groups of the forces of Generals Falkenhayn and Mackensen. The Russian operations are directed against that portion of the front in which the Germans strove to make a breach between the Russian armies and the forces defending Rumania.

Russia's activity to save Rumania is on in earnest. Muscovy has the choice of going to the assistance of its ally, or hurling reenforcements into the country invaded and partly occupied by the Austro-German armies of General Von Falkenhayn and Field Marshal Von Mackensen, or of making a divergence.

Russia has done both, but the independent from recent dispatches that General Brusiloff, the Slav military leader on the western front, has elected the divergence as his main scheme of operation.

According to advices, Russian troops are hammering at the Teutonic lines in Bukowina front. They have advanced from four to seven miles along a line, capturing heights and many prisoners.

Petrograd announces the situation in this region and Berlin admits that the enemy has gained "local advantages."

At Heavy Cost.

The value of creating a gap for the passage of troops from Falkenhayn's army by heavy pressure in his center left flank lies in the fact that he will be forced to let up in his Wallachian campaign until more Russian and other entente troops can get into action in the Bucharest region.

FUNERAL OF EMPEROR MARKED BY SIMPLICITY

Vienna, (via London) Dec 1 -In the presence of Emperor Charles, the young crown prince Francis Joseph Otto, the kings of Bulgaria, Bavaria and Saxony the German crown prince and a large number of Teutonic princes and special envoys from neutral governments, the remains of the late Emperor Francis Joseph were buried this afternoon

The services were extremely simple and lasted only 12 minutes Emperor Charles, the German princes and the relatives of the late emperor were grouped around the alter in the cathedral, at the foot of which the coffin rested in a black catafalque The great body of the cathedral was crowded with officials, army officers, members of the court of the neutral diplomatic corps.

The mourning costumes of the many women and neutral officials contrasted sharply with the splendid uniforms which most of the high mourners wore including the new emperor and other rulers. No flowers were used, everything connected with the ceremony being of severe plainness and simplicity

ALLIES PREPARED TO LAND AN ARMY

Troops to Occupy Piraeus and Athens Unless Army Surrenders Military Stores.

London Dec 1—A detachment of entente troops disembarked at Pireaus the port of Athens, at 3 o'clock this morning, according to a wireless dispatch received today from Athens.

Athens (via London) Dec 2.—The entente allies are ready to begin the debarkation of troops at Piraeus, the port of Athens

The Greek government has retaken control of the postoffices and telegraph lines in Athens, expelling the French control officers.

An Athens dispatch to the Daily Chronicle, under date of November 3, ascribes the following statement to Vice Admiral Du Fournet, in command of the allied fleet in Greek waters

"I insist absolutely upon the execution of my demands and will see that they are realized in spite of all obstacles. French, British and Italian detachments will be landed at all points necessary I will endeavor to avoid bloodshed, but will fulfill my mission thoroughly"

The Athens correspondent of the Daily Mail interviewed Vice Admiral Du Fournet aboard his flagship and quotes him similarly to the correspondent of the Chronicle. The admiral said that he did not intend either to seize the arms or fire upon the Greek troops, but declared that unless the guns were surrendered he would land large detachments which would not reembark until his demands were complied with Other coercive measures would be taken at the same time.

"As I have most ample forces at my disposal," the admiral said, "and some of the heaviest and most powerful artillery in existence I can see no reason why the arms will not be quietly given up"

UNREST IN ATHENS.

London, Dec 2.—Special dispatches from Athens dated Thursday say there is a growing state of anxiety in the city The Greek garrison seems to have withdrawn inland, taking arms, ammunition and stores. Two regiments left during the night with artillery

The dispatches added that there was alarm in the streets Thursday morning due to the appearance of bands of reservists, but later it was ascertained they had been called for service. The authorities seemed to be doing their utmost to preserve order.

The bourse Thursday was very firm, indicating optimism

YARDS SOON WILL LIFT QUARANTINE

Cattle Disease Identified as Stomachitis and Not the Hoof and Mouth Malady.

Chicago, Dec 1.—Pres. Arthur G. Leonard, of the Union Stock Yards was informed today by Dr. Eicchhorn, of the United States bureau of animal industry, that the disease among cattle is not hoof and mouth disease but stomachitis Dr C. E Dyson, Illinois state veterinary, telephoned from Springfield, forecasting the raising of the Illinois quarantine against cattle shipments from Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri. He told Mr. Leonard it would be safe to bring the prize cattle from the states to the International Live Stock exposition, which opens here December 4.

SOUTH DAKOTA RAISES EMBARGO

Orders of the South Dakota live stock sanitary board, received today by Tom Dealtry, president of the Sioux City Live Stock exchange, declared that body would immediately lift the embargo placed against Sioux City shipments insofar as cattle were concerned, the order to go into effect today.

The purpose of the original order is explained as having been aimed only at horses that were suffering from mouth lesions and as a preventive measure. There never has been any fear that Sioux City stock was affected with the hoof and mouth disease commission men say.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 1.—Laboratory investigations completed here today proved that the ailment among cattle at Kansas City, suspected of being hoof and mouth disease, is stomatitis, a comparatively harmless malady, easily cured.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 1.—A. U. Coates, one of the leading prohibition workers, announced today that he has been assured by Lieutenant Governor-elect Moore that temperance committees in the senate this year will be "dry." RUMOR OF FIRING SOUTH OF JUAREZ

Lack of Food and Ammunition Responsible For Victory of Villa at Chihuahua City.

Juarez, Mex., Dec. 1.—Gen. Francisco Gonzales announced today he had received a report that General Ozuna's cavalry had met a band of Villa troops, south of Terrazas, yesterday morning, and had routed them, driving the bandits back into the city of Chihuahua. General Gonzales said General Ozuna's command numbered approximately 3,000 men.

General Gonzales said he was increasing the size of his forces in Juarez and would increase the number of troops in Vallahumada, 83 miles south of here and along the Mexican Central railroad and the overland trails near Guadalupe and Rancho Flores to prevent a surprise attack upon the border town by any bandit force.

Juarez, Mex., Dec. 2.—Several Chinese residents of Chihuahua City arrived in Juarez early today on a troop train. They had left Chihuahua City Tuesday after being in hiding for several days. They said looting was in progress when they left, several stores, including a drug store having been ransacked. The Chinese knew little more of conditions in Chihuahua City than the refugees who left there Monday, saying they had been in hiding and could see none of the Villa activity.

Reported firing to the south of Juarez was denied this morning by Juarez officials, who said they had no report of any shooting near Juarez.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 2.—Shortage of ammunition and food rather than lack of morale among the Carranza troops at Chihuahua City is held by Ambassador Designate Arredondo to be the real cause of the defeat of General Trevino and Carranza forces by Villa bandits.

Mr. Arredondo believes the Carranza troops were forced to evacuate, but has no official word of the fight showing definitely that General Trevino had abandoned his position.

FURTHER DECLINE IN COST OF FOOD; BOYCOTT SPREADS

Storage Eggs Henceforth Must Bear Label In New York—Price to Be 35 Cents Soon, Prediction.

TO URGE NATIONAL LAW

Consumers Plan to Force Down Butter By Methods Employed In Forcing Reduction In Hen Fruit

New York, Dec. 2.—The campaign against the high cost of living entered another stage today when the presidents of nearly a score of retail grocery associations and representatives of several delicatessen associations met with Joseph Hartigan, commissioner of weights and measures and secretary of Mayor Mitchel's food committee to consider remedial measures

A series of boycotts on poultry butter and other foodstuffs similar to that now in force on eggs, will be enforced, the butter boycott to begin December 12, when the eggs ban will have run two weeks. Whether the latter will continue or not after that depends it was said, upon the price at which eggs are selling then The wholesale price of eggs has dropped from three to four cents a dozen on all grades since the inception of the boycott. Commissioner Hartigan declared that a national cold storage law was needed to protect consumers against abuses in the marketing of perishable foods

Reports from various cities today are to the effect that thousands of turkeys were left on the hands of the dealers, Thanksgiving, as the result of the refusal of housewives to pay high prices. The surplus stock will be held in cold storage and it is predicted that in consequence the price of Christmas turkeys will be greatly reduced.

As the result of the high cost of living, the federation of Jewish farmers of America in convention here will extend its principle of cooperative buying

New York, Dec. 1.—"A 70-hour ultimatum" to egg dealers, directing them to mark plainly all cold storage eggs as such before placing them on sale in this state, was announced here today by John J. Dillon, state commissioner of foods and markets. He said that he had also taken steps to see that eggs arriving from points outside of New York state are similarly marked. The commissioner predicted that within 10 days the retail price of eggs would drop to 35 cents a dozen

CLAIM NORWAY HOLDS TO VIEW OF ENTENTE

Only Neutral Nation That Has Taken Her Position on U-Boat Question.

Christiania, Norway, (via London), Dec. 2.—The Dagbladet today published an interview with Herr Michaleis, German minister to Norway outlining Germany's point of view on the submarine controversy with Norway The minister spoke in part as follows

"Germany cannot tolerate any special treatment of war and merchant submarines by neutrals. Norway is the sole neutral which by special instructions has conveyed the impression of adopting the view of the entente

"Germany is permitted by international law to defend herself with all her powers against Norwegian ships carrying contraband which prolongs the war and the recent food crises in Great Britain, France and Russian have shown that Germany is on the right path Germany will not be deprived of the sharp weapon she possesses in the submarine. On the other hand Germany will always respect Norway's really difficult position and the most we expect of really independent Norway is that she does not treat German warfare and German economic problems differently than those of the enemy."

GERMANY WILL NOT CUT DOWN RATIONS

Surplus Is Greater Than Last Year, But Hope to Keep Reserve.

Berlin, (via London), Dec. 2.—The Germans will go through the winter without change in their present rations of important foodstuffs except a reduction in the potato ration, according to authoritative information furnished the Associated Press on the food situation from the war nutrition bureau. This shows that while supplies at various times would in themselves perhaps justify an increase, it has been determined to adhere to the present allowance of 250 grams of bread daily, 250 grams of meat and 90 grams of fat weeekly and 750 grams of sugar monthly, and use any surplus, either accumulation or reserve, for the hard laboring classes, such as miners and foundrymen

The grain harvest shows an excess of 5,000,000 tons over last year, but two years' experience has proved that the present ration is absolute and that it will, therefore, be unnecessary to increase it. Oil produced from home grown sources, such as beech nuts, sunflower seeds, fruit pits and similar products, can, for the same reason, not be used for the general civilian population, although considerable stocks from beech nuts alone for example, 500,000 quarts of salad oil—have been gained from these hitherto unutilized sources.

GUARD ROYAL TOMB.

SHOULD FUTURE GENERATIONS PAY?

In all large public undertakings where permanent improvements were sought to be made it has become a custom to issue long-time bonds in order to secure the money with which to finance the work.

Probably nine-tenths of the counties of nine-tenths of the states of the Union are bonded to a greater or less extent, and scarcely a city or town of any importance in the land but carries its bonded debt that has gone to pay for public utilities.

But in many cases the advocates of the bond issue have had hard fights to carry their projects through. One of the most serious objections has always been from the man who "doesn't believe in saddling a debt on future generations."

Now let us see about this Suppose, for instance, our county has no railroad. For generations our ancestors, and we ourselves, have laboriously hauled in our supplies and hauled out our products, realizing, when all expenses were met, but a meagre pittance for our years work.

But a railroad is projected and we are told if we will bond our county for a few hundred thousand dollars it will be put through This we do Now arises the objection that we have placed a heavy debt on posterity

Have we?

Yes. But at the same time we have given posterity the means to pay that debt and the whole county is better off than we and our fathers were.

Compare for a moment the [illegible] and ours before the road was built The average county is about twenty-five miles wide Suppose that represented the distance to the nearest shipping point. Do you see the enormous saving we have given posterity in bringing the road to their doors?

Again, take the question of good roads The same reasoning will hold good there Where our fathers toiled through mud and mire to drag fifteen or twenty bushels of grain to market, our sons can hitch up an ordinary team and take a load of two or three thousand pounds with ease and in much less time than we needed.

And so on through the list of all permanent public improvements.

But the work should be permanent, or at least as nearly permanent as our best judgement can make it When we have builded to the best of our ability and have lain a ground-work on which our children can continue to build, we have not only benefited ourselves and not injured them, but we have benefited them, and made it possible to attain to conditions that were entirely beyond our reach

A debt on posterity is just, provided it represents a tangible asset.

YULETIDE AGAIN

The Yuletide season is with us again

It is with us, but not of us, for much of the earth knows little joy today.

Upon many millions of people the sun shines as brightly in days of old, but its lustre is dimmed by the shedded blood of suffering humanity.

The benign smile of the Divine One is as tender and as loving as when the world was young, but the twentieth century finds too many of the human race bent upon pleasue, and profit, and revenge, and forgetful of the beauties of life as seen through eyes that are better and holier than ours.

It is with this knowledge that the people of our little community approach the Yuletide time when all should be sunshine, and gladness, and joy.

But if we may not sway the rest of the world, if our voice be not heard beyond the the confines of our own firesides, we yet may look upward with a feeling of gladness and thankfulness that the horrors that are engulfing the rest of the world have at least passed us by.

We may be thankful that we have even an hour of peace and prosperity for our country, though no one knows when the withering hand of the blight of the century may be spread over our own fair land.

Let us be joyful today, but let us mingle that joy with compassion for the stricken ones of other lands, to whom the Yuletide season is but a mockery and an agonizing delusion.

CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE BEGINS RAILWAY INQUIRY

Proposed by President to Better Condition of Carriers.

MAY CHANGE PRESENT SYSTEM

Officials of Roads Prepared to Advocate Federal Incorporation, Supervision of Securities and Extension of Authority of Interstate Commerce Commission.

Washington, Nov. 20.—Ten members of Congress, five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, began here today an inquiry into the subject of public control and supervision of railroads that may lead to the revolutionizing of the whole scheme of governmental regulation of the country's transportation lines. Incidentally the committee is to look into the question of government ownership of railways, telephone and telegraph lines and express companies

The members of the committee which will conduct this important investigation are Senator Newlands of Nevada, chairman, Senators Robinson of Arkansas, Underwood of Alabama, Cummins of Iowa and Brandegee of Connecticut and Representatives Adamson of Georgia, Sims of Tennessee, Cullop of Indiana, Esch of Wisconsin and Hamilton of Michigan. The inquiry was recommended by President Wilson in his message to Congress in December of last year. He described as its purpose to determine what could be done "for bettering the conditions under which the railroads are operated and for making them more useful servants of the country as a whole."

Prominent Men as Witnesses.

In order to obtain the views of all interests affected by the operations of the transportation lines the committee has invited prominent shippers, bankers representatives of commercial organizations, railway executives, economists and others to appear before them.

The first to be heard are railroad commissioners of various states who began their evidence today. Their testimony is directed chiefly to opposing any enlargement of the federal authority over commerce that would detract from the powers now exercised by state bodies. They will be followed shortly by officials of railway labor organizations who are expected to register their opposition to the increase of governmental authority over wages and conditions of labor.

Chief interest in the hearings centers in the proposals that will be put forward by representatives of the railroads, for it is reported that they will advocate an extension of federal authority over rates and securities to the practical exclusion of state control of these matters. It is understood also that they will go on record in favor of federal incorporation of all railroad lines.

Legislative Program of Railroads.

From an authoritative source is obtained the following outline of the legislative program which the railroads will ask the committee to consider in its investigation. They will endeavor to demonstrate to the commission that one of the principal defects in the present system of railroad regulation is the lack of coordination resulting from the simultaneous and conflicting regulation by the federal government and by the 48 states. They will therefore, ask that entire governmental control of the rates and practices of interstate carriers, except purely local matters, be placed in the hands of a federal body so that interstate traffic may be regulated without reference to state lines, leaving to the state commissions jurisdiction only over local matters and local public utilities. As a part of this plan, a compulsory system of federal incorporation is to be recommended, accompanied by federal supervision of railroad stock and bond issues.

A reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be asked, in order to enable the commission properly to exercise its increased powers. It is also proposed that the preparation and prosecution of cases against the railroads shall be delegated to some other agency of the government, possibly the Department of Justice, so that the commission may devote its energies to its administrative functions.

With the commission thus relieved of some of its present duties and equipped to handle its business more promptly, the railroads will urge that the period during which the commission may now suspend proposed increases in rates be reduced from ten months to 60 days, with provision for reparation to be paid to the shippers if the advance shall be declared unreasonable.

They will also ask that the commission be given the power to prescribe minimum as well as maximum rates so that in meeting complaints of discrimination the commission may order the advance of a rate which it considers too low.

One of the most important recommendations for which the railroads will ask favorable consideration is that the commission be specifically authorized to take into account in rate regulation the effect of rates upon total earnings in the light of expenses.

While the Newlands Committee is required, under the resolution creating it, to submit a report by January 2 next, it is not anticipated that the Committee will have come anywhere near completing its labors then.

Watch the Lungs of Your Hogs

A common disease of young growing hogs is bronchitis. It is often associated with sore throat and cold in the head. Two common causes are dusty quarters and lungworms. Exposure to cold or wet, with snow or rain, may result in the animal taking cold. This frequently happens in the fall or winter, especially where hogs are allowed to pile up. In its mild form the only symptom is a cough.

In the severe forms, there is fever, quickened breathing, coughing, and loss of appetite. Violent coughing spells accompanied by a discharge of mucous from the mouth occur. It often, if unchecked, ends in pneumonia.

Remove the cause, especially piling up. Feed a nourishing, well-balanced ration of mill feed slop, soaked oats, etc. Let the animal inhale steam from a one-to-twenty solution of Standard Stock Dip and boiling water, two or three times a day——Feed Standard Hog Regulator regularly to keep the stomach and bowels in good shape and an early improvement will be seen.

HAD GATHERED IN TREASURE

Lecturer Evidently Was Not in Class That Lets "Good Things" Get Away From Them.

After addressing a woman's cooking club, a famous lecturer was besieged by the members who questioned him about his own household and about his kitchen in particular.

"Are you satisfied with your cook?" someone asked him.

"Yes, indeed," was the reply.

"Is she economical?"

"Very."

"Can she make pies and prepare all sorts of soups?"

"The best in the land."

"Is she neat about her work?"

"As tidy as a pin and as attractive in appearance as one would care to see."

"How does he dispose of her?"

"I think she's perfect."

That evening the lecturer entertained one of the maroons who had been having trouble with her cook. "I don't wonder you don't worry the girl."

With self-satisfied smile the lecturer replied:

"That's exactly what I did."

Teaching and Learning.

Learn is more than a verbal difference between learn and teach. There is a vital difference. Education comes by learning, not by teaching. And what is learning? It is the experience of the start. We learn by doing is an old saying, and it is true. It is the only way to learn. One can teach till doomsday and not make a scholar, a real man, a true citizen out of a boy. Teach is a misnomer in the realm of education. Such a one is a coach, a trainer, a leader. Telling a child should be undertaken with great caution for when the child loses the lesson he loses the truth. Education is really absorption, and the duty of the teacher is to put the child where the absorption proceeds. This may not be professional, but it is to be commended because it isn't.

CHAPTER IX (Continued).

"Don't let anything hinder you! Don't let anything hinder you!" suddenly babbled out the little brook, and he gathered up his suit cases and started on.

"I am going to carry my suit case," declared a very decided voice behind him, and a small hand seized hold of its handle.

"I beg your pardon, you are not!" declared Gordon in a much more determined voice.

"But they are too heavy for you—both of them—and the umbrella too," she protested. "Give me the umbrella then."

But he would not give her even the umbrella, rejoicing in his strength to shield her and bear her burdens. As she walked beside him, she remembered vividly a morning when George Hayne had made her carry two heavy baskets, that his hands might be free to shoot birds. Could this be the same George Hayne?

Altogether, it was a happy walk, and far shorter than either had expected it to be, though Gordon worried not a little about his frail companion before they came to the outskirts of the village, and kept begging her to sit down and rest again, but she would not. She was quite eager and excited about the strange village to which they were coming. Its outlying farm houses were all so clean and white, with green blinds folded placidly over their front windows, and only their back doors astir. The cows all looked peaceful, and the dogs all seemed friendly.

They walked up the village street, shaded in patches with flecks of sunshine through the young leaves. If anyone had told Celia Hathaway the night before that she would have walked and talked thus today with her bridegroom she would have laughed him to scorn. But now all unconsciously she had drifted into an attitude of friendliness with the man whom she had thought to hate all the rest of her life.

One long, straight, maple lined street, running parallel to the stream, comprised the village. They walked to the center of it, and still saw no signs of a restaurant. A postoffice, a couple of stores and a bakery made up the business portion of the town, and upon inquiry it appeared that there was no public eating house, the one hotel of the place having been sold at auction the week before on account of the death of the owner. The early village loungers stared distinterestedly at the phenomenal appearance in their midst of a couple of city folks with their luggage and no apparent means of transit except their two delicately shod feet. It presented a problem too grave to be solved unassisted, and there were solemn shakings of the head over them. At last one who had discourteously stared the village lack of a public inn asked casually:

"Hed a runaway?"

"Oh no!" laughed Gordon pleasantly. "We didn't travel with horses."

"Hed a puncture then," announced the village wiseacre, shifting from one foot to the other.

"Will you come the wrong direction to git help," said another languid listener. "Thur ain't no garridge here. The feller what used to keep it skipped out with Sam Galt's wife a month ago. You'd ought to 'a' turned back to Asheville. They got a good blacksmith there can tinker ye up."

"Is that so?" said Gordon interestedly. "Well now that's too bad, but perhaps as it can't be helped we'll have to forget it. What's the next town on ahead and how far?"

"Sugar Grove's two mile further on, and Milston's five. They've got a garridge and a restrant to Milton but that's only sence the railroad built a junction there."

"Has any one here a conveyance I could hire to take us to Milton?" questioned Gordon, looking anxiously about the indolent group.

"I wouldn't want to drive to Milton for less'n $5," declared a lazy youth after a suitable pause.

"Very well," said Gordon. "How soon can you be ready, and what sort of a rig have you?" Will it be comfortable for the lady?"

The youth eyed the graceful woman in her dainty city dress scornfully. His own country lass was dressed far prettier to his mind, but the eyes of her, so blue like the little weed-flowers at her breast, went to his head. His tongue was suddenly tied.

"It's all right. It's as good's you'll get," volunteered a sullen faced man half sitting on a sugar barrel. He was of a type who preferred to see fashionable ladies uncomfortable.

The youth departed for his "team" and after some inquiries Gordon found that he might be able to persuade the owner of the tiny white colonial cot across the street to prepare a "snack" for himself and his companion, so they went across the street and waited 15 minutes in a dank little hair cloth parlor adorned in funeral wreaths and knit tidies, for a delicious breakfast of poached eggs, coffee, home made bread, butter like roses, and a comb of amber honey. To each the experience was a new one, and they enjoyed it together like two children, letting their eyes speak volumes of comments in the midst of the old lady's volubility. Unconsciously by their experiences they were being brought into sympathy with each other.

The "rig" when it arrived at the door driven by the blushing youth proved to be a high spring wagon with two seats. In the front one the youth lounged without a thought of assisting his passengers. Gordon swung the baggage up, and then lifted the girl into the back seat, himself taking the place beside her, and planting a firm hand and arm behind the backless seat, that she might feel more secure.

That ride, with his arm behind her, was just one more link in the pretty chain of sympathy that was being welded about these two. Unconsciously more and more she began to droop, until when she grew very tired he seemed to know at once.

"Just lean against my arm," he said. "You must be very tired and it will help you bear the jolting." He spoke as if his arm were made of wood or iron, and was merely one of his belongings, like an umbrella or suit case. He made it seem quite the natural thing for her to lean against him. If he had claimed it as her right and privilege as wife, she would have recoiled from him for recalling to her the hated relation, and would have sat straight as a bean pole the rest of the way, but, as it was, she sank back a trifle deprecatingly, and realized that it was a great help. In her heart she thanked him for making it possible for her to rest without entirely compromising her attitude toward him. There was nothing about it that suggested anything loverlike, it seemed just a common courtesy.

Yet the strong arm almost trembled as he felt the precious weight against it, and he wished that the way were 10 miles instead of five. Once, as Celia leaned forward to point to a particularly lovely bit of view that opened up as they wound around a curve in the road, they ran over a stone, and the wagon gave an unexpected jolt. Gordon reached his hand out to steady her, and she settled back to his arm with a sense of safety and being cared for that was very pleasant. Looking up shyly, she saw his eyes upon her, with that deep look of admiration and something more, and again that strange thrill of joy that had come when he gave her the forget-me-nots swept through her. She felt almost as if she were harboring a sinful thought when she remembered the letters he had written, but the joy of the day, and the sweetness of happiness for even a moment, when she had been for so long a time sad, was so pleasant that she let herself enjoy it and drift, refusing to think evil of him now here, in this bright day. Thus like children on a picnic, they passed through Sugar Grove and came to the town of Milton, and there they bade their driver good by, rewarding him with a crisp $5 bill. He drove home with a vision of smiles in forget-me-not eyes, and a marked inability to tell anything about his wonderful passengers who had filled the little village with awe and amazement and had given no clue to anyone as to who or what they were.

CHAPTER X.

But to go back to the pursuer, in his berth, baffled and frantic and raging. With hands that fumbled because of their very eagerness he sought to get into his garments, and find his shoes from the melee of blankets and other articles in the berth, all the time keeping one eye out of the window, for he must not let his prey get away from him now. He must watch and see what they were going to do. How fortunate that he had wakened in time for that. At least he would have a clue. Where was this? A station?

He stopped operations once more to gaze off at the landscape, a desolate country scene to his city hardened eyes. Not a house in sight, nor a station. The spires of the distant village seemed like a mirage to him. This couldn't be a station. What were those two doing down there anyway? Dared he risk calling the conductor and having him hold them? No, this affair must be kept absolutely quiet. Mr. Holman had said that if a breath of the matter came out it was worse than death for all concerned. He must just get off this train as fast as he could and follow them if they were getting away. It might be he could get the man in a lonely place—it would be easy enough to watch his chance and gag the lady. He had done such things before. He felt far more at home in such an affair that he had the night before at the Holman dinner table. What a pity one of the others had not come along. It would be mere child's play for two to handle those two, who looked as if they would turn frightened at the first threat. However, he felt confident that he could manage the affair alone.

He panted with haste and succeeded in getting the wrong legs into his trousers and having to begin all over again his efforts greatly hampered by the necessity for watching out the window.

Then came the distant rumble of an oncoming train, and an answering scream from his own engine. The two on the ground had crossed quickly over the second track and were looking down the steep embankment. Were they going down there? What fate that he was not ready to follow them at once! The train that was coming would pass their own would start—and he could not get out. His opportunity was going from him and he could not find his shoes!

Well what of it? He would go without! What were shoes in a time like this? Surely he could get along barefoot and beg a pair at some farm house, or buy a pair at a country store. He must get out at any cost, shoes or no shoes. Grasping his coat, which contained his money and valuables, he sprang from his berth straight into the arms of the porter, who was hurrying back to his car after having been out to gossip with a brakeman over the delay.

"What's de mattah, sah?" asked the astonished porter, rallying quickly from the shock and assuming his habitual courtesy.

"My shoes!" roared the irate traveler. "What have you done with my shoes?"

"Quiet sah, please sah, you'll wake de whole cyah," said the porter. "I put yoh shoes under de berth, sah, right whar I allus puts 'em aftah blackin', sah."

The porter stooped and extracted the shoes from beneath the curtain and the traveler, whose experience in Pullmans was small, grabbed them furiously and made for the door, shoes in hand, for with a snort and a lurch and a preliminary jar the train had taken up its motion, and a loud rushing outside proclaimed that the other train was passing.

The porter, feeling that he had been treated with injustice, stood gazing reproachfully after the man for a full minute before he followed him to tell him that the wash room was at the other end of the car and not down past the drawing room as he evidently supposed.

He found his man standing in stocking feet on the cold iron platform, his head out of the opening left in the vestibuled train, for when the porter came in he had drawn shut the outer door and slammed down the movable platform making it impossible for any one to get out. There was only the little opening the size of a window above the grating guard and the man clung to it as if he would jump over it if he only dared. He was looking back over the track and his face was not good to see.

He turned wildly upon the porter.

"I want you to stop this train and let me off," he shouted. "I've lost something valuable back there on the track. Stop the train quick, I tell you, or I'll sue the railroad."

"What was it you lost?" asked the porter respectfully. He wasn't sure but the man was half asleep yet.

"It was a—my—why, it was a very valuable paper. It means a fortune to me and several other people and I must go back and get it. Stop the train, I tell you, at once or I'll jump out."

"I can't stop de train, sah, you'll hev to see de conductuh, sah, 'bout dat. But I specks there's mighty little prospec' o' gettin' dis train stopped foh it gits to it destinashun, sah. We's one hour a'hind time now, sah, an' he's gotta make up foh we gits to Buff'lo."

The excited passenger railed and stormed until several sleepers were awakened and stuck curious sleepy countenances out from the curtains of their berths, but the porter was obdurate, and would not take any measures to stop the train, nor even call the conductor until the passenger promised to return quietly to his berth.

The thick set man was not used to obeying, but he saw that he was only hindering himself and finally hurried back to his berth, where he hastily parted the curtains, craning his neck to see back along the track and over the green valley growing smaller and smaller now in the distance. He could just make out two moving specs on the white winding ribbon of the road. He felt sure he knew the direction they were taking. If he only could get off that train he could easily catch them, for they would have no idea he was coming and would take no precautions. If he had only wakened a few seconds sooner he would have been following them even now.

Fully 10 minutes he argued with the conductor, showing a wide incongruity between his language and his gentlemanly attire, but the conductor would do nothing but promise that he would set him down at a water tower 10 miles ahead where they had to slow up for water. He said sue or no sue he had his orders, and the thick-set man did not inspire him either to sympathy or confidence. The conductor had been many years on the road and generally knew when to stop his train and when to let it go on.

Sullenly the thick-set man accepted the conductor's decision and prepared to leave the train at the water tower, his eye out for the landmarks along the way as he completed his hasty toilet.

He was in no pleasant frame of mind, having missed a goodly amount of his accustomed stimulants the night before, and seeing little prospect of either stimulants or breakfast before him. He was not built for a 10-mile walk over the cinders and his flabby muscles already ached at the prospect. But then, of course, he would not have to go before he found an automobile or some kind of conveyance to help him on his way. He looked eagerly from the window for indications of garages or stables, but the river wound its silver way among the gray green willow fringes, and the new grass shone a placid emerald plain with nothing more human than a few cows grazing here and there. Not even a horse that might be borrowed without his owner's knowledge. It was a strange, forsaken spot, 10 whole miles and no sign of any public livery. Off to the right and left he could see villages, but they were most of them too far away from the track to help him any. It began to look as if he must just foot it all the way. Now and then a small shanty or tiny dwelling whizzed by near at hand, but nothing that would relieve his situation.

If occurred to him to go into the dining car for breakfast, but even as he thought of it the conductor told him the train would stop in two minutes and he must be ready to get off, for they did not stop long.

He certainly looked a harmless creature, that thick-set man as he stood alone upon the cinder elevation and surveyed the landscape o'er. Ten miles from his quarry, alone on a stretch of endless ties and rails with a gleaming river mocking him down in the valley, and a laughing sky jeering overhead. He started down the shining track, his temper a wreck, his mind in chaos, his soul at war with the world. The worst of it all was that the whole fault was his own for going to sleep. He began to fear that he had lost his chance. Then he set his ugly jaw and strode ahead.

The morning sun poured down upon the thick-set man and his pilgrimage, and waxed hotter until noon. Trains whizzed mercilessly by and gave him no succor. Weary, faint and fiercely thirsty he came at last to the spot where he was satisfied his quarry had escaped. He could see the marks of their rough descent in the steep cinder bank and assaying the same himself came a shred of purple silk caught on a bramble at the foot.

Puffing and panting, bruised and foot-sore he sat down at the very place where Celia had stopped to have her shoes fastened and mopped his purple brow, but there was triumph in his ugly eye, and after a few moments' rest he trudged onward. That town over there ought to yield both conveyance and food as well as information concerning those he sought. He would catch them. They could never get away from him. He was on their track again, though hours behind. He would get them yet and no man should take his reward from him.

Almost spent he came at last to the village and ate a surprisingly large dish of beef and vegetable stew at the quaint little house where Celia and Gordon had breakfasted, but the old lady who served it to them was shy about talking, and though admitting that a couple of people had been there that morning she was non-committal about their appearance. They might have been young and good-looking and worn feathers in their hats, and they might not. She wasn't one for noticing people's appearance if they treated her civilly and paid their bills. Would he have another cup of coffee? He would, and also two more pieces of pie, but he got very little further information.

It was over at the corner store where he finally went in search of something stronger than coffee that he further pursued his investigations.

The loungers were still there. It was their only business in life and they were most diligent in it. They eyed the newcomer with a relish and settled back on their various barrels and boxes to enjoy whatever entertainment the gods were about to provide to relieve their monotonous existence.

A house divided against itself cannot stand. This man's elegant garments assumed for the nonce did not fit the rest of his general appearance which had been accentuated by his long, hot, dusty tramp. The high evening hat was jammed on the back of his head and bore a decided dent where it had rolled down the cinder embankment, his collar was wilted and lifeless, his white laundered tie at half mast, his coat awry, and his fine patent leather shoes which pinched were covered with dust and had caused a limp like the hardest tramp upon the road. Moreover, again the speech of the man betrayed him, and the keen-minded old gossips who were watching him suspiciously sized him up at once the minute he opened his mouth.

"Saw anything of a couple of young folks walking down this way?" he inquired casually, pausing to light a cigar with which he was reinforcing himself for further travel.

One man allowed that there might have passed such people that day. He hardly seemed willing to commit himself, but another vouchsafed the information that "Joe here driv two parties of thet description to Milton this mornin'—jes' got back. Mebbe he could answer fer 'em."

Joe frowned. He did not like the looks of the thick set man. He still remembered the forget me not eyes.

But the stranger made instant request to be driven to Milton, offering $10 for the same when he found that his driver was reluctant, and that Milton was a railroad center. A few keen questions had made him sure that his man had gone to Milton.

Joe haggled, allowed his horse was tired, and he didn't care about the trip twice in one day, but finally agreed to take the man for $15, and sauntered off to get a fresh horse. He had no mind to be in a hurry. He had his own opinion about letting those two "parties" get out of the way before the third put in an appearance, but he had no mind to lose the $15. It would help to buy the ring he coveted for his girl.

In due time Joe rode leisurely up and the impatient traveler climbed into the high spring wagon and was driven away from the apathetic gaze of the country loungers, who unblinkingly took in the fact that Joe was headed toward Ashville, and evidently intended taking his fare to Milton by way of that village, a 30-mile drive at least. The man would get the worth of his money in ride. A grim twinkle sat in their several eyes as the spring wagon turned the curve in the road and was lost to sight, and after due silence an old stager spoke:

"Do you reckon that there was their sho-fur?" he requested languidly.

"Naw!" replied a farmer's son vigorously. "He wouldn't try to showf all dolled up like that. He's the rich dad comin' after the runaways. Joe don't intend he shell get 'em yet awhile. I reckon the ceremony'll be over 'fore he steps in to interfere." This lad went twice a month to Milton to the "movies" and was regarded as an authority on matters of romance. A pause showed that his theory had taken root in the minds of his auditors.

"Wal, I reckon Joe thinks the longest way round is the shortest way home," declared the old stager. "Joe never did like them codfish'swells—but how do you 'count fer the style o' that gal? She wan't like her dad one little bit."

"Oh, she's ben to collidge, I 'spose," declared the youth. "They get all that off'n collidge."

"Serves the old man right fer sendin' his gal to a fool collidge when she ought to a ben home learnin' to housekeep. I hope she gits off with her young man all right," said a grim old lounger, and a cackle of laughter went round the group, which presently broke up, for this had been a strenuous day and all felt their need of rest; besides they wanted to get home and tell the news before some neighbor got ahead of them.

All this time Celia and Gordon were touring Milton, serenely unconscious of danger near, or guardian angel of the name of Joe.

Investigation disclosed the fact that there was a train for Pittsburgh about 3 in the afternoon. Gordon sent a code telegram to his chief, assuring him of the safety of the message, and of his own intention to proceed to Washington as fast as steam could carry him. Then he took the girl to a restaurant, where they mounted two high stools and partook with an unusually ravenous appetite of nearly everything on the menu—corn soup, roast beef, baked trout, stewed tomatoes, cold slaw, custard, apple and mince pies, with a cup of good country coffee and real cream—all for 25 cents apiece.

It was a very merry meal. Celia felt somehow as if for the time all memory of the past had been taken from her, and she were free to think and act happily in the present, without any great problems to solve or decisions to make. Just two young people off having a good time, they were, at least until that afternoon train came.

After their dinner, they took a short walk to a tiny park where two white ducks disported themselves on a 7x9 pond, spanned by a rustic bridge where lovers had cut their initials. Gordon took out his knife and idly cut C. H. in the rought bark of the upper rail, while his companion sat on the little board seat and watched him. She was pondering over the fact that he had cut her initials, and not his own. It would have been like the George of old to cut his own and never think once of hers. And he had put but one H. Probably he thought of her now as Celia Hayne, without the Hathaway, or else he was so used to writing her name Celia Hathaway that he was not thinking at all.

Those letters! How they haunted her and clouded every bright experience that she fain would have grasped and held for a little hour. They were silent now, while he worked and she thought. He had finished the C. H., and was cutting another C; but, instead of making another H, he carefully carved out the letter G. What was that for? C. G.? Who was C. G.? Oh, how stupid! George, of course. He had started a C by mistake. But he did not add the expected H. Instead he snapped his knife shut, laid his hand over the carving, and leaned over the rail.

"Some time, perhaps, we'll come here again, and remember," he said, and then bethought he had no right to hope for any such anniversary.

"Oh!" She looked up into his eyes, startled, troubled, the haunting of her fears in the shadows of the blue.

He looked down into them and read her trouble, read and understood, and looked back his great desire to comfort her.

His look carried further than he meant it should. For the third time that day a thrill of wonder and delight passed over her and left her fearful with a strange joy that she felt she should put from her.

It was only an instant, that look, but it brought the bright color to both faces, and made Gordon feel the immediate necessity of changing the subject.

"See those little fishes down there," he said, pointing to the tiny lake below them.

Through a blur of tears, the girl looked down and saw the tiny, sharp finned creatures darting here and there in a beam of sun like a small searchlight set to show them off.

She moved her hand on the rail to lean further over, and her soft fingers touched his hand for a moment. She would not draw them away quickly, lest she hurt him; why, she did not know, but she could not—would not—hurt him. Not now! The two hands lay side by side for a full minute, and the touch to Gordon was as if a rose leaf had kissed his soul. He had never felt anything sweeter. He longed to gather the little hand into his clasp and feel its pulses trembling there as he had felt it in the church the night before, but she was not his. He might not touch her till she had her choice of what to do, and she would never choose him, never, when she knew how he had deceived her.

MAKE GOOD PROGRESS ON ALASKA RAILROAD

Chief of Engineering Corps Reports 130 Miles of Line In Operation.

Seward, Alaska, (by mail)—William C. Edes, chairman of the Alaskan Engineering commission, who recently returned from Anchorage, reports excellent progress on the construction of the United States railroad.

Fifty-nine miles of track have been laid from Anchorage. With the 71 miles of the old Alaska Northern railway that are now in operation to Kearn creek, there have been completed 130 miles of the 470 that will connect Seward and Fairbanks. The track so far laid from Anchorage consists of six miles south toward Seward, 38 miles of main line northward to Fairbanks and 15 miles on the Matanuska branch into the Matanuska coal fields.

The right of way has been cleared from Potter creek, on Turnagain Arm, to Kings river, in the Matanuska coal field, a distance of 77 miles, and on the main line from Matanuska to the Little Susitna river. Rail will be laid this fall as far as Kings river, on the Matanuska branch, a distance of 62 miles from Anchorage, and to Wassilla, on the main line, approximately 15 miles from Matanuska. On the main line in the Susitna valley, between Montana creek and Indian river, a distance of 35 miles, the right of way is 70 per cent cleared and a number of grading contracts have been let. Grading of the right of way will proceed in this section from Talkeetna to Willow creek and north to Broad pass. At Willow creek it will connect with the work under the Matanuska district, and at Broad Pass with the work from the Nenana division.

Rail will be laid in the near future as far as Potter creek, which is 35 miles southeast of Anchorage on Turnagain Arm, and from which point the rock work on Turnagain Arm will be attacked during the winter.

For the week ending September 8, 3,568 men were employed on the Anchorage division, which includes commission employes, station men and laborers, the August payroll being $354,330,000.

The population of Anchorage, which is the main construction base on the railroad, is between 4,000 and 5,000. At Matanuska, the junction of the Matanuska branch with the main line, a townsite was recently surveyed by the government and a town is now in course of development. There is also a small town at Moose creek, about 8 miles from Anchorage, where the railroad crosses the Knik-Willow creek wagon road, several people are gathering. Wassilla will be the distributing point for freight and supplies for the Willow creek mining district. The government is taking immediate steps to survey small townsites at these places.

The railroad north and south from Anchorage passes through and develops a large agricultural country. There are now between 500 and 1,000 homesteaders along the line of the railroad in this section, and the agricultural land is being rapidly developed. The homesteaders are supplying a considerable portion of the foodstuffs for the railroad employes and other people, and that section of the country. Recently the Alaskan Engineering commission contracted for 400 tons, or over 13,000 bushels, of potatoes with the Matanuska farmers. Products are being hauled by the farmers to Matanuska and shipped over the railroad to Anchorage and other points along the line. There is still room for a large number of homesteaders in the vicinity of the railroad, and the government hopes to encourage farmers from the states to come to Alaska and take up homesteads in the territory tributary to the railroad in order to develop the agricultural lands so that the country may some day in the near future be self supporting.

Good for Norah!

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The cook in a minister's home at Clifton, Pa., deserves something like a Carnegie medal. Her name is Norah Bloomgood. A tramp came to the door and asked for something to eat. She promptly and liberally complied with his request. He insulted her and she knocked him down, fracturing his skull, with probably fatal result. If Norah of the Amazonian arm had turned a deaf ear to the petition of the wayfarer, perhaps the reader would not sympathize. But she had played the part of the Good Samaritan and insolence was her reward. She struck in self defense, for, even though no act of violence was committed, any woman's feelings are decidedly part of herself. The case is one more proof that modern feminism is not restricted to the drawing room and the boudoir. It stands at the kitchen range and before the laundry tubs. The solution of the servant problem in large part depends on consideration for the servant's feelings. No prudent mistress today treats the wage earner discourteously. She knows her maid will quickly flounce out of the house at the first scent of an imposition. Conditions are the reverse of those that formerly obtained; it is the mistress who is anxious for fear she will not suit her employe. It is all very well for husbands to storm at household inefficiency and suggest that the cook or the housemaid be discharged, but they have not the task of providing a substitute. A "strong arm" cultivated like Norah does not have to take back talk from anybody. It was fortunate for the man who engaged her that her muscle could spend itself on an itinerant miscreant and not upon themselves.

Initiative.

By Elbert Hubbard.

The world bestows its big prizes, both money and honors, for but one thing. And that is initiative.

What is initiative?

I'll tell you: It is doing the right thing without being told.

But next to doing the thing without being told is to do it when you are told once. That is to say, carry the Message to Garcia: those who can carry a message get high honors, but their pay is always in proportion.

Next, there are those who never do a thing until they are told twice; such get no honors and small pay.

Next, there are those who do the thing only when necessity kicks them from behind, and these get indifference instead of honors, and a pittance for pay. This kind spends most of its time polishing a bench with a hard luck story.

Then, still lower down in the scale than this, we have the fellow who will not do the right thing even when some one stands along to show him how and stays to see that he does it; he is always out of a job and receives the contempt he deserves. Nevertheless he happens to have a rich pa, in which case destiny patiently awaits around the corner with stuffed club.

Coffee Was Cupid's Weapon.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

Six years back in Rochester, Mrs. Harrison R. Bullard, civil war veteran, attended a state encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic and drank three cups of coffee at a refreshment stand conducted by the woman's relief corps.

Harrison R. Bullard now is 71 years old and still a lover of good coffee. He has just married the member of the woman's relief corps who made the coffee. Her name was Mrs. Mary Melissa Evans. She is 57 years old and was widow of a veteran. Coffee served after the ceremony.

Monkeys Effected a Reform.

From the New York Telegraph.

When it comes to furnishing a "never again" incentive, pink lizards with green eyes have nothing on the ordinary or garden variety of monkeys ...take it from divers erstwhile customers ...of a cafe down Broadway. The aforementioned former disciples of Bacchus ...tried out the treatment on a recent ...afternoon and know whereof they ...speak.

It was along about 3 o'clock that Mr ...and Mrs. George McFadden and Mrs. ...E. T. Mrs. McFadden ...already possessed a parrot and a dog, ...both of which she keeps in her apart...ments, but a menagerie is never so ...large there isn't room for one more.

Accordingly, when she spied several ...tiny monkeys peeping out from various ...pockets of the vender she instantly de...cided she must have one forthwith for ...her very own. The animals sprang from their hiding ...places in the vender's coat and made ...for the nearest haven of refuge, which ...chanced to be the cafe. Nearly two ...dozen patrons of the place were leaning in various attitudes of ease about ...the mahogany bar as the monkeys entered. The first man to see the animals glanced a second time in a startled manner and then turned hastily to ...his neighbor to loudly discuss the weather, lest the other should notice his ...strange manner.

When several of those present had noticed the invasion, however, the first sightseer gained a bit more courage and ...he was able to ask in a rather squeaky ...voice:

Upon being assured they did, he ...gained more courage and turned to take ...a second look. Austrian Emperor, Princely Monarch, Blackened by Scandals and Intrigue Reign One of Most Notable of Modern Times—Held Dual Empire Together By Strong Grasp of an Impossible Situation Through 68 Years.

Vienna, Nov 22.—Emperor Francis Joseph has for three score years been one of the great figures in the affairs of Europe and the world at large and, although his extended reign has been clouded with many grievous personal afflictions, notably the suicide of his only son and the assassination of his wife, it has been marked also by events of far reaching and beneficent statesmanship. He has seen Hungary emerge from a condition of open rebellion, which was quelled with the aid of Russia; his Italian dominions were saved by the genius of General Radetsky, he cast his influence strongly, although ineffectually, to prevent the Crimean war. After the Austro-French war in 1859 he was compelled to sign the treaty of peace of Villafranca, by which Lombardy was ceded to Italy. In 1866 he lost the duchy of Holstein and in the same year, as a result of the war with Prussia, he lost Venetia also. That year was fatal to the supremacy of Austria in Germany, the contest being decided in favor of Prussia by the treaties of Nikolsburg and Prague, respectively. The Turkish provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina were, by the decision of the Berlin congress in 1878, placed under the administration of Austria-Hungary. These are some of the great events of the reign which has just come to a close.

But in human interest his personal sorrows overshadowed all. One after another they came upon him. In 1853 the list of tragic incidents began with an attempt upon his own life. In 1867 his brother, the Archduke Maximillian, after three years' experiment as emperor of Mexico, was captured by the army of the patriots and condemned to death by a courtmartial, whose sentence was executed notwithstanding intercession in his behalf by the governments of the United States, England and Prussia.

Man of Many Amours.

There followed the burning to death of a niece in Vienna a sister met similar fate in Paris, and a cousin drowned himself in Stahrenberg lake. Yet these were but minor tragedies in comparison with that which befell the ancient house of the Hapsburgs in 1889, when Rudolf, the imperial prince upon whom the Austrians pinned their hopes, met death in a mystery which to this day is not cleared.

Graves hold the secret of that fateful night at a hunting lodge in Meyerling. There have been a dozen versions of what occurred. One "true story" relates that the crown prince was struck dead by Baltazzi, a Hungarian chevalier, who loved the Baroness Marie Vetsera and who was frenzied by finding the girl and Prince Rudolf together in the castle of Meyerling after the crown prince had given his pledge not to see the girl again. Another that the crown prince killed the uncle of the young baroness when he came to rescue her and that both of the young lovers afterward committed suicide. The truth is not known.

Clouded in still deeper mystery if possible, was the disappearance that same year of Francis Joseph's favorite nephew, the Archduke Johann Salvator. Heir to the throne at the death of Rudolf, he renounced all his imperial dignities and fled the country as John Orth, captain of a merchant ship, never to be heard of again. The next of kin the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, who became heir presumptive added a further burden to his uncle's heart by morganatic marriage to Sophie, the countess of Shotek. It was he and his wife who were assassinated at Sarajevo in June, 1914.

Murder of the Empress.

But it is doubtful if any or all of these reverses weighed more heavily upon the emperor's heart than the tragedy at Geneva, when the Empress Elizabeth, who had been called the most beautiful woman in Europe, was stabbed to death by an Italian anarchist in 1898. True, she long had been estranged from the emperor but he had never ceased to respect and adore her. When a courier brought him the news of the crime he exclaimed: "Alas, nothing can be spared me nothing."

Gossip dealt plentifully with his private life, filled with romance and misfortune. It is related that his mother intended him to marry Princess Helena, eldest daughter of Duke Max of Bavaria. With passive indifference the young emperor agreed to his mother's wishes, and set out to pay court to his intended bride. He got no further than the park surrounding the duke's castle, where he spied a little girl whose extraordinary beauty attracted him.

He learned that she was Princess Elizabeth, younger sister of his intended. He resolved that Elizabeth should be his bride, and so she became in 1854.

In addition to her beauty Elizabeth was highly endowed with talents, but she found no welcome at court. The emperor's mother would hardly countenance the match, and all of the Viennese aristocracy held aloof from her. Elizabeth returned scorn for scorn. Her enemies bore her every tale that could wound her pride and estrange her love. At last they succeeded. In a burst of pique she fled to her native Bavaria. She came back, but the Viennese never forgave her. They charged her with loving fox hunting in Ireland better than her duty and preferred to remember her always as the absent wife.

The estrangement widened. The emperor was fond of pretty women and Vienna did not lack them. The empress grew more and more to consider herself "a dutiful sovereign lady" and less and less a wife. The tragic death of her only son drew her nearer to her husband for a while, but there came a succeeding period of stronger repulsion, and thereafter she almost disappeared from the Hofburg.

Downfall of Gossipers.

Then appeared Katharina Schratt, formerly of the Imperial theater. By her tact and wit she succeeded in creating for herself a place below but beside the throne never accorded before her time so openly and so permanently to any woman. Speculation as to her relations with the emperor was wide and malicious. Of course, it found its way to the emp. s, and there followed an incident which testifies to her uncommon delicacy and courage.

Nettled by the continual humiliation of such distasteful scandal mongering, she devised a way to end it. One day she took her youngest daughter by the hand, and, to the immeasurable astonishment of her guests, set out to pay a long call on Frau Schratt at her country palace in Ischl where all the world knew the emperor spent hours daily. That ended it effectually. It was impossible to gossip before the empress about a condition which she herself had socially legalized by her presence.

Whatever the truth about Katharina Schratt and the emperor, she had the good sense never to attempt to influence him politically. Those of her predecessors who had dared more boldly paid the penalty of sudden and noiseless removal from his surroundings. When upon the assassination of the empress, the court went into mourning, Frau Schratt was seen but little. Shortly, the old intimacy was openly resumed, but it was impossible to continue malignant about a friendship that lengthened into old age, and the sting of criticism gradually died out. At Shonbrunn castle Frau Schratt appeared nearly every afternoon to keep the emperor company for an hour or two. In turn he delighted to call on her at her town house as a private gentleman, where he could meet a few friends of his own choosing, and not guests imposed on him by etiquet or reasons of state. Politics was never discussed. Frau Schratt had her own town house and her own country house, together with a goodly allowance, but it never was objected that the emperor was lavish with her and she had the discretion not to make her ostentation a national scandal.

Since the last illness of the emperor-king—Francis Joseph was king of Hungary as well as emperor of Austria—became generally known the eyes of the entire world have been turned toward Schoenbrunn, the beautiful summer palace on the outskirts of Vienna, in which the emperor-king had been fighting his last battle. The venerable monarch suffered from inflammation of the lungs. His spare sinewy body put up a heroic fight at the command of his indomitable will but from the beginning the chances were against him. There was not enough strength in the enfeebled frame to throw off the grip of the fatal disease.

A Princely Man.

With his passing there goes from the circle of European sovereigns the most imperial, most kingly and the most princely man that ever has filled a throne. When he is laid away in his final resting place the people of Austria and of Hungary will have seen the last of a monarch who in the truest sense of the word was the father of his people, a noble, unselfish and modest man, a man born to inherit the heights of human achievement, but whose life bowed his head in the deepest sorrow. His people have called him the silent sufferer the uncomplaining martyr, the monarch who not only wore the crown of empire but to whose brow fate bound the crown of thorns. And silently he suffered. His sense of duty to his imperial and royal obligations made him forget and subordinate his grievous personal afflictions.

For about 68 years Francis Joseph occupied the throne of the dual monarchy. He followed his uncle in 1848, and those were troublous days at home and abroad. War on his frontiers and revolutions within his territory called for the most drastic and wise administration from this 18-year-old boy. In the beginning the arms of Austria were victorious, but the initial successes were followed by defeats at Solferino and Koenniggraecz. Hungary still gave the young king much trouble and, in addition to these national anxieties, Francis Joseph had to face a tragic series of family afflictions. His brother, Archduke Maximilian, was shot in Mexico in 1867, his only son, Rudolph, committed suicide near Vienna in 1889 and, finally, in 1898, his wife, the Empress Elizabeth, was assassinated by an Italian anarchist at Geneva.

Never once during all these years of difficult administration of his realm and personal sorrow did the determined man whose life has just come to an end give way and declare his cross to be too heavy. Bitter family dissensions marked the last 20 years of his reign, and unceasing conflicts among the various nationalities that go to compose the phantom empire of Austria darkened the evening of his life. Often it has been said of this man that only the care that he exercised held the dual monarchy together.

Idol of People.

Francis Joseph was the idol of his people, and especially of the inhabitants of his capital city, Vienna. His tall, gaunt figure was familiar to every Viennese. He rode through the streets unguarded bowing gravely to the salutations of his loving people. If it became known that he was to leave the city, a large crowd invariably would congregate on his route to the railroad station to see him drive by. He was imperial, yet democratic, for years he held weekly audiences with the common people at which any one of his subjects could appeal to him for the righting of a wrong. He would speak to the Viennese in their beloved dialect, and they recite today that in the intimacy of his own family it was his pleasure to use the language dear to them. Not one of his subjects but knew the sorrows and afflictions of his family life, and of recent years as the people realized his austere loneliness, hedged about by the extreme etiquet of the most ceremonious court of Europe, their hearts went out to him and when they spoke of the old man as "our Francis" the appellation was sympathetic and sincere. It has been the custom of the emperor, on the occasion of certain religious festivals, to march through the streets of Vienna, from the Hofburg to the church of St. Stephen. Ten years ago his people would greet the dignified figure with cheers and more or less vociferous evidences of their loyalty and love. But more recently, as they perceived and commented upon the weight of his years, the noisy salutations ceased and in their stead came a silent but heartfelt greeting to the noble and venerable monarch. He was still the same imperious ruler, but the people said "he is bowed with years and perhaps this is the last time we will see him." And after he had gone by they turned away sadly and quietly. Francis Joseph was beloved for his kindliness, his amiability, his modesty and his rectitude. His determination and ability had saved the empire from a hundred dangers, and his high moral courage had made it possible for him to hold in leash the fretting and threatening aspirations of Chech, Pole, Magyar Serve, Ruthenian and Bulgar.

The dead monarch suffered long and uncomplainingly, and in a sense his people are glad that death finally has brought him a surcease of earthly strife and sorrow. His long life has exemplified more than that of any sovereign of today the maxim that "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

Born in 1830.

Francis Joseph I, was born in the royal palace of Schoenbrunn, Vienna, August 18, 1830. He was the eldest son of Archduke Francis Charles, second son of Emperor Francis I of Austria and of Archduchess Sophie, princess of Bavaria. Ferdinand I, abdicated, the crown was renounced by Francis Charles, and Francis Joseph became emperor of Austria on December 2, 1848.

Francis Joseph's marriage took place on April 24, 1854. His bride was princess Elizabeth Amalie Eugenie, daughter of Duke Maximilian Joseph, and cousin on her mother's side to the king of Bavaria. Four children were born to the royal couple. They were the Achduchess Sophie, born in 1855 and dying in infancy two years later. Archduchess Gisela, born in 1856, who became the wife of Prince Leopold second son of Prince Luitpold of Bavaria. Archduke Rudolph, born in 1858 and died in 1889, and the Archduchess Marie Valerie, who was born in 1868, and who in 1890 became the wife of Archduke Francis Salvator.

The American Woman's Job.

Ethel R Peyser, in the World Outlook.

Mrs Harriot Stanton Blatch was in the lounge of the Woman's City club when I sent off my letter to Jane Addams. I flashed the question at her. "What is the greatest task before the American woman today?" I was almost certain her answer would be "to get the vote." As daughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton and friend of Mrs. Parkhurst and herself, the best known leader of the militant suffragists in America, I was sure her answer could be nothing else.

But Mrs. Blatch has a wider vision of the American woman's job.

"The chief task for women? Why, it is to burnish bright our national ideals, ideals as to the value of justice for all, ideals as to the need of education for all, ideals as to the wisdom of self government for every citizen.

"If approached by women in the spirit of devotion to country, their efforts for social service become acts of true patriotism, their work in education becomes a holy crusade; their labors for political enfranchisement of women also become a religious act.

"To complete this system of democracy is an arduous and sacred work. The task is important, the most important that women could just now perform.

"Women as well as men must be prepared to play their part adequately and well in time of their country's call.

"And what will be their part? The great war points the way. Have women in Europe been called in large numbers to shoulder the musket? Have they been used as franc-tireurs in home defense? Had they been used in these capacities there then would be solid reason for certain American ladies to gather in camps, arraying themselves in khaki, shouldering muskets and disporting themselves in amateurish drill.

"The women of Europe have had no time for amateurishness; they have filled the gaps in the industrial army, they have manned the places left vacant in the civil service. In short, their chief task has been to make whole the torn warp and woof of civil life.

"The country needs no women soldiers in war time, but it does need its industrial workers, its medical workers, women prepared for service in commissariat, war office, in all departments which must be enlarged or created—as passport and censor offices, in every department under the national, state and municipal governments.

"Such will be the national service required of women. And our immediate and pressing task is to plan how we should be prepared to shoulder our burden."

The Adamson Law and the Public.

From the St. Louis Republic.

It is well for both parties to the quarrel over the eight-hour railroad day to pause and consider the third party at interest.

The railroads of the United States were built by the people of the United States. The people supplied the capital—much of it in the form of large grants of valuable lands.

The people delegated the authority under which rights of way were obtained, giving a governmental, sovereign power—that of eminent domain—to the railway corporations. The people are in partnership with the railroads every hour that that power is exercised.

The people pay in every cent that meets wages on the one side and dividends and interest on the other. The people furnish every ton of freight that yields revenue.

The people of the United States have permitted their whole distributive system to be made over, since the railroad came, in such a way that the stoppage of railroads in winter would freeze us and starve us. We do not propose to have them stopped.

We, the people, are perfectly willing to admit that we have been lax and remiss in the matter of providing means for settling industrial disputes by other means than force. But we have had the awakening of our lives. We may be caught at a disadvantage, but we are infinitely stronger than either railway managers or railway men, and we propose to exercise our strength. The last appeal of all lesser bodies of men is to us. Just now we are preparing to move, through our representatives in congress, to solve this question constructively. The session begins in a few days. We prefer to settle this matter coolly, deliberately, sanely. But we mean to settle it. This is the worst time in the world to attempt to force the issue.

To extinguish flames from petroleum pour milk over them, and they will be put out immediately, for the milk forms an emulsion with the oil and prevents fire from spreading.

Uric Acid Poisoning?

The most eminent physicians recognize that uric acid stored up in the system is the cause of rheumatism, that this uric acid poison is present in the joints, muscles, or nerves. By experimenting and analysis at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y., Dr. Pierce discovered a combination of native remedies that he called Anuric—which drives out the uric acid from the system, and in this way the pain, swelling and inflammation subside. If you are a sufferer from rheumatism, backache, pains here or there, you can obtain Anuric at any drug store and get relief from the pains and ills brought about by uric acid; or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. Anuric which you will find many times more potent than lithia and eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. A short trial will convince you. Adv.

INDIAN NAMES FOR WARSIHPS

Suggestion Made That Vessels of the United States Navy Be Called After Famous Red Men.

A correspondent of the New York Times advocates Indian names for United States warships. "How to name the ships of our vastly extended navy is an interesting question. A glance down the list of the names of our naval ships does undoubtedly give the impression that 'they had been accepted by a weary man as a choice of evils.'

"It seems to me that from the men of the race longest identified with our history—the noble red men—and from their tribes, most befitting titles could be found for applying to our warships. From early childhood the lives of the foremost Indian chieftains have inspired intense admiration in Americans. They are the ideal embodiment of the greatest naval battle prowess of their time.

"What names could imply the idea of indomitable fighting force in the American mind equally with Powhatan, the powerful sachem of Virginia; or Pontiac, "the Red Napoleon," chief of the Ottawas; or Tecumseh, chief of the Shawnees or (Shawanoes) and celebrated fighter, diplomat, and orator; or Black Hawk, noted warrior chieftain of the Sacs and Foxes?"

JUST MATTER OF PERCENTAGE

Legislator Had Figured Out Method by Which He Voted Right in Majority of Cases.

During the last session of a western legislature one member, a tall, angular man with a white mustache of the walrus pattern and the faculty of being able to throw both his thumbs out of joint at will, made himself conspicuous by voting "No" on every bill, resolution or other form of business that came up. However, innocent a measure might be, this man voted against it stentoriously.

Finally a legislator weakened under the strain and approached the gentleman with the walrus whiskers.

"Why is it?" asked the man, "that you vote 'No' on everything?"

"I'll tell you," said he of the walrus mustache, with a confidential air. "Seventy-five of those bills and resolutions are bad and ought never to be passed. And I figger that any man who votes right 75 per cent of the time is a pretty durned good legislator."

To Avoid Trouble.

"There's no particular reason why you shouldn't take a cheerful view of life."

"Yes, there is," answered the pessimistic person. "I complain in self-defense."

"I don't understand."

"If I appeared happy and contented all the time reformers would accuse me of not having the interest of my fellow men at heart, so I frown and growl occasionally just to show that I belong to the progressive element."—New Haven Journal.

Studying Patience.

The rich old uncle from whom much was hoped was visiting his niece, who had been telling him how dearly his little great-nephew and namesake loved his school and how well he was getting on with his studies.

"Well, Teddy," said the uncle, jovially, upon the return of the little boy, "what do you do in school all day?"

Teddy pondered. "Well," he said gravely, "mostly I wait until it's time to go home."

With Willys-Overland Christmas Party---Fort Dodge to Toledo

As reported in our issue of November 30 we were fortunate enough to be one of the many Iowan's to be accorded a free trip to Toledo, Ohio, and return for a visit to the Willys-Overland factory much to the thanks of their local agent, C. W. Wiles.

In company with Mr. Wiles we left Klemme Saturday, for Fort Dodge, from which point we started for Toledo on Sunday morning at 10:50. Eighty-two dealers and friends formed the party from the Fort Dodge district, leaving in three Pullmans via the Illinois Central. A diner was also attached for the benefit of the Overland party, and the meals served were excellent to say the least and everything was free—which looked good to those of us with thin purses. If there was anything left undone that could better our entertainment we do not know what it could be, for Messrs. Mansfield, Harring, Arthur and Husong of the Fort Dodge branch are "live wires" from the word go and as entertainers cannot be beaten. Both Mr. Wiles and myself were among the fortunates to draw lower births which insured a comfortable resting place for the entire trip. I believe at this point it would not be amiss to say a few words in regard to what you would see looking through a window on an Iowa train, the other states that we passed through we will leave unheralded as it was at night and we were unable to make any notations:

An Iowa landscape in December, the grey month of the year is not without charm, when seen from a car window. Little touches of green remain, here and there, in blue grass pastures. The cured and dead grasses, low shrubs and weeds along the railroad right of way and by the roadsides present striking contrasts in colors—reds, browns and yellows. Freshly plowed fields are black, eloquent of fertility. In the distance, far away, are forested hills, blue. Stripped cornstalks stand rigid and defiant in the wind, their tattered leaves, like torn and bedraggled banners, fluttering pathetically. An occasional farmer, belated in his harvesting, is still throwing the corn ears against the bang board. Great flocks of coal-black crows, hundreds of them, disturbed by the noise of the passing train rise in unwieldly flight, vocal as crows like to be. Herds of cattle seek windless spots under protecting hillsides, huddling together for warmth. Huge red barns of farmers appear to bulge under the strain of the great crops which they hold, provision against the needs of winter. Small streams wind their silvery courses through deserted meadows and thru thickets of scrub oaks, elms and box elders. Farm homes, surrounded by great groves of protecting trees, reveal even in their outward aspect, the cosiness and comfort that is within. Innumerable strawstacks tell their story of completed harvests, bountiful. Here and there, in occasional fence corners, rusting farm machinery, unprotected from the wasting elements, discloses improvidence only too frequent. Gray clouds hang low over the earth, keeping out the sunshine, and yet the landscape smiles, for it is Iowa, where peace, prosperity and happiness reign! Fortunate is Iowa, and privileged all who make it their dwelling place! One needs to see it only through a car window to realize its greatness and its possibilities for well being and contentment. There is only one thing where our immediate community does not excell or at least equal any part of the state through which we passed and that is in the matter of roads. Eastern Iowa does have better roads or looking from a car window of the I. C. would lead you to think so. Our trip as far as Chicago was without note, only that every member of the party was having the time of his life. We arrived at Chicago at 9:30 p. m. where our cars were transferred from the Iowa Central station to the La Salle Street station for we were routed out of Chicago on the New York Central and our leaving time was set at 1:30 a. m. Our party was also joined there by the Omaha, Council Bluffs and Sioux City delegates and we now formed an Overland party of 15 Pullmans and were sent east as a special train. As our leaving time gave us two or three hours time to take take in the sights and the most of them were rice for a little venthre and as we were feeling in the same mood, joined a party of five who went up town. After enjoying ourselves for a couple of hours returned to our train in plenty of time to catch it out. Next morning when we awoke we were in Toledo, the home of the Overland factory and a short time later our Pullmans were parked on the Overland private tracks, only a short distance from the Administration building. Upon our arrival at the building, we could not but feel welcome for the feeling was in the very air. On Monday, December 4th this great convention of dealers and friends opened up, and on the opening day there were 1210 visitors. When you stop to think that this is only one party out of nine you can begin to realize the immensity of the proposition and it's the Willys-Overland factory it is the biggest thing ever undertaken in the automobile world.

We will now recount a few of our experiences of what we saw at the plant:

Some action!

Nothing was ever so impressive as our tour of the great plant that turns out Willys-Overland cars.

Our Pullmans were all parked in the company yards. There was room enough, for there are seven and three-quarter miles of track within the plant.

Each man got a card containing a picture of Mr. Willys and and an autographied message of welcome from him. Next thing I knew we were lined up on the steps of the stunning new administration building getting photographed.

Elevators shot us to the company's own restaurant on the sixth floor. There we had a corking breakfast. At each plate was a copy of the live new Willys-Overland house organ "The Starter". It mapped our day's program.

Then started our tour of the plant. Our guides were carefully picked men. They knew the plant from end to end, and the parties were small so that each member of the party could have his questions answered.

Nobody ought to try to sell Willys-Overland products without knowing this plant. You can't grip the immensity of the proposition till you do.

It is no piker business.

$25,000,000 are tied up in land, buildings and machinery, not to say a word about the stocks of parts and raw material.

From the roof of the wonderful administration building, which stands out like a state capital, you get a great panorama of the plant. You can then readily believe that it occupies 103 acres, with 4,486,680 square feet of floor space in daily use and a production capacity of 1000 cars per day.

You can appreciate the growth from 250 employees in 1908 to 17,300 in 1916.

1,000 persons, more than the entire manufacturing force of many a company, work in the administration building alone. This structure, 375 feet long, has every facility for rapid work, including dictaphones, its own telegraph and telephone system and a mail handling department that does about everything but write the letters.

388 persons can be fed in the restaurant at one time.

But this is nothing to what hits when you cross into the shops. It is a whirl of action, yet all is system.

Parts by the untold thousand are here, with a value into the millions of dollars. There are lines of motors. I never saw so many crankshafts together. Our guide said 6,000—I'd have believed 60,000.

There is stock in bins, stock in yards, stock along the walls, connecting rods, frames, fenders, mudguards, hoods, rims, springs, axels, torsion tubes, transmission gear shafts, brake parts, steering rods, pedals—it is an unending procession.

Every thirty days sees an average of 1000 tons of steel come in. It is handled by a magnetic crane that enables two men to do a work that formerly required thirty.

There are amazing machines.

The toggle press, for example, held us all. This monster, with its pressure of 1000 tons, shapes cold steel like cardboard. A piece of metal fed to it comes out a side frame. It can make 2000 of these in an eight hour day.

Other mighty machines stamp out radiator shells, fenders, cowl dashes and doores.

You take off your hat to the drop

The Babylonian empire ended with the conquest of the city of Cyrus, B. C. 538. The city itself was partly destroyed by Darius Hystaspis B. C. 500, the walls and gates being thrown down. Later Xerxes plundered and demolished the temples. Thereafter the city was neglected and unpopulated, and in time became a vast overgrown ruin. Jerome, in the year 400 A. D., writes of it as having been made a hunting park for the Persian kings. The ruins of Babylon were used as building material in the construction of at least six other cities that have sprung up since its decay. So thorough has been the destruction of the once great city that not only are the traces of its principal buildings lost, but also the very site itself is in dispute. The reference in I Peter v, 13 to Babylon is explained by the fact that Babylon was the center from which the Asiatic Dispersion (addressed by Peter) was derived. Josephus, the Jewish historian, states in his "Antiquities" that Babylon contained some 8,000 Jews in the apostolic age; the Parthians then being master of that part of Mesopotamia.

Every hospital in the war zone has some electrical equipment for finding the bullets in wounded men, but a German has recently invented a pocket instrument for this purpose. It consists of a two-pointed probe connected by insulated wires to a pocket electric lamp. When the probe comes in contact with a bit of metal, a closed circuit is formed which lights the lamp. Flashes from the bulb also indicate when the probe is approaching or receding from a bullet or bit of shrapnel, for these latter are more frequently the cause of wounds than bullets.

DES MOINES WINS IN FIGHT AGAINST ROADS

Interstate Commission Rules Many Rates Are Prejudicial —Orders Changes.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 9.—A partial victory and material concession in rates were won today by the Greater Des Moines committee in its case against the Milwaukee and other roads. The committee attacked class and commodity rates between Des Moines and points in northwest Missouri, between Des Moines and southeast Nebraska, between Des Moines and Minnesota and the Dakotas, and between Iowa points reached by interstate routes.

The decision holds the rates between Des Moines and points in Missouri are not shown to be unreasonable or unduly or unreasonably prejudicial to Des Moines, except where certain of such rates, increased since January 1, 1910, exceed the rates fixed by the mileage scale prescribed by the commission in the Missouri river-Nebraska cases. Reasonable rates are prescribed as a maxim for the future.

Rates between Des Moines and points in Nebraska are not passed upon. Rates between Des Moines and points in South Dakota and North Dakota are held unduly prejudicial to Des Moines and unduly advantageous to certain Mississippi river crossings where certain differentials are not observed as reasonable differentials prescribed.

Rates between Des Moines and Minnesota points are not shown to be unreasonable or unduly or unreasonably prejudicial to Des Moines except as the stations on the Rock Island, 50 miles or less north of the northern boundry of Iowa. Reasonable maximum rates are prescribed for these points.

Class Rates to Dakotas.

The decision was by Commissioner Daniels. Among other things the roads are ordered to put in force class rates from Des Moines to Dakota points, 5 cents less per 100 pounds first class, with graduation of their Mississippi river crossing rates from Dubuque to St. Louis inclusive of the Dakotas.

According to the information secured by the sheriff, Shayler was the head brakeman on a freight train which left Sioux City early today. When the train stopped north of here the brakeman started to inspect a hot box. He saw two men standing in the door of a car. He commanded them to get off. DES MOINES INVENTOR HAS 'GAS' SUBSTITUTE?

Asserts Acetylene Device Will Cut Auto Power Bill In Half.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 8.—Frank Norman has returned to Des Moines, with four patents in his pocket for which a man is in Detroit asking an automobile manufacturer $1,000,000.

The patents cover a device for driving automobiles with acetylene gas.

Its use involves a cost equivalent to 8-cent gasoline with 20 per cent more power and no carbon, the inventor claims.

The device invented by Mr. Norman, however, may be applied to any gasoline motor, although it should be connected with a special motor to do its best work.

Mr. Norman was proprietor of the Norman Manufacturing company of 315 East Walnut street for many years. This concern went out of business about two years ago, he said, and he went to Jacksonville. His company here had been installing acetylene lighting plants; more than 6,000 were put in in Iowa by Mr. Norman and his associates before their disagreement.

Going south, he turned his attention to the invention of the acetylene power device for automobiles. "I spent every cent I had, after losing $15,000 in Des Moines," he said. "Finally, in a hotel at Jacksonville, I was overheard by a banker telling some one about my device and trying to interest him in furnishing some money to develop the idea. The banker got interested himself and after he had looked it over told me to come to Springfield and he would see that I got the money. He paid my fare to go.

"There I was able to secure the funds with which the machine has been developed. We have been operating two automobiles with the device for months. It is a cinch. I met Henry Ford in Kansas City a few weeks ago and he told me that he had two men constantly at work trying to perfect the system of using denatured alcohol instead of gasoline. That is nonfeasible because it costs too much to produce the alcohol."

RELEASE OF O'CONNOR IS ORDERED BY COURT

Carroll, Ia., Dec. 8.—Judge Ben Salinger, of the Iowa state supreme court, yesterday held that Maurice O'Connor, a prominent Fort Dodge attorney and former law partner of Senator Kenyon, is not now of unsound mind. He ordered O'Connor restored to his full legal rights, but he must give bond of $5,000 to apppear before the court at any time for further hearing.

Salinger ruled that O'Connor had been insane, but was now of sound mind, with the possible exception of delusions concerning his wife's fidelity.

The insanity commissioners of Webster county are enjoined from proceedings against O'Connor, and he is to be released from the state asylum at Cherokee.

O'Connor asked for a writ of habeas corpus commanding his release from the institution. He was formerly one of the best known attorneys of Iowa.

Coates had died, he was told by the man answering the telephone that Mr. Coates had died. He was asked to tell when Mr. Coates died and he did so. PIONEER BANKER OF FORT DODGE IS DEAD

He joined the gold rush to California and, after seven exciting years, returned with a belt filled with gold. He came to Webster county in 1860, and engaged in the mercantile business. He was connected with the First National bank as vice president and director for 44 years. In the early days, Mr. Mulroney constructed 40 miles of the old Fort Dodge & Fort Ridgely railroad north through Humboldt county. For this work the men were paid in land. Mr. Mulroney's share was 1,600 acres of land, where the town of Humboldt now stands. He sold this land for $5 an acre. Mr. Mulroney leaves a large family.

In the new practice house just established at Ames by the home economics department under the direction of Miss Pearl Wittwer these students are living on 39.3 cents a day for their meals an average of but 13.1 cents a meal.

CIGARET DEALERS TO BE MADE TO PAY TAX

Council Bluffs Chief Asserts They Should Pay State $300 a Year.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec. 7.—Chief of Police Ovide Viey of Council Bluffs is planning to compel every dealer in cigarets in Council Bluffs to pay the state license of $300 a year.

He has consulted with County Attorney C. E. Swanson, and announces that his crusade against the sale of cigarets will begin at once.

The state laws forbid the sale of cigarets, but another law also permits their sale upon payment of a $300 license fee. Confusion as to which law applies has prevented the enforcement of either to any great extent in Council Bluffs and other Iowa cities.

Most dealers cannot make a profit on the sale of the "pills" if compelled to pay the state license.

The Iowa laws are particularly strict in regard to the use of cigarets by minors. Both fine and imprisonment may be meted out under the law to any minor who smokes a cigaret upon other premises than those of his own home, or upon a public highway.

Logan, who returned today from his trip of inspection to Brownsville. The men are all anxious to get home, according to General Logan, but there is no definite information available as to when they will be returned.

He urged that honey be sold in carload lots as it, then brought bigger prices than if delivered about in small lots. Prof. Francis Jaeger, president of the National Bee Keepers' association, also addressed the honey growers today.

CONSOLIDATED SCHOOLS ARE COMMUNITY CENTERS

McGregor, Ia., Dec. 7.—The provision of better educational facilities for the girls and boys on the farms of Iowa is by no means the only splendid asset of rural consolidation of schools. Almost invariably the consolidated school becomes a community center and parents, patrons and all others in the neighborhood are the beneficiaries in both a social and educational way. The way is paved also for better farms, better homes and better roads.

An example is the rural consolidated school near the village of Luana, built last summer at a cost of $36,000. It is a distinctly rural school standing out on the prairie with several acres of school farm laid out about it and a board of directors of farmers, conducting its affairs.

Before the school was built there was no community life, no get-together spirit for social diversion, or betterment of farm life environment. Though the school is but two months old, already there is a Parent-Teacher association holding monthly meetings at the school and a young people's society, the "Live Wires," which meets weekly.

The boys of the society have organized a basketball team and are planning to give a minstrel show in the evening. The Parents' association will have an old fashioned Christmas program for its next meeting December 14. This is of course but a beginning of the many community activities which will be staged in the fine gymnasium with its every equipment for athletics and the big auditorium on the third floor.

NO DECISION IS MADE IN THE O'CONNOR CASE

Carroll, Ia., Dec. 7.—Judge B. J. Salinger, of the state supreme court, adjourned the hearing in the insanity proceedings brought against Maurice O'Connor, of Fort Dodge, former law partner of Senator O'Connor. Arguments by counsel for both sides was completed today.

The court finds that some of the things charged as constituting evidence of insanity were not insane acts; that the attitude of the plaintiff, O'Connor, towards his family and as to maintaining an action for divorce, raise a serious doubt as to whether O'Connor is now completely of sound mind. Therefore, the hearing is adjourned for final judgment at some later time to be fixed by the court.

O'Connor went on the stand in his own behalf Saturday in an effort to prove his sanity to the court. His wife also testified.

and administration of the Interstate Commerce commission lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives now awaiting action by the senate in order that the commission may be enabled to deal with the many great questions and duties now devolving upon it with promptness and thoroughness are, with its present constitution and means of action, practically impossible.

First, the establishment of an eight-hour day as the legal basis alike of work and wages in the employment of all railway employes who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation.

Second, the authorization of the appointment by the president of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight-hour standard in railway transportation alike for the period of the war and for the railroads, with explicit approval by the congress of the consideration by the Interstate Commerce commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the establishment of the eight-hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Third, an amendment of the existing federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding a provision that, in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, full public investigation of the facts in every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lockout may lawfully be attempted.

Fourth, the lodgment in the hands of the executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such railways and such rolling stock of the railways of the country as may be required for military purposes and to operate them for military purposes with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use.

Problems Unsettled.

The second and third of these recommendations the congress immediately acted upon. It established the eight-hour day as a legal basis of work and wages in railway service and it authorized the appointment of a commission to observe and report upon the practical results, deeming that the measures most immediately needful; but it postponed action upon the suggestions until an opportunity might be offered for a more deliberate consideration of them. The fourth recommendation I do not deem it necessary to renew. The power of the Interstate Commerce commission to grant an increase of rates on the ground referred to is indisputably clear and a recommendation by the congress with regard to such a matter would seem to me to be a question the decision of the commission's authority or its disposition to do justice when there is no reasonable room for doubt either.

Of other suggestions, the increase in the membership and in the facilities for performance of the interstate commerce commission's manifold duties, the provision for public investigation and assessment of industrial disputes, and the grant to the executive of the power to control and operate the railways when necessary in time of war or other like public necessity, I now very earnestly renew.

The necessity for such legislation is manifest and pressing. Those who have entered on with the responsibility and duty forging machines. Down comes the the hammer and the fiery piece of Every kind of strength was grouped around looked over, axles, camshafts, assembly rods, spring shackles, blanks and brake levers.

We saw the company's famous system of duplicating. It calls for a special workman on each detail. One works on the shaper, another on the planer and a third on the spoke.

The multiple spindle drill bores all the operation drills all the holes in the front axle. Tools, each with its own other.

It was hard to keep our attention on the machine as the faces and hands of the workmen were so interesting. The work of the tools, pressing machine do the rest.

The crankshaft is one of the operations are performed at once. When possible, cutting tools do the machine is speeded automatically and the loading of tools comes automatically into place. Twenty operations are performed in twenty minutes. 26 pounds of metal are removed from the wheel. One man can watch three of these machines.

The vertical cutter of gears on fly wheels almost matches the turret lathe in interest.

Moving up and down, the cutter at the same time slowly revolves, the fly wheel turning in the opposite direction. By the time a complete revolution of the fly wheel has been accomplished, all the gears are cut.

We all fell for the aluminum foundry and for the machines that finish the aluminum parts.

The multiple spindle drill bores 81 holes in the crank case in one operation. This is proof of the superior-posing a more thorough and systematic regulation of the expenditure of money in elections, commonly called the corrupt practices act. I need not labor my advice that these measures be enacted into law. Their urgency lies in the manifest circumstances which render their adoption at this time not only opportune but necessary. Even delay would seriously jeopard the interests of the country and of the government.

Corrupt Practice Act.

Immediate passage of the bill to regulate the expenditure of money in elections may seem to be less necessary than the immediate enactment of the other measures to which I refer, because at least two years will elapse before another election in which federal offices are to be filled; but it would greatly relieve the public mind if this important matter were dealt with while the circumstances and the dangers to the public morals of the present method of obtaining and spending campaign funds stand clear under recent observation and the methods of expenditure can be frankly studied in the light of present experience and a delay would have the further very serious disadvantage of postponing action until another election was at hand and some special object connected with it might be thought to be in the mind of those who urged it. Action can be taken now with facts for guidance and without suspicion of partisan purpose.

I shall not argue at length the desirability of giving a freer hand in the matter of combined and concerted effort to those who shall undertake the essential enterprise of building up our export trade. That enterprise will presently, will immediately assume, has indeed already assumed, a magnitude unprecedented in our experience. We have not the necessary instrumentalities for its prosecution it is deemed to be doubtful whether they could be created upon an adequate scale under our present laws. We should clear away all legal obstacles and create a basis of undoubted law for it which will give freedom without permitting unregulated license. The thing must be done now, because the opportunity is here and may escape us if we hesitate or delay.

The argument for the proposed amendments of the organic law of Porto Rico is brief and conclusive. The present laws governing the island and regulating the rights and privileges of its people are not just. We have created expectations of extended privilege which we have not satisfied. There is uneasiness among the people of the island and even a suspicious doubt with regard to our intentions concerning them with the adoption of the pending measure would happily remove. We do not doubt what we wish to do in any essential particular. We ought to do it at once.

There are other matters already advanced to the stage of conference between the two houses of which it is not necessary that I should speak. Some practicable basis of agreement concerning them will no doubt be found and action taken upon them.

Inasmuch as this is, gentlemen, probably the last occasion I shall have to address the sixty-fourth congress, I hope that you will permit me to say with what genuine pleasure and satisfaction I have cooperated with you in the many measures of constructive policy with which you have enriched annals of the country. It has been a privilege to labor in such company. I take the liberty of congratulating you upon the completion of a record of rare serviceableness and distinction.

Public Support of Conscription.

From the Spectator, London, England.

Much excitement has been caused in Australia by the referendum on conscription, and the whole world has looked on with singular interest at the bold reference of the question to the people. The result up to the present, for the voting is still going on, has been described as a stalemate; 883,000 votes were cast for conscription and 966,000 against. The conscriptionists, led by Mr Hughes, are disappointed, but though we wish of course that the figures had been reversed, we cannot ourselves feel anything resembling disappointment. Rather we feel overwhelmed with pride, gratitude, and wonder, at the enormous vote cast for "self-compulsion"—for that is what it amounts to. When we reflect upon the remoteness of Australia from the theater of war, and the manifold reasons that might be plausibly urged by any man for not coming across the world to take his place by compulsion in the bloody and devastated trenches of the western front, we think the huge vote cast in favor of the bitter way of devotion is one of the most wonderful and glorious things in human history. Conscription may be formally defeated, but the spirit of Australia is justified and ennobled. It will "advance" according to the Australian motto, and Germany will not prevail against it. Those who voted against conscription will come as volunteers. It is impossible to say all we feel. We salute the Australians in admiration.

Plans Offer Greece Aid As Allies Blockade Coast

Reported Teutons Have Pledged Services In Opening Land Communications If Greeks Declare War on Entente—Naval Power Applied to Gain Ends.

London, Dec. 9.—A dispatch from Switzerland, as forwarded from Rome to the Wireless Press says Germany and Austria have offered their services to Greece, "opening land communications if Greece declares war on the entente."

Athens, Thursday, Dec. 7.—(via London, Dec. 8.)—The blockade of Greece begins officially at 8 o'clock tomorrow (Friday) morning.

The members of the British naval mission has been ordered to embark on the Greek trans-Atlantic liner King Constantine.

In response to the demand of the entente, yesterday, for an explanation of the movement of Greek troops, the government has explained that these movements have ceased.

BEATEN RUMANIAN ARMY IS FLEEING

Not Expected to Make Another Stand Until It Reaches Moldavia—Lose Many Prisoners.

Petrograd, Dec 8.—(via London) The Russians have taken the offensive in the wooded Carpathians district and a battle is in progress there, the war office announced today.

Berlin, (wireless to Sayville), Dec. 9.—Attacks made by Russian troops yesterday in the Ludova region, in the Carpathians and in the Trotus valley on the northern Rumanian front were repulsed, with heavy losses, the war office announced.

Rumanian troops retreating from the Predeal and Altshantz passes were cut off by Teutonic forces, and most of them have been captured. In western Rumania the pursuit is being continued by the Austro-German troops which yesterday took more than 10,000 prisoners.

Seemingly the Rumanians and such Russian troops as were aiding them are still on the retreat northeastward, and military commentators for the most part do not expect a stand to be made by the Rumanians before the line of the Buzu river is reached. This line virtually closes the neck of the province of Moldavia, running eastward from the Hungarian frontier to Galata on the lower Danube on the Bessarabian border. It is regarded as a strong defensive line and one easily susceptible of reinforcements from Russian forces.

Paris, Dec. 8.—The Germans last night were driven out of the trenches they occupied on the eastern side of Hill 304 on the Verdun front, it is announced officially.

BIG BATTLE IN SERBIA.

Paris, Dec. 8.—Heavy fighting is in progress on the Macedonian front. Three successive counter attacks on the Serbians have been made by German and Bulgarian troops in the region of Stravina. The war office announces that these attacks were repulsed.

ALLIES LOSE 94 PLANES.

Berlin, Dec. 8.—(by wireless to Sayville)—"Although the weather for the most part was unfavorable for our aerial forces, great successes were gained in November," says an official statement given out here today. Our losses were 31 airplanes in the west, eastern, Rumanian and Balkan war theaters. Our enemies lost 71 airplanes in aerial fights, 16 shot down from the ground and 7 by involuntary landings, so that the total enemy loss was 94 airplanes. "Of these 43 are in our hands and 52 were seen to fall down behind the lines."

STEAMER CALEDONIA IS REPORTED SUNK

Anchor Liner In British War Service Said to Have Been Lost.

London, Dec. 8.—The Anchor line steamer Caledonia of 9,223 tons gross is believed to have been sunk, says an announcement made today at Lloyds' shipping agency.

New York, Dec. 8.—The Caledonia was formerly in the passenger service between New York and Glasgow, one of the crack ships of the Anchor line fleet. The local officers of the line said today that they had heard nothing of the vessel since she was commandeered for government service in August, 1914.

The steamer Caledonia has for some time been in the service of the British government. The vessel was 500 feet long, 58 feet beam, and 33 feet deep. She was built at Glasgow in 1904.

GERMANY TO OBTAIN FOOD FROM HOLLAND

Claimed Pact Virtually Amounts to Indirect Agreement With Britain.

London, Dec. 9.—An Amsterdam dispatch to the Times says that the Berlin Vossiche Zeitung announces that an agreement has been reached between Holland and Germany regarding the exportation of foodstuffs identical to that existing between Holland and England. The Amsterdam correspondent of the Vossiche Zeitung says that it is really, if not technically, an agreement between Germany and England whereby both may obtain food from Holland.

The Times correspondent interprets this as meaning that Dutch ships carrying food to England will not be molested by German submarines or seized by destroyers. He adds:

"It is part of a wide agreement, and also says that the understanding with Holland provides for the payment for foodstuffs with German treasury notes and bank assignats."

DEATH CUTS BIG GAP IN U. S. PENSION ROLL

Washington, Dec. 8.—Deaths among civil war veterans made large gaps in the government's pension rolls during the past year. The report of Commissioner Saltzgaber of the pension bureau today shows that the names of more than 50,000 of the old soldiers passed from the list, reducing their total to 280,080. Pensions aggregating $159,156,000 went to 709,120 persons.

SEEK SETTLEMENT OF IRISH PROBLEM

Rumored Lloyd-George Will Tackle Question Soon—Labor to Dominate New Cabinet.

London, Dec. 9.—The Manchester Guardian says the report that Premier Lloyd-George will attempt an immediate solution of the Irish question by means of an imperial conference is not unlikely.

The Daily Mail, which may be supposed to have inside information, says Mr. Lloyd-George has nearly completed his government, which will contain some eminent business men who are not politicians, notably Sir Albert Henry Stanley, managing director of the metropolitan district, Central London and other street railways, and who, the Daily Mail asserts, will almost certainly be made president of the board of trade.

Derby War Minister.

Andrew Bonar Law, according to the Daily Mail, is expected to be the chancellor of the exchequer, and the Earl of Derby war minister. It adds that a ministry of labor is to be established and that one of the labor representatives will be minister of labor. Arthur Henderson and the Rt. Hon. Nicoll Barnes, or John Hodge, are expected to be among the labor members of the government.

Dr. Christopher Addison, under secretary of munitions, the Daily Mail asserts, is likely to be appointed minister of munitions and H. Lever, an accountant who reduced the cost of shells, will have a post in the ministry.

The Daily Mail denies that Lord Robert Cecil and Austen Chamberlain are antagonistic to Mr. Lloyd-George. It has nothing to say regarding the portfolio of foreign minister.

"The fears that have been expressed that Col. Winston Spencer Churchill will be a member of the new administration are unfounded," is a noteworthy statement in the Daily Mail.

The political writers in the London morning papers generally emphasize the importance of Mr. Lloyd-George's success with the laborites. His offers to them during the prolonged conference are stated to have included, in addition to five or six ministerial posts, the appointment of a labor ministry, the inclusion of a labor delegate at the eventual peace conference and the promise that labor should have a voice in all matters relating to peace.

To Mobilize Manhood.

It is said in certain papers that some of these concessions were demanded as part of the price of adhesion and that the laborites required government control of mines and shipping during the war and that it should take possession of all vacant land for food production.

The statements of the political correspondents further show that Mr. Lloyd-George was prepared to adopt a sweeping measure of state control, embracing all industries and means of transportation on land or sea, so that the nation's man power could be directed to the utmost production of munitions, the maintenance of necessary export trade, the fullest development of food cultivation by state organizations and the control of agricultural operations.

The conference it is said, pressed the premier with the questions, conscription of labor, and the conscription of wealth, and it is understood that he answered that his policy would be in the direction of regulating the work of the whole manhood of the country.

It is further stated that there will be a large extension of the tax on war profits, all profits being calculated on an average of three years prior to the war, all profits in excess of this being taken by the state.

At a meeting of liberals today it was stated that A. J. Balfour would be foreign secretary in the new cabinet and that Lord Robert Cecil would remain parliamentary under secretary for foreign affairs.

PLAN MAPPED OUT FOR PROSECUTION OF PRICE FIXERS

Federal Authorities Have Unearthed Evidence of Manipulation Said of Violate Criminal Code.

SPECULATORS ARE KNOWN

Justice Department Intends to Punish Men Held Liable For Corner In Food and Coal.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 9.—The federal investigation into the high cost of living reached a stage today where officials turned their attention to the form which the prosecution, if undertaken should assume.

The subject under immediate consideration was said to be the method of proceeding against coal speculators whose activities are believed to have contributed largely to the recent advance.

United States Attorney Anderson in Washington, for the investigation, called at the White House today and will see the president later. The president is continuing his study of preliminary reports with a view to later forming a recommendation to congress. The situation was discussed at a meeting of the cabinet; Mr. Anderson continuing his conference with the department heads established headquarters here, called into conference Oliver E. Pagan, the indictment expert of the department of justice. Instructions were sent to the various agencies of investigation throughout the country, outlining methods of procedure.

In congress the House commerce committee decided to defer action on bills and resolutions relating to the subject, until after the holidays.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 9.—Information gathered from many sources by government officials concerning the nation wide inquiry into the high cost of living pointed with increasing directness to the conclusion that the soaring prices of certain necessities of life were due, in part at least to the manipulations of speculators in food and commodities who had combined to force quotations upward.

These combinations are believed by the government investigators to have been criminal in character, rather spasmodic and short lived.

Special attention is being given to alleged price manipulation in the so-called coal corner which recently resulted in sending prices to a panic level. Investigation of the high price of coal has already convinced some officials that there was no warrant whatever for the $12 coal in Boston and New York other than the activity of these alleged combinations. Whether men who profited most can be punished under federal laws is said to be still under consideration.

Every federal agency with even a remote relation to the situation was called on today to play its part in the great machinery of investigation which the government has put into operation. A mass of material has poured into the attorney general's office, most of which still is undigested, but all of which will be studied and utilized where available.

With the investigation in its infancy officials were unwilling to predict today where it might lead. The activities of certain men, however, are known to be under surveillance and no small part of the work assigned the 50 odd investigators in the field has been the checking of transactions during the past few months by these men.

Effect of Car Shortage.

The Interstate Commerce commission began preparation of information relating to its recent investigations of car shortage, which will be available for use in the food inquiry. Officials believe there is close relations between the car shortage and price advances not only with respect to coal, but with food stuffs as well.

Reports to the department of justice are said to indicate the possibility of collusion among men having large influence in the movement of freight cars and speculators with a view to diverting cars from their normal channels and advancing the prices of products. It was said authoritatively that these reports did not involve the heads of the railroad companies under investigation.

Mr. Anderson announced he expected to leave Sunday, if possible for Chicago, where the federal grand jury is investigating the situation and he probably would visit other middle western cities.

EMBARGO KNOCKS PRICES.

Chicago, Dec. 9.—Extension of the railroad embargo against eastward shipments of foodstuffs resulted in a slight falling off in prices here today. Large reductions in the prices of foods are expected to follow the embargo as warehouses are declared to be full not only in Chicago but in other storage cities in the west and northwest.

The New York Central lines and the Wabash joined with the Pennsylvania and Erie in restricting food shipments. The New York Central will accept only perishable foodstuffs and live stock billed to points east of Buffalo. The Wabash has refused to accept carload lots of grain east of Detroit, either for export or domestic trade.

The government inquiry into food prices was again extended today, when subpoenas were issued for a number of small packing and provision firms. It is proposed to ascertain the relations of these firms to the big packing houses which are already under scrutiny.

Nelson N. Lampert, vice president of the Fort Dearborn National bank, who was among those subpoenaed, will be questioned. Federal officials said concerning large loans reported to have been made to alleged food speculators.

STILL FURTHER DROP IN GERMAN EXCHANGE

Geneva, Dec. 8. (via Paris)—The German 100 mark bill has dropped on the Geneva bourse and a point and three quarters on the Zurich bourse. It is now quoted at 79 francs and 75 francs, respectively. The fall is attributed to the establishment of the Mass levy in Germany which it is feared will result in the further depreciation of the economic life of the country.

"DO UNTO OTHERS"

Friend, have you ever asked yourself the question? "Is my neighborhood any the better for my presence in it?" Has your community life been such that were you to remove to some other locality you would really be missed, and missed with regret?

We believe that many of us who consider ourselves good citizens and good neighbors, if we were to seriously consider this question, would be somewhat puzzled to find the correct answer.

We all know people of our community of whom it were idle to ask this question. We know beyond question that they are a real asset to any community that is so fortunate as to claim them. Let us, then, in the light of their lives, truthfully and impartially judge our own lives, and let us profit by that judgment.

All of us know that good angel of the neighborhood. Frequently she is a frail little mite of womanhood, quiet and unassuming, with the most humble appreciation of her own virtues. Yet whenever sickness or sorrow develop in the countryside we instinctively look to find her in attendance, ready to efface herself in her ministrations to others; giving of the faith of her own large heart to sustain the failing courage of those in need.

And who does not know the handy man of the community? He is always busy, yet never so busy that he can not grant a favor to a neighbor. He is the man who, when he starts to town, is hailed by every housewife on his route and loaded down with commissions and orders to be filled, until frequently when returning home his neighbors get most of his load. He is also the man you send for if you have a sick horse or cow; if your crops do not turn out to suit you, you consult him. You call on him, if a subscription is to be circulated, and he is always ready to chip in, he cheerfully takes the paper from house to house and from man to man until the object is attained. In fact, when we contemplate the number of "thank-ye" jobs he gets through with in the run of a year we often wonder how on earth he has found time to attend to his own affairs. But he has, and he has attended to them well.

The truth is that we all waste many valuable hours and days that might better be given to these kindly ministrations to others' comfort and pleasure. We ponder our own cares and perplexities burdens and sorrows until they loom as mountains in our pathway, obscuring our neighbors and their affairs, until we frequently forget that they, too, have cares and sorrows, many times more grievous than our own.

It would be of real benefit to us if we could at times forget self, and enter into the joys and sorrows of others.

Try it friend, and you will be surprised to realize how soon the care and sorrow have flown from your own life and left naught but joy and peace in their stead.

PREPAREDNESS WITH A PUNCH

Much has been said and written during the past two years as to national preparedness. From present indications it would appear to be the policy of the country to bring defensive preparedness to the point where we will feel secure should the unforseen occur. This policy is resulting in the building of larger and more modern battleships, more efficient coast defenses, the strengthening of the army and such like precautions.

This is good as a present precautionary policy, but something more than these measures are needed if we are to be a thoroughly prepared nation.

As to the advisability of reasonable preparedness, there seems to be little doubt that it is needed, at least for some time to come. Europe is war mad. Mexico is a hotbed of insurrection. Unrest and a lust for blood prevails throughout the globe, and at any time we may be forced into a war not of our seeking.

Hence if we are compelled to fight, we should be by all means be prepared to fight.

And this brings us to the question of soldiers. Without them, of what avail is armament? When the call for the mobolization af all state troops came from Washington, how many responded? How long would such a pitifully small army last in such a conflict as now rages in Europe?

The truth is, we need to educate more soldiers. Not more professional soldiers, but more emergency soldiers. We need to teach our boys and young men not only patriotism, but EFFECTIVE patriotism, for patriotism minus efficiency is a mighty weak article. It must be backed up with a punch.

Why not, then, along with a love of country, teach our young men to DEFEND the country they are taught to love?

The simple truth is, every school in the land should be a miniature military training camp. Young men should be a miniature military training camp. Young men should be taught military tactics and trained in the manual of arms as thoroughly as they are drilled in the arts, sciences and classics. No able bodied young man should be permitted to graduate from a high school, college or university until he is capable of stepping into the ranks as an efficient soldier. Not as a matter of arousing a military spirit, but as a matter of practical defensive patriotism.

Your neighbor may loudly proclaim his love for his family, but ife he is unable or unwilling to protect them when danger threatens you are forced to conclude tnat his love is a very weak article. Just so with a love of country. It must have a "Punch" behind it. The only way to put the punch into the man is to train it there in the boy, and the logical time is right along with his other trainning.

CIGARET [illegible] BE MADE TO PAY TAX

Council Bluffs Chief Asserts They Should Pay State $300 a Year

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec. 7.—Chief of Police Ovide Viey, of Council Bluffs, is planning to compel every dealer in cigarets in Council Bluffs to pay the state license of $300 a year.

He has consulted with County Attorney C. E. Swanson, and announces that his crusade against the sale of cigarets will begin at once.

The state laws forbid the sale of cigarets, but another law also permits their sale upon payment of a $300 license fee. Confusion as to which law applies has prevented the enforcement of either to any great extent in Council Bluffs and other Iowa cities.

Most dealers cannot make a profit on the sale of the "pills" if compelled to pay the state license.

The Iowa laws are particularly strict in regard to the use of cigarets by minors. Both fine and imprisonment may be meted out under the law to any minor who smokes a cigaret upon other premises than those of his own home, or upon a public highway.

TROOPS' CONDITION GOOD, LOGAN SAYS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—That the Iowa troops on the border are in excellent shape, physically, and can stand a 20-mile march a day if necessary with full pack, is the statement of Adjutant General Guy E. Logan, who returned today from his trip of inspection to Brownsville. The men are all anxious to get home, according to General Logan, but there is no definite information available as to when they will be returned.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 5.—Representative Dowell, of Iowa, went to the war department today and urged the officials that the Iowa guard be returned from the border. He said the men had made many sacrifices and now that their presence was not essential they should be sent home. He got no assurance they would soon be returned, but officials held out some hope of it.

SAYS HONEY CHEAP AT 25 CENTS POUND

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 7.—At the annual conference of the Iowa Bee Keepers' association here today E. G. Brown, a bee man of Sioux City, declared that the war could have no effect on the price of honey, but insisted that consumers were getting honey cheap at the present prices of 25 cents a pound. He urged that honey be sold in carload lots as it, then, brought bigger prices than if delivered about in small lots. Prof. [illegible]

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

As we figure it out $15. is still a popular figure for a "suit" or "overcoat" as it's been our "stunt" to have made for us, garments of quality to sell at this popular figure.

Considering the increased cost in material and manufacturing we're of the opinion that $20 is a "better" price for the consumer to pay, because in our judgement he'll get even "larger" returns on his money in the end.

Telling the "facts" as they really are, is one thing that is making this store grow "every day."

forging machines. Down comes the the hammer and the fiery piece of [illegible] can be accomplished.

Every kind of [illegible] strength was dropped, and we looked on, axles, crankshafts, assembly rods, spring shackles, blanks and brake rod sectors.

We saw the company's accurate system of dovetailing. It calls for a special workman on each detail. One works on the shaper, another on the planer and a third on the sinker.

The multiple spindle drill bores all operation drills all the holes in the front axle. This is a great [illegible] each will be [illegible] other.

It was hard to [illegible] the automatic lathe [illegible] faces and [illegible] as [illegible] metal [illegible] The work [illegible] rough [illegible] tools, [illegible] machine do the rest.

The [illegible] as was [illegible] operations are performed at once. When one set of cuttings is done the machine is stopped automatically and the next set of tools comes automatically into place. Twenty operations are performed in four minutes. 26 pounds of metal are removed from the wheel. One man can watch three of these machines.

The verticle cutter of gears on fly wheels almost matches the turret lathe in interest.

Moving up and down, the cutter at the same time slowly revolves, the fly wheel turning in the opposite direction. By the time a complete revolution of the fly wheel has been accomplished, all the gears are cut.

We all fell for the aluminum foundry and for the machines that finish the aluminum parts.

The multiple spindle drill bores 81 holes in the crank case in one operation. This is proof of the superiority of machine processes, for the holes must be in the right relation to each other.

Another machine smooths the surfaces of the crank cases, finishing seven in nine minutes.

Diamonds, real diamonds, are consumed with apparently reckless indifference in the wet grind room. Placed in small tools they are used to true the emery wheels on which are ground the bearing surfaces of the crank shafts.

They are bought in $15,000 lots.

We looked on while whole forests of lumber were being turned into bodies in the wood work department. This lumber comes in by carloads. As 214 feet of wood is required on a small touring car, we could readily see why so much was required.

You make this record and you can understand this company's immense consumption of material—18,000,000 pounds of solder annually, 2,500,000 pounds of tin and lead for smoothering, 10,000,000 pounds of brass and copper, 12,000,000 feet of steel tubing and 125,000 tons of steel.

But what impressed me more than all was the department in which materials are [illegible]. They have to know a thing is right before it goes into a Willys-Overland car. That's how they safeguard the public.

Tests in the physical and chemical laboratories are made in two ways. Completed steel parts are subjected to terrific tests. Axles are twisted like rolls of taffy candy. Small bits of steel, six inches long, cut from completed axles, are attached at both ends, and literally pulled apart. The registering machine shows 201,000 pounds to the square inch necessary to accomplish this, whereas a resistance up to 125,000 pounds would be proof of ample tensile strength. Springs are tried for their resistance.

Steel articles are also put through both heat and chemical tests. The former determines the amount of carbon, an important factor; the other determines the chemical composition of the steels.

Naturally, every operation in all the plants tends finally toward the assembly conveyor tracks. There are four of them, each 645 feet long.

We followed the whole operation. We began at one end where the frames and rear systems are put in place. By the time the other end of the conveyor is reached the frame has grown into the finished car.

From overhead parts are lowered by chains. Along the way men are attaching the parts. The frame is not in motion all the time, but can be instantly connected with the links of an endless chain and sent on its way whenever desired.

Top quality of workmanship is assured by having each man do work on which he is an expert, if it be only to tighten a bolt.

Lines of motors, already tested, wait on both sides of the conveyor. These are put into place, cantilever springs are put on, steering mechanism and lighting and starting systems are adjusted. Gradually the car takes form.

Instead of painting the chassis with a brush, a sprayer is used. It does the work more rapidly, more uniformly and at a lower cost.

The tracks of the assembly lead directly through ovens in which the paint is baked. Fenders and running boards come into their places.

Wheels with the tires on are brought along on a runway. First comes a front wheel, then a rear wheel. You ought to see them put on the tires. It is lightning. By a special device, invented by one of the men in the department, the tire can be put on a wheel in three seconds.

From overhead bodies are dropped down on to the chassis and soon made fast.

The car is now ready for its tests. Rapidly revolving wheels in the floor engage the wheels of the car, and send them at high speed to make sure that they are operating freely. This is not a test under the power of the car.

Gasoline and water are then put into the car. It is pushed off the track into another room, till its wheels are in contact with wheels in the floor.

With the use of the self starter, the machine gets its first chance to prove the success of its construction.

It surprised me the way the motor started. They were off with a rush. There was no hitch or delay. All the work had been done right. In a few minutes the motor was working apparently almost as smoothly as if it had been a year on the road.

We saw how the cars were shipped. The export department has the big feature in this line. The finished car undergoes preparation by having its wheels taken off and fastened on the under side of the frame which forms the top covering for the car.

The top is covered with tar paper as a protection against the elements, and all is securely boxed.

Along comes a big crane running in an overhead groove a quarter of a mile long. The operator sits in a small cab not unlike that of railroad engineer. Chains grab the box containing the car, and within forty five seconds have carried it outside the building and place it on a flat freight car.

It is processes like these, all that I have described, that explain why every car in the Willys-Overland line is what it is at so low a cost. Making so many is the answer, making them to go all over the world and having profited by the experiences of users everywhere. Quantity production, immense and costly machines, skilled designing, careful inspection, accurate tests of material, efficient factory methods, rapidly assembly and advanced methods of handling, all these we saw; all these tell why the Willys-Overland Company lives up to its ideals of a car for every need or taste, price and service right.

We saw the line. It is quality from the lowest priced to the headliner. It will be the marvel of the automobile shows.

This sightseeing tour is only one angle of this convention. Monday evening we heard policy defined by various officials.

The two day's program included a rollicking beefsteak dinner, a more formal banquet, a minstrel show, a concert by the famous Overland band and a concert by the glee club.

Finally there was a speech by the moving genius of it all, Mr. Willys himself.

You will agree with me that this is some project to have been put over all within one plant and by the people of the organization.

During our stay in Toledo we were accorded enough time to visit the city although the time was too short for much sight-seeing, we seen enough to know that it is a thriving city of 240,000 and growing rapidly, but our time would not allow us to learn enough about the place to be very much information to our readers, but the citizens of Toledo will tell you that they thank the Willys-Overland Company for much of their growth and prosperity and that Mr. Willys is one of their great boosters.

Our train left Toledo at 11:30 p. m. Tuesday and arrived at Chicago in the early morning where we were allowed a day for sight seeing, leaving a.m. over the I. C. and arriving at Fort Dodge at 11:45 Thursday morning.

We have tried to give our readers a little benefit of the trip but we are falling far short of telling all of the wonderful things we have seen for while we tried to keep our eyes and ears open, we found ourselves standing on different occasions with only our mouth open, but there is one thing certain we have never met up with a more loyal bunch of fellows, and we take off our hat to the Overland bunch—they are sure some meeting.

CHAPTER X (Continued).

That one supreme moment they had of perfect consciousness, consciousness of the drawing of soul to soul, of the sweetness of that hovering touch of hands, of the longing to know and understand each other.

Then a sharp whistle sounded, and a farmer's boy with a new rake and a sack of corn on his shoulder, came sauntering briskly down the road to the bridge. Instantly they drew apart, and Celia felt that she had been on the verge of disloyalty to her true self.

They walked silently back to the station each busy with his own thoughts, each conscious of that one moment when the other had come so near.

CHAPTER XI.

There were a lot of people at the station. They had been to a family gathering of some sort from their remarks, and they talked loudly and much so that the two stood apart—for the seats were all occupied—and had no opportunity for conversation, save a quiet smiling comment now and then upon the chatter about them, or the odd remarks they heard.

There had come a constraint upon them, a withdrawing of each into his shell, each conscious of something that separated. Gordon struggled to prevent it but he seemed helpless. Celia would smile in answer to his quiet remarks, but it was a smile of distance, such as she had worn early in the morning. She had quite found her former standing ground, with its fence of prejudice, and she was repairing the breaks through which she had gone over to the enemy during the day. She was bracing herself with dire reminders, and snatches from those terrible letters which were written in characters of fire in her heart. Never, never, could she care for a man who had done what this man had done. She had forgotten for a little while those terrible things he had said of her dear dead father. How could she have forgotten for an instant! How could she have let her hand lie close to the hand that had defiled itself by writing such things!

By the time they were seated in the train, she was freezing in her attitude, and poor Gordon sat miserably beside her and tried to think what he had done to offend her. It was not his fault that her hand had lain near his on the rail. She had put it there herself. Perhaps she expected him to put his over it, to show her that he cared as a bridegroom should care—as he did care, in reality, if he only had the right. And perhaps she was hurt that he had stood coolly and said or done nothing. But he could not help it.

Much to Gordon's relief, the train carried a parlor car and it happened on this particular day to be almost deserted save for a deaf old man with a florid complexion and a gold knobbed cane who slumbered audibly at the further end from the two chairs Gordon secured. He established his companion comfortably disposed of the baggage and sat down but the girl paid no heed to him. With a sad, set face, she stared out of the window, her eyes seeming to see nothing. For two hours she sat so, he making remarks occasionally to which she made little or no reply, until he lapsed into silence, looking at her with troubled eyes. Finally just as they neared the outskirts of Pittsburgh he leaned softly toward and touched her coat sleeve, to attract her attention.

"I've offended you—you in any way?" he asked gently. She turned toward him, and her eyes were brimming full of tears.

"No," she said, and her lips were trembling. "No, you have been—most kind, but—but I cannot forget those letters." She ended with a sob and put up her handkerchief quickly to stifle it.

"Letters?" he looked helplessly. "What letters?"

"The letters you wrote me. All the letters of the last five months. I cannot forget them. I can never forget them! How could you think I could?"

He looked at her anxiously, not knowing what to say and yet he must say something. The time had come when some kind of an understanding, some clearing up of facts, must take place. He must go cautiously, but he must find out what was the matter. He could not see her suffer so. There must be some way to let her know that so far as he was concerned she need suffer nothing further and that he would do all in his power to set her right with her world.

But letters! His face lighted up with the swift certainty of one thing about which he had not dared to be sure. She still thought him the man she had intended to marry. She was not therefore troubled about that phase of the question. It was strange, almost unbelievable, but it was true that he personally was not responsible for the trouble in her eyes. What trouble she might feel when she knew all, he had yet to find out, but it was a great relief to be sure of so much. Still, something must be said.

"Letters!" he repeated again stupidly, and then added with perplexed tone: "Would you mind telling me just what it was in the letters that hurt you?"

She turned eyes of astonishment on him.

"How can you ask?" she said almost bitterly. "You surely must know how terrible they were to me! You could not be the man you have seemed to be today if you did not know what you were doing to me in making all those terrible threats. You must know how cruel they were."

"I am afraid I don't understand," he said earnestly, the trouble still most apparent in his eyes. "Would you mind being a little more explicit? Would you mind telling me exactly what you think I wrote you that sounded like a threat?"

He asked the question half hesitatingly, because he was not quite sure whether he was justified in thus obtaining private information under false pretenses, and yet he felt that he must know just what troubled her or he could never help her, and he was sure that if she knew he was an utter stranger, even a kindly one, those gentle lips would never open to inform him of her torture. As it was she could tell him her trouble with a perfectly conscience, thinking she was telling the man who knew all about it. [illegible] speculation about prying into [illegible] private affairs even with a good motive, gave him an air of troubled dignity, and real anxiety to know his fault that puzzled the girl more than all that had gone before.

"I cannot understand how you can ask such a question, since it has been the constant subject of discussion in all our letters!" she replied, sitting up with asperity and drying her tears. She was on the verge of growing angry with him for his petty, wilful misunderstanding of words whose meaning she felt he must know well.

"I do ask it," he said quietly, "and, believe me, I have a good motive in doing so."

She looked at him in surprise. It was impossible to be angry with those kindly eyes, even though he did persist in a wilful stupidity.

"Well, then, since you wish it stated once more I will tell you," she declared, the tears welling again into her eyes. "You first demanded that I marry you—demanded—without any pretense whatever of caring for me—with a hidden threat in your demand that if I did not, you would bring some dire calamity upon me by means that were already in your power. You took me for the same foolish little girl whom you had delighted to tease for years before you went abroad to live. And when I refused you, you told me that you could not only take away from my mother all the property which she had inherited from her brother, by means of a will made just before my uncle's death, and unknown except to his lawyer and you; but that you could and would blacken my dear dead father's name and honor, and show that every cent that belonged to mother and Jefferson and myself was stolen property. When I challenged you to prove any such thing against my honored father, you went still further and threatened to bring out a terrible story and prove it with witnesses who would swear to anything you said. You knew my father's white life, you as much as owned, your charges were false, and yet you dared to send me a letter from a vile creature who pretended that she was his first wife, and who said she could prove that he had spent much of his time in her company. You knew the whole thing was a falsehood, but you dared to threaten to make this known through the newspapers if I did not marry you. You realized that I knew that, even though few people and no friends would believe such a thing of my father, such a report in the papers—false though it was—would crush my mother to death. You knew that I would give my life to save her, and so you had me in your power, as you have me now. You have always wanted me in your power, just because you love to torture, and now you have me. But you cannot make me forget what you have done. I have given my life but I cannot give any more. If it is not sufficient you will have to do your worst."

She dropped her face into the little wet handkerchief, and Gordon sat with white drawn countenance and clenched hands. He was fairly trembling with indignation toward the villain who had thus dared impose upon this delicate flower of womanhood. He longed to search the world over for the false bridgroom; and, finding, give him his just dues.

And what should he do or say? Dared he tell her at once who he was and trust to her kind heart to forgive his terrible blunder and keep his secret till the message was safely delivered? Dared he? Had he any right? No, the secret was not his to divulge either for his own benefit or for any other's. He must keep that to himself. But he must help her in some way.

At last he began to speak, scarcely knowing what he was about to say:

"It is terrible, terrible, what you have told me. To have written such things to one like you—in fact, to any one one earth—seems to me unforgivable. It is the most inhuman cruelty I have ever heard of. You are fully justified in hating and despising the man who wrote such words to you."

"Then, why did you write them?" she burst forth. "And how can you sit there calmly and talk that way about it, as if you had nothing to do with the matter?"

"Because I never wrote those letters," he said, looking her steadily, earnestly, in the eyes.

"You never wrote them!" she exclaimed excitedly. "You dare to deny it?"

"I dare to deny it." His voice was quiet, earnest, convincing.

She looked at him, dazed, bewildered, indignant, sorrowful. "But you cannot deny it," she said, her fragile frame trembling with excitement. "I have the letters all in my suit case. You cannot deny your own handwriting. I have the last awful one—the one in which you threatened father's good name—here in my hand bag. I dared not put it with the rest, and I had no opportunity to destroy it before leaving home. I felt as if I must always keep it with me, lest otherwise its awful secret would somehow get out. There it is. Read it and see your own name signed to the words you say you did not write!"

While she talked, her trembling fingers had taken a folded, crumpled letter from her little handbag, and this she reached over and laid upon the arm of his chair.

"Read it," she said. "Read it and see that you cannot deny it."

"I should rather not read it," he said. "I do not need to read it to deny that I ever wrote such things to you."

"But I insist that you read it," said the girl.

"If you insist I will read it," he said, taking the letter reluctantly and opening it.

She sat watching him furtively through the tears which he read saw the angry flush steal into his cheeks as the villainy of a fellow man was revealed to him through the brief, coarse, cruel epistle, and she mistook the flush for one of shame.

Then his true brown eyes looked up and met her tearful gaze steadily, a fine anger burning in them.

"And you think I wrote that!" he said, a something in his voice she could not understand.

"What else could I think? It bears your signature," she answered coldly.

"The letter is vile," he said, "and the man who wrote it is a blackguard, and deserves the utmost that the law allows for such offenses. With your permission, I shall make it my business to see that he gets it."

"What do you mean," she said, wide eyed. "How could you punish yourself? You cannot still deny that you wrote the letter."

"I still deny that I wrote it, or ever saw it until you handed it to me just now."

The girl looked at him, nonplussed, more than half convinced, in spite of reason.

"But isn't that your handwriting?"

"It is not. Look!"

He took out his fountain pen and, holding the letter on the arm of her chair, he wrote rapidly in his natural hand her own name and address, beneath the address on the envelope, then held it up to her.

"Do they look alike?"

The two writings were as utterly unlike as possible, the letter being addressed in an almost unreadable scrawl, and the fresh writing standing fine and clear, in a script that spoke of character and business ability. Even a child could see at a glance that the two were not written by the same hand—and yet, of course, it might have been practiced for the purpose of deception. This thought flashed through the minds of both even as he held it out for her to look.

She looked from the envelope to his eyes and back to the letter, startled, not knowing what to think.

But before either of them had time for another word the conductor, the porter and several people from the car behind came hurriedly through, and they realized that while they talked the train had come to a halt, amid the blazing electric lights of a great city station.

"Why," said Gordon, startled, "we must have reached Pittsburgh. Is this Pittsburgh?" he called out to the vanishing porter.

"Yas, sah!" yelled the porter, putting his head around the curve of the passageway. "You bettah hurry, sah, foh dis train goes on to Cincinnati pretty quick. We's late gittin in you see."

Neither of them had noticed a man in rough clothes with slouch hat and hands in his pockets who had boarded the train a few miles back and walked through the car several times eyeing them keenly. He stuck his head in at the door furtively and drew back quickly again out of sight.

Gordon hurriedly gathered up the baggage, and they went out of the car, the porter rushing back as they reached the door, to assist them and get a last tip. There was no opportunity to say anything more, as they mingled with the crowd, until the porter landed their baggage in the great station and hurried back to his train. The man with the slouch hat followed and stood unobtrusively behind them.

Gordon looked down at the white, drawn face of the girl, and his heart was touched with compassion for her trouble. He must make her some satisfactory explanation at once that would set her heart at rest, but he could not do it here, for every seat about them was filled with noisy, chattering folk. He stooped and whispered low and tenderly.

"Don't worry, little girl! Just try to trust me, and I will explain all."

"Can you explain it?" she asked anxiously, as if catching at a rope thrown out to save her life.

"Perfectly," he said, "if you will be patient and trust me. But we cannot talk here. Just wait in this seat until I see if I can get the stateroom on the sleeper."

He left her with his courteous bow, and she sat watching his tall, fine figure as he threaded his way among the crowds to the Pullman window, her heart filled with mingling emotions. In spite of her reason, a tiny bit of hope for the future was springing up in her heart and without her own will she found herself inclined to trust him. At least it was all she could do at present.

CHAPTER XII.

Back at Milton an hour before, when the shades of dusk were falling and a slender moon hung tirtidly on the edge of the horizon, a horse drawing a spring wagon ambled deliberately into town and came to a reluctant halt beside the railroad station, having made a wide detour through the larger part of the county on the way to that metropolis.

The sun had been hot, the road much of it rought, and the jolts over stones and bumps had not added to the comfort of the thick set man, already bruised and weary from his travels. Joe's conversation had not ceased. He had given his guest a wide range of topics, discoursing learnedly on the buckwheat crop and the blight that might be expected to assail the cherry trees. He pointed out certain portions of land infested with rattlesnakes, and told bloodcurdling stories of experiences with stray bears and wildcats in a maple grove through which they passed till the passenger looked furtively behind him and urged the driver to hurry a little faster.

Joe, seeing his gullibility, only made his stories of country life the bigger, for the thick set man, though bold as a lion in his own city haunts, was a coward in the unknown world of the country.

When the traveler looking at his watch urged Joe to make haste and asked how many miles further Milton was, Joe managed it that the horse should stumble on a particularly stony bit of road. Then getting down gravely from the wagon he examined the horse's feet each in turn, shaking his head sadly over the left fore foot.

"Jes' 'z I 'sposed," he meditated dreamily. "Stone bruise! Lame horse! Don't believe I ought to go on. Sorry, but it'll be the ruination of the horse. You ain't in a hurry I hope."

The passenger in great excitement promised to double the fare if the young man would get another horse and hurry him forward, and after great professions of doubt Joe gave in and said he would try the horse, but it wouldn't do to work him hard. They would have to let him take his time. He couldn't on any account leave the horse behind anywhere and get a fresh one because it belonged to his best friend and he promised to bring it back safe and sound. They would just take their time and go slow and see if the horse could stand it. He wouldn't think of trying it if it weren't for the extra money which he needed.

So the impatient traveler was dragged fuming along weary hour after weary hour through the monotonous glory of a spring afternoon of which he saw nothing but the dust of the road as he tried to count the endless miles. Every mile or two Joe would descend from the wagon seat and fuss around the horse's leg, the horse nothing loth at such unprecedented attention dozing cozily by the road side during the process. And so was the traveler brought to his destination 10 minutes after the last train that stopped at Milton that night had passed the station. The telegraph office was not closed however, and without waiting to haggle the passenger paid his $30 for the longest journey he ever took, and disappeared into the station, while Joe, whipping up his petted animal, and whistling cheerily, went rattling down the short cut from Milton home at a surprising pace for a lame horse. He was eating his supper at home in a little more than an hour, and the horse seemed to have miraculously recovered from his stone bruise. Joe was wondering how his girl would look in a hat with purple plumes, and thinking of the $30 with a chuckle.

"Where did you get that girl—?"

It was surprising how much that thick-set man, weary and desperate though he was, could accomplish when once he reached the telegraph station and sent his messages flying on their way. Inless than three minutes after his arrival he had extracted from the station agent the fact that two people, man and woman, answering the description he gave, had bought tickets for Pittsburgh and taken the afternoon train for that city. The agent had noticed them on account of their looking as if they came from the city. He especially noticed the purple plumes, the like of which he had never seen before. He had taken every minute he could get off from selling tickets and sending telegrams to watch the lady through his little cobwobby window. They didn't wear hats like that in Milton.

In ten minutes one message was on its way to a crony in Pittsburgh with whom the thick-set man kept in constant touch for just such occasions as the present, stirring him to strenuous action; another message had winged its mysterious way to Mr. Holman, giving him the main facts in the case; while a third message caught another crony 30 miles north of Pittsburgh and ordered him to board the evening express at his own station, hunt up the parties described, and shadow them to their destination, if possible getting in touch with the Pittsburgh crony when he reached the city.

The pursuer then ate a ham sandwich with liberal washings of liquid fire while he waited replies to some of his messages; and as soon as he was satisfied that he had set justice in motion he hired an automobile and hied him across country to catch a midnight express to Pittsburgh. He had given orders that his man and accompanying lady should be held in Pittsburgh until his arrival, and he had no doubt but that the orders would be carried out, so sure was he that he was on the right track, and that his cronies would be able and willing to follow his orders.

There was some kind of an excursion on at Pittsburgh, and the place was crowded. The trainmen kept calling off specials, and crowds hurried out of the waiting room, only to be replaced by other crowds, all eager, pushing, talking, laughing. They were mostly men, but a good many women and some children seemed to be of the number; and the noise and excitement worried her after her own exciting afternoon. Celia longed to lay her down and sleep, but the seat was narrow, and hard, and people were pressing on every side. That disagreeable man in the slouch hat would stand too near. He was most repulsive looking, though he did not seem to be aware of her presence.

Gordon had a long wait before he finally secured the coveted stateroom and started back to her, when suddenly a face that he knew loomed up in the crowd and startled him. It was the face of a private detective who was well known about Washington, but whose headquarters were in New York.

Until that instant, it had not occurred to him to fear watchers so far south and west of Pittsburgh. It was not possible that the other bridegroom would think to track him here, and, as for the Holman contingent, they would not be likely to make a public disturbance about his disappearance, lest they be found to have some connection with the first theft of government property. They could have watchers only through private means, and they must have been wily indeed if they had anticipated his move through Pittsburgh to Washington. Still, it was the natural move for him to make in order to get home as quickly as possible and yet escape them. And this man in the crowd was the very one whom they would have been likely to pick out for their work. He was as slippery in his dealings as they must be and no doubt was in league with them. He knew the man and his ways thoroughly, and had no mind to fall into his hands.

Whether he had been seen by the detective yet or not, he could not tell, but he suspected he had, by the way the man stood around and avoided recognizing him. There was not an instant to be lost. The fine state room must go untenanted. He must make a dash for liberty. Liberty! Ah, East Liberty! What queer things these brains of ours are! He knew Pittsburgh just a little. He remembered having caught a train at East Liberty station once when he had not time to come down to the station to take it. Perhaps he might get the same train at East Liberty. It was nearly two hours before it left.

Swooping down upon the baggage, he murmured in the girl's ear:

"Can you hurry a little? We must catch a car right away."

She followed him closely through the crowd, he stooping as if to look down at his suit case, so that his height might not attract the attention of the man whose recognition he feared, and in a moment more they were out in the lighted blackness of the streets. One glance backward showed his supposed enemy stretching his neck above the crowd, as if searching for some one, as he walked hurriedly toward the very doorway they had just passed. Behind them shadowed the man in the slouch hat, and with a curious motion of his hand signalled another like himself, the Pittsburgh crony, who skulked in the darkness outside. Instantly this man gave another signal and out of the gloom of the street a carriage drew up at the curb before the door, the cabman looking eagerly for patronage.

Gordon put both suit cases in one hand and taking Celia's arm as gently as he could in his haste hurried her toward the carriage. It was the very refuge he sought. He placed her inside and gave the order for East Liberty station, drawing a long breath of relief at being safely out of the station. He did not see the shabby one who mounted the box beside the driver and gave his directions in guttural whispers, nor the man with the slouch hat who watched from the doorway and followed them to a familiar haunt on the nearest car. He only felt how good it was to be by themselves once more where they could talk together without interruption.

But conversation was not easy under the circumstances. The noise of wagons, trains and cars was so great at the station that they could think of nothing but the din, and when they had threaded their way out of the tangle and started rattling over the pavement the driver went at such a furious pace that they could still only converse by shouting and that not at all satisfactorily. It seemed a strange thing that any cabman should drive at such a rapid rate within the city limits, but as Gordon was anxious to get away from the station and the keen eyed detective as fast as possible he thought nothing of it at first. After a shouted word or two they ceased to try to talk, and Gordon, half shyly, reached out a reassuring hand and laid in on the girl's shrinking one that lay in her lap. He had not meant to keep it there but a second, just to make her understand that all was well, and he would soon be able to explain things, but as she did not seem to resent it, nor draw her own away, he yielded to the temptation and kept the small gloved hand in his.

SWEDEN, THE LAND OF LAKES AND FLOWERS

In her book, "Silhouettes of Sweden," Ethel C. Hargrove writes of the flowers of that northern land, "for never before did I see such flowers. No wonder it produced Linnaeus; no wonder that Swedish ladies love flowers, or that Swedish gardens are world renowned. The flora of Sweden consist of about 1,600 species of wild flowering plants; about 1,050 are found in Skane, the most southern and fertile province, even in Arctic Lapland, owing probably to the influence of the Gulf stream, 150 species are obtainable.

"I gloried in this wealth of wild flowers. They seemed to spread themselves in front of me like a big variegated carpet of many colors. Sweden is emphatically the land of the wild rose, tinted from pure snowy white to deepest shades of crimson.

"Do you recollect a pretty yellow moss, a little plant sometimes found on bur gardeden rockeries in England? It grows like a weed all over Sweden, so does a very handsome violet flower very much like a Canterbury bell.

"There are many violets, but they have no scent; blue and white anemones, rose, jasmine, carnation and honeysuckle are common; the dahlia is much grown and a great favorite—it took its name from Dahl, a Swedish gardener.

"Words fail to describe the Swedish lakes. I can conjure up many a mental picture of their charm and fascination: the wide expanses of water, with white and yellow water lillies floating tranquilly on their azure surface; the green fringe of birch and pine woods where the sun peers furtively into glades and fern bordered footpaths, fit to form a carpet for the fairies.

"How many scenes of beauty does the mere thought of an afternoon spent in rural Sweden conjure up!

"The country is 900 miles in length, and I do not think it is possible to walk more than one of those miles without seeing a lake. No landscape there seems perfect without one, and they vary in size from miniature sparkling gems brightening the dim recesses of dense tracts of woodland mash to Lake Vanern, the second largest piece of inland water in Europe. I always regretted I was not able to see Lake Siljan, Sweden's 'eye,' but Dalecarlia, Gota canal and Visby still remain to be pleasurable anticipations of some future tour."

From Harper's Magazine.

Backed up at right angles to the stoop of the Cheval Blanc was a grandfather omnibus, which certainly dated from the third empire. Its sign read: "Grasse—St. Cezaire. Service de la Poste." The canvas boot had the curve of ocean waves. A pert little hood stuck out over the driver's seat. The loan pair of horses—one black, the other white—stood with noses turned toward the tramway rails. The artist was still gazing skylineward. I grasped his arm and brought his eyes to earth. No word was needed. He fumbled for his pencil, but to our horror the driver had mounted and was reaching for the reins. I got across the street just in time to save the picture. Holding out cigars to the driver and a soldier beside him on the box, I begged them to wait—please to wait—just five little minutes.

"There is no place for another passenger. We are full inside," he remonstrated.

But he had dropped the reins to strike a match. In the moment thus gained I got out a franc and pressed it into his hand.

"Your coach, my friend," I said is unique in all France. The coffee of that celebrated artist yonder, sitting at the terrace of the golden bar, is getting cold while he immortalizes the Grasse-St. Cezaire service. I beg of you to delay your departure 10 little minutes."

The soldier had found the cigar to his liking. "A quarter of an hour will do no harm at all," he announced positively, getting down from his place.

The driver puffed and growled. "We have our journey to make, and the hour of departure is 1:30. If it is not too long—15 minutes at the most." He pocketed the franc less reluctantly than he had spoken.

Soon an old dame, wearing a bonnet that antedated the coach, stuck out her head. A watch was in her hand. Surely she was not of the Midi! Fearing that she might influence the driver disadvantageously to our interests, I went to inform her that the delay was unavoidable. I could not offer her a cigar. There are never any bonbons in my pocket. So I thought to make a speech.

"All my excuses," I explained, "for this regretable delay. The coach in which you are seated—and in which in a very, very few minutes you will be riding—belong to the generation before yourself and me. It is important for the sake of history as well as art that the presence in Grasse of my illustrious artist friend, coincident with the St. Cezaire coach before the door of the Cheval Blanc, be seized upon to secure for our grandchildren an indelible memory of travel conditions in our day. So I beg your indulgence."

Two school girls smothered a snicker. There was a dangerous glitter in the old dame's eyes. She did not answer me, but a young woman raised her voice in a threat to have the driver dismissed. But enough time had been gained. The artist signified his willingness to have the mail leave now for St. Cezaire.

Off went the coach, white horse and black horse clattering alternately hoofs that would gladly have remained longer in repose. The soldier saluted. The driver grinned. We waved to the old woman with the poke bonnet, and lifted our glasses to several pretty girls who appeared at the coach door for the first time in order that they might glare at us. I am afraid I must record that it was to glare. Our friendly salutation was not answered. But we had the sketch. That is what really mattered.

Bride For Aged Rail Expert.

From the New York Times.

William Mahl, 72 years old, former vice president and controller of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems, and Miss Hannah Goepel, who is 32, were married here by City Clerk P. J. Scully. The bride had been employed by Mr. Mahl for the last few years in a secretarial capacity and was a friend of his first wife, who died several years ago.

There were no formalities attached to the wedding and no celebration. Mr. Mahl refused to make any comment on his marriage. When he was active in the railroad business he was noted for his dislike for any sort of publicity.

He has been in the railway service for nearly 50 years. He was regarded as one of the few men who had a complete grasp of the great questions involved in railway operations and transportation.

Beautifying a State Capitol.

From the Salt Lake Herald-Republican.

Two thousand dollars has been set aside by the capitol commission to beautify the grounds behind the state house. More money will be devoted to the project later. The capitol commission is considering mural decorations for the rotunda. Six artists, including one from Denver, one from New York and one from the Pacific coast, have submitted sketches. A scene showing the arrival of the pioneers will probably be placed in one end of the building, and two scenes, representing agriculture and mining, will probably be placed in the other.

CITY OF COLOGNE IS GREAT RESTAURATEUR

Municipality Feeds 700,000 Persons at Astonishingly Low Price.

Cologne, (by mail)—The municipality of Cologne is today the biggest restaurateur in the world. As the number of people taking advantage of the wholesome noonday meal increased ... bounds the authorities ... scheme of subscriptions ... is in force today. The citizen who wishes to patronize the restaurant of his city now subscribes by the week, and at a stated hour each day, one of the municipal wagons appears, bearing the food in tightly sealed heat retaining cans as warm as it was when it left the kitchen perhaps an hour before.

The kitchen, originally a manufacturing plant, has been so thoroughly rebuilt and rearranged that its former occupants would no longer recognize it. The largest part of it is built above and around a row of huge kettles, each capable of cooking from 7,000 to 8,000 quarts at once so that from one side potatoes, properly prepared, can pour into the kettles, vegetables from another side meat from another, and water from a fourth.

How Food Is Prepared.

Each day's meal (Sunday is excepted) consists in the main of a thick soup or stew of which the component parts are an almost infinite variety of vegetables, potatoes and meat. The preparation is accomplished with a regard for cleanliness that could hardly be excelled in the kitchen of any fine hotel or private home.

Potatoes brought in from the railroad or from the store houses of the city, are dumped into a trough through which water flows, and borne along and up to a height of some eight feet over a winding screw. This process removes most of the surface dirt. From the height they fell into an ingenious machine that peels them with great exactitude, and from this they pass through another water filled trough to where women stand with knives and cut out the eyes.

After the hand work is finished the potatoes once more go into a trough that fairly boils with water constantly in motion, and pass underground, while being washed once more, to a second ladder up which they climb to a slicer. Thence they go to the kettles.

In another portion of the building a somewhat similar process goes on with the vegetables. They too are washed, not once but many times, and then are cut up, washed again passed from one machine to another until at last they are ready for the kettles. Meat that comes in on huge trucks shares the same fate, passes through a chopper that cuts it into cubes, and thence onward through a washing machine to the kettles.

The principal wastage from potatoes, of course, is the part that clings to the peelings and to extracted eyes. To save this a special machine has been invented and the astonishing amount of potato substance thus saved is dried and later untilized for food in some way or other.

The kitchen refuse that comes into the plant in huge wagon loads goes through a variety of drying processes, and through a machine equipped with magnets that automatically extract all foreign substances of metal. Their number and variety is astonishing, and they range from hairpins to tin cans, and include bottle tops, coins, wire and 100 other things.

Even Use Refuse.

The kitchen refuse thus "put through the mill" not only yields a brownish flaky substance, but has an odor not dissimilar to glue, but many chemicals as well which are vital to the food of horses and cattle.

The men in charge of the scientific end of the establishment have discovered the great value of marsh grasses, even of weeds, because of the high percentage of protein that many of them contain. So now, in addition to human food and refuse, and animal food, Cologne is busily collecting all the available rank grasses which cattle never ... Great Year for Soft Drinks.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

When a marble soda fountain was displayed at the centennial exposition in 1876 it was viewed by visitors as a curiosity. Robert M. Green, its builder, having started business only two years before. Today soda water as a beverage is an American institution, and the business of building fountains, manufacturing supplies and dispensing thirst quenching mixtures has assumed tremendous proportions, $800,000,000 being estimated as the retail volume of sodas, sundaes and other fountain beverages for 1916, an increase of about $300,000,000, or 60 per cent, over last year.

Introduction of ice cream in soda water probably gave the greatest impetus to the business. Credit for the idea belongs to Philadelphia, as it was during the Franklin Institute exposition, some time after the centennial, that Mr. Green gave this idea successful trial. Receipts at the fountain exhibit jumped from a few dollars to $200 a day and the soda water business was made.

This year has been the most prosperous in the history of the soda water trade, due to the prolonged hot spells and the full employment at good wages of the laboring classes generally over the country.

In Philadelphia alone expert supplies salesmen estimate the soda business has increased at least 500 per cent in the last five years. There are score of fountains in the busy sections of the city that do a business of from $1,000 to $2,000 a month, while some of the larger drug and department stores average daily receipts of $300 to $400 from their soda fountains.

The soda business is an all the year round proposition today with most drug stores. A few years ago, before the introduction of counter service appliances which are much less expensive to install than the old fashioned, elaborate marble and plate glass wall fountains, the soda business virtually ceased with the advent of winter flannels.

Ralph's Hunting Trip.

Once upon a time Ralph's father promised him that the next time he went hunting, Ralph could go, too, that is, he would promise to do just as he was told. Of course Ralph was ready to promise, so very early one morning in fact, before it was light, they started out on their long walk through the woods.

Ralph was not quite old enough to carry a gun, but his father wanted him to learn how to shoot and hunt for game of all kinds, so Ralph followed a little behind, watching his father closely.

They had walked several miles and had only seen one quail, which was too far off for his father to try and shoot, and Ralph was beginning to think hunting wasn't so much fun after all. He almost wished he had staid at home and helped the boys build the fort they had planned to make this Saturday, when down in a corn field close to the woods he saw something moving.

Calling softly to his father, he crept on ahead and sure enough, in among the corn stalks was the most beautiful bird Ralph had ever seen.

It was so busy eating the corn that it didn't hear Ralph. Bang, went his father's gun, and Ralph, forgetting that he had been forbidden to walk in front while hunting, ran into the corn field and held the bird up high for his father to see.

It was a beautiful Chinese pheasant and the plumage on the bird was very beautiful. Ralph's father couldn't scold him very hard, for he acted so pleased and proud that his father had at last shot a bird.

As it was getting late, and they had quite a long journey before arriving home, they didn't stop to try their luck again, but hurried back to show their prize to mother. Ralph carried the bird all the way home and when he reached there, ran into the house shouting: Mother, look, look what we brought you!"

That night Ralph helped his father pluck the bird and when his mother saw the beautiful feathers it had she said "Let me have the feathers and I will make me a hat." They were very glad to give them to her and she made a lovely feather hat that she could wear all winter. Whenever she went out with Ralph he would say to her: "Are you going to wear your hat we found for you?" and she always did.

For nearly 2,000 years, the Jew has wondered throughout the world and lived as a minority group among great and powerful nations, and still he survives the very nations, who strove to destroy Israel.

Mr. Winchevsky made an appeal to the Jewish workingmen to join the socialistic ranks and help enforce social and economic justice throughout the world.

The poet will give tonight a recitation of his new drama "The Last Recruiting." The drama deals with the life of the Jews in Russia in 1873, when they were compelled to serve in the army from their very childhood, Jewish children being taken away by the government officials and kept in the army for a quarter of a century.

Mr. Winchevsky, whose 60th anniversary of his birth is being celebrated by the Jews all over the world was born in Kowno, Poland, in 1856. In 1876 he left Russia for Koenigsburg, Germany, where he joined the socialist movement. In 1878 he was arrested and banished from that country. Later on he wandered throughout central Europe and England, and in 1894 he came to this country. He was editor of several Jewish publications and is the author of several volumes of poems, satires and stories. Among the radical circles of this country he is known as the "Great Grandpa" of the socialists.

Lamp Imports Stopped.

In deciding the Just and Hannaman patent suit against the Laco-Phillips company, importer of lamps made in Holland, in favor of the General Electric company, Judge Mayer sounded the death knell of the imported tungsten filament lamp in the domestic market, according to the Electrical World. The Laco-Phillips company, which was probably the largest importer of lamps, has gone out of business so far as the United States is concerned. Other importers of tungsten lamps, if they do not wish to infringe the patent, must cease bringing such infringing lamps to this country.

Prior to the war there was a very appreciable trade in this country in foreign made lamps, although they were mostly of the miniature type. The trade in standard incandescent lamps was practically confined to the products of domestic factories. Prices and quality of goods made this possible. Miniature lamps of domestic manufacture, however, played but a small part in the domestic market until late in 1914. It was purely a question of price. Foreign made lamps sold for considerably less than the American made product. In September, 1914, the price of American lamps was lowered to a price that could not be met by foreign manufacturers. Since then the American manufacturers of miniature lamps have had more than they could handle.

The decrease at that time, it is felt by some, was really not necessary in order to obtain a firm grip on this market. The war would keep German and Austrian lamps off the American market and these were the real competing lamps. However, with the cut in price in effect the door to this country was more firmly locked. Even if European manufacturers do send over lamps that do not infringe the General Electric's patents, it is claimed that they will not be able to compete on either a price or quality basis.

TO PREVENT OLD AGE COMING TOO SOON!

"Toxic poisons in the blood are thrown out by the kidneys. The kidneys act as filters for such poisons. If we wish to prevent old age coming too soon and increase our chances for a long life, we should drink plenty of pure water and take a little Anuric," says the famous Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y.

When suffering from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, or that constant tired, worn-out feeling, the simple way to overcome these disorders is merely to obtain a little Anuric from your nearest druggist and you will quickly notice the grand results. You will find it thirty-seven times more potent than lithia, and that it dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

Cold Calculation.

"Quality is more to be desired than quantity," said the man of artistic inclinations.

"Not always," replied the practical person. "A diamond is pure carbon. But you can't get the action from it that you can from a ton of coal."

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming as profitable as wheat growing. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, so they make good pasture for cattle, horses and sheep. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate healthful. Military service is not compulsory in Canada, but there is an urgent demand for farmers to stay on the farms and produce the largest possible crops.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

ADVERTISING DID IT

What One Merchant Did In A Little Town Of 1015 Population

"Strasberg, Ohio, is pretty much a one-horse town It only has a population of 1015. Its trade territory is not very large, for it is bounded on all sides by big cities, including Cincinnati and Cleveland Compared to most of the little cities in Washington, it much of a place. Garver Brothers' store, located in Strasberg, in 1915 did a business of $427,735.97. When Mr. G A. Garver, the manager, was invited over to Cleveland by the Ad club to tell how he did it, he went. and he told His story may be summed in one statement.

"Last year we spent $15,360.47, or 3½ per cent of their sales, for advertising.

"The next time one of your merchants springs a hard luck story on you, tell him about Garver Brothers' store and don't forget to bear down on the fact that they spent 3½ per cent of their sales for advertising."

Paste this over your desk. It is a fact that has been accomplished by all successful merchants, though perhaps on a smaller scale The one factor in building up a bussness is to advertise and keep everlastingly at it. The mail order business has reached its mammoth proportions of today solely through advertising, 80 per cent of which is through the newspapers. Modern business requires advertising and lots of it Wannamaker made the statement that if he had to quit advertising he would quit business, as in that event it would be only a short time before he had to quit.—Britt Tribune

THE OLD HOME PAPER

The "Old Home Paper" is a letter writing saver. Did you ever stop to think what a great labor saver the home paper is, as a means of communication with absent friends? "Write to me often," is the last command the one breaking away from ties so often gives to those left behind. In the rush and hurry of every day very few people nowadays have time to devote to correspondence of leisurely kind the people of other days kept with unvarying punctuality. And there is where the home paper saves a world of trouble. It is much better than a letter too, for it contains much that a letter would not. Items of interest are in that the writer might not know of or overlook. It is wond ful how eagerly one devours a home paper when a stranger in a strange land Even the people you did not know intimately while at home become an absorbing interest to you when you read that they have died or married, or figured otherwise in home affairs. If there is someone in your family away try and send them the paper regularly and a letter occasionally and see if they do not appreciate the favor of the paper. The Times will answer the purpose of letters from home Send it to a friend for a Christmas present.

THE KLEMME TIMES

M. M. MAGNER, Publisher.

KLEMME, IOWA

One of the things that make New York an interesting city is the practice of some shopkeepers of putting in their windows attractive goods with price labels. An arresting instance of this sort was seen recently in a Broadway jeweler's window. Here was a finger ring of diamonds and an emerald, price $12,500; a marquise shaped diamond ring, $4,250; pear shaped diamond pendant, $2,250, diamond earrings, $5,800, and a galaxy of other resplendent gems to appeal to the frequenters of the "Great White Way." At the other extreme of the social scale for the buying public are the push carts of New York's east side, equally interesting in their way. On one of these carts in Canal street an astonishing variety of things mechanical was found—among others, clocks and watches, music boxes, all kinds of tools and at least a score of second hand cameras of various makes.

At Ann Arbor, Mich, workmen recently repaired the outside stairs of old University hall. The building was constructed in the '70s, and complaint was made at that time that the stairway was too narrow to permit the co-eds to pass comfortably, as the era of the hoopskirt was on them. The stairway, though rebuilt, is as narrow as the original passageway.

Mount Tai-hang, a famous sacred mountain of China which has long been denuded of woodland, is to be reforested by the government. Davenport Real Estate Man Implicates City Officials In Graft Deal.

Davenport, Ia., Dec. 16.—Oscar L. Susemihl, aged 40, a well known Davenport real estate man, shot himself through the heart yesterday. He left a note charging Alderman William Moeller and J. C. Proestler, of the local city council, with agreeing to accept a bribe of $500 to swing a deal whereby the city was to purchase the old vinegar works for a tool house. Susemihl secured an option from a local bank to sell it for $6,000. It is alleged that through the efforts of the aldermen the city was informed the price was $7,000, the plan being, it was said, to split the profits between the aldermen and the agent. Through the efforts of bank officials the alleged deal was blocked and an investigation commenced by the mayor.

Susemihl appeared before the committee twice yesterday and denied that the aldermen were implicated and then went to his office, wrote the note and then shot himself. The mayor and other council members announce tonight that both aldermen will be unseated.

FROZE HANDS AND FEET.

Atlantic, Ia., Dec. 16.—Charles Clark, who has been employed for several months in an Omaha restaurant, had planned to go home to his mother at Oshkosh for Christmas. Clark started home, and to save money he undertook to ride on a blind baggage. He was soon numbed by the cold and when the train struck a sharp curve it threw him off. There he lay until morning when the crew of a passenger train picked him up. His feet and hands were frozen and will have to be amputated. His mother was notified. Clark is in an Atlantic hospital.

AMERICA MUST LEAD PEACE MOVE—CAPPER

Washington, Dec. 15.—America is confronted with the responsibility and duty of leading the movement for universal peace and to insure that such wars as that of the present shall no longer disturb the world, Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas, today told the conference of governors here.

"Upon the American people, Governor Capper said, "rests the responsibility and duty of leadership in the movement for permanent peace among civilized nations. It is no Quixotic enterprise to which we are called. We are not meddlers in the affairs of others when we say that war must cease. The interdependence of nations, the bonds of commerce and finance, entirely aside from the dictates of common humanity, make it impossible for this plague of war to exist anywhere upon the globe without seriously affecting both our international relations and our domestic affairs."

WHAT'S TO BECOME OF THE IDLE GUARDSMEN?

Over 1,000 Will Return January 1, to Find Old Jobs Gone.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 16.—On New Year's day there will be 1,000 Iowa soldiers from the Texas border looking for jobs.

Later on, when the remainder are ordered home to be mustered out, there will be something like 3,000 more jobless.

Included in this number are many college boys who, while they are not looking for employment, are nevertheless anxious as to their status at college.

The big problem confronting Iowa is the problem of the unemployed guardsmen. But a comparative few had their jobs guaranteed when they joined the colors last June. A few concerns are keeping the places open for their men in the guard. A vast majority will be up against the responsibility of securing employment.

The directory board of the chamber of commerce at a meeting discussed preliminary plans for taking care of the Des Moines guard upon its return.

In Sioux City, Council Bluffs, Davenport and the larger cities of the state arrangements are already under way to find employment for the guard. Employers are asked to cooperate with commercial clubs. In many cities employment directories are maintained.

Most of the colleges of Iowa have promised scholarships to all guardsmen who were compelled to drop out of school at the call to arms.

GREAT RAIL STRIKE IS DEEMED UNLIKELY

Believed Railroads and Their Employes Are About to Get Together

Washington, Dec. 14.—In connection with a meeting of the Senate interstate commerce committee it developed the railroads and employes are negotiating on a plan for permanent settlement of the wage and hour dispute. It looks to a permanent government committee on which roads, workmen and public shall be represented.

That the roads and the men may reach an agreement over the present controversy and all danger of strike be averted, is stated on high authority.

Senator Cummins predicted there would be no strike. President Wilson's recommendation for compulsory investigation will apparently fail.

MAY CHECK IOWA BOOZE SHIPMENTS

Four Roads and One Express Company Enjoined In Fort Dodge Court.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Dec. 15.—Whether railroads and express companies have the right to deliver booze in Iowa is to be determined in district court here.

Judge R. M. Wright has issued temporary injunctions against the Wells-Fargo Express company, the Chicago Great Western railway, the Illinois Central, Dubuque & Sioux City and M. & St. L. roads.

Hearings will be held later to determine whether or not the injunctions shall be made permanent. In the meanwhile these organizations are forbidden to deliver liquor in Fort Dodge.

Inspection of the express register at Moorland, near Fort Dodge, shows that between 8,000 and 10,000 pints of liquor are being shipped there each month to people living in Fort Dodge who prefer to get their "packages" out of town.

Books for the last two months were the only ones brought into the court room. The express agent at Moorland claimed that books used prior to the last two months have disappeared. It was in the books that have not been produced that names of many prominent citizens of Fort Dodge, including lawyers, judges, ministers and men well known for their abstinence from liquor, were signed, according to popular reports.

DETECTIVE WICKERSON RETAINED FOR INVESTIGATION

Red Oak, Ia., Dec. 15.—At a secret meeting Monday night persons interested in the case decided to retain J. N. Wilkerson Burns' detective to continue his investigations of the Villisca ax murders.

It is unlikely there will be any grand jury investigation of the case until February 20, the next session of that body.

Aside from much comment on the slander suit and the verdict there is little excitement here or in Villisca since the sensational case ended.

Attorneys for the plaintiff in the recent suit are now engaged in measures leading to an appeal. The plaintiff has been given 30 days to file motion for a new trial.

It is after trial gossip in Red Oak that many armed men were constantly in the court room during the trial and that during the proceedings there were a great many applications for permits to carry concealed weapons. All of these were refused.

DRASTIC MOVE IS MADE TO RELIEVE RAIL CONGESTION

Heavy Charges Imposed to Compel Shippers to Unload Cars and Keep Carriers Moving.

MAY CUT LIVING COSTS

Believed Penalty System Will Result In Better Facilities For Transportation of Coal.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 16.—Drastic regulations adopted by the railroads went into effect today with the approval of the interstate car service commission as emergency measures to relieve the shortage of freight cars, which for months has been a brake on the country's commerce and affected the high cost of living. The remedy is the railroads' own, proposed by the car service commission of the American Railway association and formally approved by the federal commission. The first regulation provides that a consignor may have the usual two days to unload a car and that thereafter demurrage shall be charged at the rate of $1 for the first, $2 for the second, $3 for the third and $5 for the fourth and each succeeding day.

Heretofore the charge has been uniformly $1 a day and many consignees, notably automobile concerns and coal dealers, declared to have been glad to permit the shipments to stand for long periods, because the penalty was so small that it compared favorably with warehouse charges.

Another order increases the daily rental paid by railroads to each other for cars from 45 to 75 cents per car, or about 75 per cent.

Some eastern roads are said to have from 5,000 to 10,000 foreign cars of a single type.

Little Roads to Suffer.

The order is expected to make serious difficulties for some small roads, which never have had sufficient equipment of their own.

Foreign cars on congested roads are said to have come almost wholly from southern and western roads. Reports to the Interstate Commerce commission show that they glut the railroad yards at sidings of most eastern lines and many in the middle west. The trend of traffic because of the European demand for American goods, has been overwhelmingly toward eastern seaports.

The rise in the price of coal is attributed almost wholly to the car shortage, aided by the alleged activities of speculators. While the east was paying panic prices for coal, the mines of the middle west, and to a less degree, of the anthracite region, were working with reduced forces, or on part time in many instances, because there was not a supply of cars to handle the output. An order for the return of coal cars to their owners, loaded or empty, was issued several weeks ago by the car service commission to meet this condition.

Must Keep Cars Moving.

In respect to foodstuffs, the same situation is said to have applied, although it has been less acute. Recent orders of the commission which provides that receiving roads shall return box cars and refrigerator cars without delay to the owning lines, are said to be showing great effect now.

In railroad yards of the middle west the relief of congestion under these and related orders, is said to have been marked. Thus at Detroit, within a month the number of loaded cars in the railroad yards awaiting unloading is said to have fallen from 25,000 to 15,000.

Further consideration of the problem presented by the shortage of cars is the subject of a conference here today of officials of eastern roads. A meeting of some of the chief shippers of the country will be held here next week.

GREECE YIELDS TO DEMANDS OF ALLIES

Agrees to Demobilize Troops and Keep Them In Restricted Territory.

Athens, Thursday, Dec. 14 (via London, Dec. 15.)—The demands of the entente allies, presented to the Greek government today were in the nature of an ultimatum. All Greek troops are to be withdrawn from Thessaly, according to the demands of the entente and only a certain number of soldiers are to be concentrated in Peloponnesus.

The demands for reparation for the events of December 1 and 2, when fighting took place between entente landing forces and Greek troops, are to be formulated later.

London, Dec. 16.—The Greek government has accepted the ultimatum presented by the entente allies, says a dispatch from Athens to the Central News agency.

WILLING TO YIELD POINT ALLIES SE

Washington Envoys Of Kaiser's Government Is Ready to Discuss Universal Limitation of Arms.

OPPOSE COALITIONS

Make For War Instead of Peace —Wilson to Take No Definite Step Until Lloyd George Has Spoken.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 16.—The German embassy last night authoritatively denied the statement that it was empowered to say that representatives of the belligerents should meet to discuss peace terms. It was said that one of the most important subjects for discussion would be that of limitation of universal disarmament. The German view is said to be that any peace agreement would be worthless which did not make a necessary armament on a scale approaching that which existed before the war.

The German view further is indicated as being generally opposed to international coalitions, as they have existed in the past, on the ground that such coalitions are opposed to the maintenance of peace, rather than conducive to it.

Wait Hint from Allies.

President Wilson probably will not finally determine on any formal action in connection with the peace proposals of the central powers until after Lloyd-George, the British prime minister, has spoken in the house of commons Tuesday.

In the meantime through the American diplomatic representatives in the capitals of the entente powers the American government will keep in close touch with the situation. No formal comment was forthcoming today either from the White House or the state department. It is known to be the view of most of the cabinet members that the American government should move cautiously and do nothing to impair its influence for peace.

Wilson Hopes for League.

President Wilson is known to attach great importance to the possibility of establishing an association of nations to maintain peace. He outlined in definite terms the procedure he would follow in initiating a peace movement, in the course of a speech delivered here last May before the league to enforce peace. At that time the president said:

"If it should ever be our privilege to suggest or initiate the movement for peace among the nations now at war, I am sure that the people of the United States would wish their government to move along these lines:

"First—Such a settlement with regard to their own immediate interests as the belligerents may agree upon. We have nothing material of any kind to ask for ourselves and are quite aware that we are in no sense or degree parties to the present quarrel. Our interests are only in peace and its future guarantees.

"Second—A universal association of the nations to maintain the inviolate security of the highways of the sea for the common and unhindered use of all the nations of the world and to prevent war any way begun—either contrary to treaty covenants, or without warning—and full submission of the causes to the opinion of the world. A virtual guarantee of territorial integrity and political independence."

As to Smaller States.

In the same speech the president said the American people believed fundamentally that every people have a right to choose the sovereignty under which they shall live and that the small states of the world have a right to enjoy the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon.

Secretary Lansing early today held his first personal conference with President Wilson since the peace proposals of the central powers were made public. It was said the formal notes from Germany and Austria might go forward before night and necessarily. In view of the probability that the president would take no independent action until after Lloyd-George has spoken in the house of commons, they probably will be accompanied only by formal notes of transmittal.

LLOYD-GEORGE BETTER.

One of the greatest pleasures of childhood is afforded by a mysterious package Do you not remember how large a part it, or one of your own child life? Will you ever forget the pleasure you experienced when father returned from business trips and let you children rummage in his grip for the presents he had brought And the fun of undoing the packages to see what was in them Let the memory help you be an artist in filling the Christmas stockings now for your own wee ones

Gifts Worth While

A little more retrospection as to what afforded you greatest pleasure when you were a child will help you select toys that will give the greatest amount of happiness for the children of each generation are like those of the previous one You may object that when you were a child they did not have such toys as can be found now in even the bazars True there were not such worlds of mechanical contrivances each of which does but one thing, nor the realistic reproductions of the household utensils and furnishings that so delight the hearts of small women But if you inquire at the large department stores you will learn that the mechanical toys are not as lasting in their attraction to children as you may have supposed The young generation wants to make things go and not have the things go off of their own accord

So it is that a tool chest will afford more lasting pleasure for a boy of a mechanical trend of mind than a most expensive train of cars that runs all over the house without more to do on his part than turning on a switch The little girl who loves to put bits of cloth about her doll's shoulders will go into ecstacies over a shoe box or a doll's trunk full of pieces of cloth bits of lace and ribbon But her happiness will be quite complete if you tuck down in the bottom of that receptacle a set of paper patterns such as you buy for yourself for simple garments that will fit the doll

A pair of scissors with blunt ends a tiny thimble and a paper of needles and another of pins will greatly add to her pleasure for months to come if you cannot afford a regular sewing box like mother's. And the best of such a gift is that it develops ability along a line that will be of lasting benefit to her

The child's attitude toward useful gifts is always a hard one for parents of moderate means to face unless they have taught the young generation not to measure its pleasure at Christmas by the quantity of presents it receives If such gifts must be made especial care should be taken in the selection of the articles themselves that the child may really enjoy the garments A purse with a small sum of spending money to be discovered in the trouser's pocket or a longed for little trinket wrapped with the new dress will often go a long way toward making such presents almost as welcomed as the toys But in every case where such presents must be made in the name of good old Santa Claus take care to give a toy that is "Just what I wanted"

e Christmas That Never Will Be.

just for a moment, when Christmas has come, down little girl, little boy, silence the trumpet and muffle the drum get every doll, every toy—think, in the stillness that fills all the room, somewhere far over the sea,
ents that are dumb in the sense of their gloom,
Christmas that never will be.

just for a moment, you grown-ups, suppose return from the gladness at home
re candle shades give things the color of rose,
d then let your quick fancy roam
omes that were once, and to hearts that are bare, children who know naught of glee—
, just for a moment, in thought you will share
e Christmas that never will be.

just for a moment, suppose you and I ree on this deed we will do, think of the children who wonder and sigh,
Christmases that they once knew;
send them a prayer, we'll send them a thought, hope that we never may see days dipped from hell that of war- e have wrought

CREW OF BEACHED SUBMARINE SAVED

Men of H-3 Are Removed and There Is Possibility of Saving Stranded Diving Craft.

Eureka Cal., Dec 15 The submarine H-3, in which 25 enlisted men and two officers of the United States navy were imprisoned for hours yesterday while she pounded disabled, in a heavy surf on the beach near the Eureka harbor entrance was still intact as to hull early today, as far as could be seen from shore

The sea was smoother during the night and hope was expressed that, with the aid of the coast guard cutter McCulloch which left San Francisco last night and should arrive today, the stranded diver would be hauled back into deep water

The crew of the H-3 spent the night on the United States ship Cheyenne, the mother ship of the H flotilla, in Eureka harbor, while the H-1 and the H-2, which were accompanying the H-3 to San Diego from Puget sound, continued unconvoyed to San Francisco.

PREMIER BRATTIANO OF RUMANIA HAS RESIGNED

London Dec. 15 -The resignation of Premier Brattiano, of Rumania is reported by the Budapest newspaper Avillag, as quoted in an Exchange Telegraph company dispatch from Copenhagen

A recent dispatch from Jassy, the provisional capital of Rumania, said all the members of the Rumanian cabinet had resigned with the exception of the premier

URGES ALL TO SAVE PAPER

Secretary Redfield of the department of commerce, watched a paper saving wrapping contest between department store girls at a theater at Washington on November 29, and made a speech, counseling nation wide thrift that would make the country independent of foreign paper manufacturers He said more than a third of the 20,000 tons of paper produced daily in the United States was wasted

"If this waste were eliminated by campaigns of thrift education in each city," the secretary added, "the country would not be facing so serious a shortage of white paper and such high prices

Housewives should be taught to save their newspapers and these should be collected diligently Customers should not insist on such thorough wrapping of packages, and the wrappings should not be burned, but saved for paper collectors"

JOHNSON HAS EYE ON WILSON'S JOB

California Senator-Elect Said to Be Ambitious to Land the Presidential Nomination.

Washington, Dec 16 They are going to keep an eye on Gov Hiram W Johnson of California, when he comes to the Senate

"They" in this instance means all the different political elements in congress and in official and political circles in Washington, to say nothing of a lot of folks elsewhere

This is not because Governor Johnson is so much more interesting as a senator than as a governor, but because he has begun to loom up as a presidential possibility

The word is borne in from California that Governor Johnson, in addition to having a lot of admirers who are talking about him for the White House, has presidential aspirations At least, it is safe to say, from what the men who are close to him give out, that he takes kindly to the mention of his name for the republican presidential nomination in 1920

Senator Johnson will be judged in the Senate by what he does and not by what he has done or is alleged to have done as Governor Johnson If he measures up in the Senate, where he will be pitted against men of real capacity, he will have accomplished a good deal in the direction of getting to the goal of his ambition.

FRENCH MAKE ATTACKS.

RUSSO-RUMANIAN STAND IS FUTILE

Germans Break New Buzeu Line —If Advance Continues Bessarabia and Galicia Are Menaced.

Possible serious consequences not only for the Rumanians, but for the Russians are implied in today's announcement from Berlin of the capture of the Rumanian town of Buzeu. Military writers have largely assumed it to be the Russo-Rumanian intention to make a defensive stand along the line of the Buzeu river running in a general easterly direction, not far from the southern border of Moldavia, Rumania's northern province.

If the taking of Buzeu, as appears, breaks this important defensive line, the whole Russo-Rumanian line along the western Moldavian mountains seems endangered by flanking.

Stress has been laid by military commentators on the importance of this line to the Russians as it has been pointed to as one necessary to be held if the Russian front in the southern Carpathians and even in Galicia was to be preserved Moreover it has been indicated the falling back of the Russian force northward in Moldavia beyond the mouth of the Danube at Galata would open Bessarabia to possible invasion by the Teutonic armies.

BURNING VILLAGES.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Dec 16 —The Russians are continuing their retreat in Rumania, burning villages as they go, today's war office announcement says. The Rumanian town of Buzeu has been captured by the invaders.

In the last two days, 4,000 more prisoners have been taken. Additional Bulgarian forces have crossed the Danube near Futesti, across the river from Tchernavoda.

DUTCH ARE PREPARED FOR ANY EMERGENCY

The Leaders Still Fear Being Dragged Into War and Will Stay Armed.

London, Dec 16.—Premier Cort Van Der Linden, addressing the lower house of the Dutch parliament yesterday, said that the Dutch government still believes there is danger of Holland being dragged into the war, according to a dispatch to Reuter's from The Hague. The premier was speaking on the budget and said that the country's munitions supply had considerably increased and was daily increasing and that, in view of the international situation, it was unavoidable that sufficient military forces be kept at the immediate disposal of the government.

PEACE TERMS TO BE GIVEN DUE HEARING

British Press Urges That the Allies Listen to Germany's Offer Before Turning It Down.

WANT FUTURE SECURITY

Remarks of Washington Embassy and Reiteration By Bonar Law of Asquith Statement Prophetic.

Washington, Dec. 16.—The outlook for peace in Europe is regarded more favorably today than at any time since Germany's proposal was made three days ago It is not believed here that Great Britain and her allies will not reject Germany's offer without first hearing what she has to propose

The statement issued here by the German embassy that Germany is willing to discuss universal limitation of armament is regarded as prophetic in view of the statement in parliament by A. Bonar Law that the allies "require adequate security for the future" Should Germany further indicate willingness to take up that phase of the question, it would be difficult indeed for the allies not to consent to pourparlours to discuss the project

London, Dec 15 Commenting on the brief statement made yesterday in the house of commons by Andrew Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer regarding Germany's peace offer, the Manchester Guardian says

"Two things appear to emerge from this brief and dignified statement — first, that the government will not refuse to consider on their merits any proposals that may be made to them. secondly, they will not allow the general character of the terms on which alone they will consent to conclude peace, to remain for a moment in doubt. That is as it should be."

The newspaper deplores the attitude of the irresponsible part of the press in flouting proposals which are not yet made.

"Let us be as resolute as the case demands in the terms upon which we deem it necessary to insist, but let it never be said that we refused in mere insolence or levity to listen to the very name of peace."

What Allies Want.

"The allies require that there shall be adequate reparation for the past and adequate security for the future. That is still the policy and still the determination of his majesty's government."

This was the declaration of Andrew Bonar Law, repeating the words of Mr. Asquith three months ago, when he made his debut as the leader of the new government in the house of commons.

It was only a brief and passing allusion to the German peace proposal, but the ringing announcement that it was still the policy and determination of the government, struck the keynote of the new government's attitude and aroused a prolonged demonstration of approval.

The sessions of both the lords and commons were attended with unusual interest, as being the first bow of the new government through the absence of Premier Lloyd-George through continued illness left the initial scene of the new regime like Hamlet without the Dane. Great crowds besieged Westminister for admission and both chambers showed the galleries filled with eager spectators and the floors animated with newly formed political groups.

New Parties Formed.

The house of commons was the scene of chief interest as here five ministers of the late government—Reginald McKenna, Walter Runciman, Herbert Samuel, Lewis Harcourt and H J Tennant ranged themselves on the front bench of the opposition while Andrew Bonar Law flanked by the ministers of the new administration occupied the bench just vacated by the Asquith ministers across the aisle

Mr Asquith like Mr. Lloyd-George was absent through sickness, but even with the chief figures absent it was a striking scene of the old and the new regimes facing each other at the crucial moment of the issues over war and peace.

Mr. Bonar Law's reference to the German proposal came as he closed He prefaced it with the statement that the proposal had not yet reached his majesty's government and that it was obvious that no members of the government could make a statement and that in his view it were better that very little should be said in the house of commons. Then came his renewal of Mr Asquith's declaration for adequate reparation and security as still the policy of the government which was the one thing he felt necessary to refer to at this stage

Pass War Credit.

The new war credit for £400,000,000 sterling, introduced in the house of commons yesterday by Andrew Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer, passed through all its stages in the lower house this afternoon.

POPE WILL ACT SOON.

London, Dec. 15 —A Zurich dispatch to the Tageblatt, of Berlin, as forwarded from Copenhagen, by the Exchange Telegraph company, says that in response to the peace note of the central powers to the vatican, the pope in a few days will issue a Christmas proclamation to all the belligerents CALLS IMPORTANT MEETING.

Copenhagen, (via London), Dec 15 —The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger says it learns that Major Ernest Bassermann, of the national liberals, in the reichstag has proposed a meeting of the reichstag finance committee in order to discuss the foreign political situation. The utmost importance is attached to the proposed meeting which is to be secret, the newspaper adds.

WILL AMERICA REDEEM MEXICO?

Now that the election is over and Mr Wilson has been entrusted with the reins of government for another four years there is one piece of work that will forcibly demand his attention, and that is the pacification of Mexico.

We are well aware that the mexican problem presents great difficulties, view it from whatever angle we may. But they are difficulties that may and can be overcome, and as time goes on it becomes more and more apparent that it is up to the United States to overcome them.

The truth of the whole matter is that Mexico is suffering from the same misrule from which we freed Cuba the decadent Spanish rule.

Mexico is a republic only in name. Not the first principle of popular rule has ever prevailed in that country. The forces that have always controlled her destiny have been those bequeathed by Spain. With misrule and oppression on the one hand, and sullen hatred and resentment on the other it is small wonder that she has been in a perpetual state of unrest and turbulence.

President Diaz was the only ruler in her history who ever maintained a semblance of order, and he did so solely by the use of the mailed hand. Since his day poor Mexico has been naught but anarchy. Anarchy prevails there today—anarchy and wholesale brigandage.

Argue as we may against the idea of of intervention, the fact is daily becoming more apparent that it is the only solution That enlightened America should sit idly by and make no effort to remedy the intolerable state of affairs prevailing there, is inconceivable Mexico is a blot on the Western civilization, and only Western civilization can erase that blot.

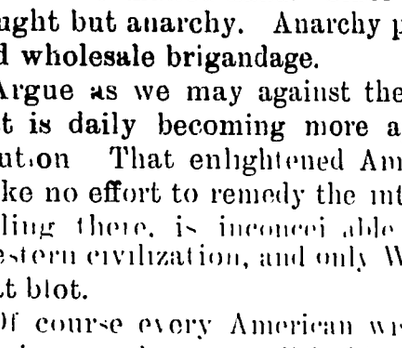
Of course every American wishes that the redemption of Mexico may be accomplished by peaceable means if possible But the progress being made in that direction appears to the average mind as negligible The matter seems no nearer a solution today than it did fifty years ago.

From the days of President Buchanan until today, every president has had the same difficulties to contend with there Each has had his vexing "Mexican problem," and it is remarkable how similar have been the circumstances that each has had to face.

Not only the present generation, but the unborn generation of the future of that unhappy land demand of us that we confer upon them some of the blessings that our forebears bequeathed to us.

Twenty years ago Cuba was in as pitiable condition as Mexico is today We have remade and rehabilitated her, and today she is enjoying that peace and prosperity which her natural advantages merit.

We can do the same for unhappy Mexico. We should do the same for her.



Here's Where a Lot of Hog Trouble Starts

No less an authority than Dr McIntosh, Veterinary Surgeon and for years professor of Veterinary Science in the University of Illinois, and a practical hograiser besides, says:

"The pig, like other animals, suffers at times from derangement of the stomach. Because of the kind of feed and the way in which they are fed, hogs are often affected with indigestion which causes ulceration of the stomach, diarrhea, vomiting, lung and skin diseases, loss of appetite, craving for things they usually will not eat, taking a few mouthfuls of feed and then leaving the trough, placing nose against the ground, squealing, staggering, and in some cases, in small pigs, fits."

Treatment—Give a mild physic, feed lightly, and give ground Anise, gihger, sulphate of Iron, etc. The best method, also the least expensive, is to seed Standard Hog Regulator, as it containes all these things.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. CHAPTER XII (Continued).

The carriage rattled on, bumpety-bupm, over rough places, around corners, tilting now and then sideways, and Celia half frightened, was forced to cling to her protector to keep from being thrown on the floor of the cab.

"Oh, are we running away?" she breathed awesomely into his ear

"I think not,—dear," he answered back the last word inaudible "The driver thinks we are in a hurry but he has no need to go at this furious pace I will tell him"

He leaned forward and tapped on the glass but the driver paid no attention whatever save perhaps to drive faster Could it be that he had lost control of his horse and could not stop or hadn't he heard" Gordon tried again, and accompanied the knocking this time with a shout, but all to no purpose The cab rattled steadily on Gordon discovered now that there were two men on the box instead of one and a sudden premonition sent a thrill of alarm through him What if after all the presence of that detective had been a warning and he unheeding had walked into a trap" What a fool he had been to get into a carriage where he was at the mercy of the driver He ought to have stayed in open places where kidnaping would be impossible. Now that he had thought of it he felt convinced that this was just what the enemy would try to do,—kidnap him The more fruitless he found his efforts to make the driver hear him the more he felt convinced that something was wrong He tried to open the door next him and found it stuck. He put all his strength forth to turn the catch but it held fast Then a cold sweat stood out upon him and horror filled his mind His commission with its large significance to the country was in imminent jeopardy. His own life was in all probability hanging in the balance, but most of all he felt the awful peril of the sweet girl by his side What terrible experiences might be hers within the next hour if his brain and right arm could not protect her Instinctively his hand went to the pocket where he had kept his revolver ready since even he had left Washington Danger should not find him utterly unprepared

He realized, too, that it was entirely possible that his alarms were unfounded, that the driver was really taking the way to the East Liberty station, that the door merely stuck, and he was needlessly anxious He must keep a steady head and not let his companion see that he was nervous The first thing was to find out if possible where they really were, but that was a difficult task The street over which they rattled was utterly dark with the gloom of a smoky city added to the night There were no street lights except at wide intervals, and the buildings appeared to be blank walls of darkness, probably great warehouses The way was narrow and entirely unknown Gordon could not tell if he had ever been there before He was sure from his knowledge of the streets that they had gone north from the depot to East Liberty and the darkness and loneliness of the region through which they were passing filled him again with a vague alarm It occurred to him that he might be able to get the window sash down and speak to the driver, and he struggled with the one on his own side for a while with little result, for it seemed to have been plugged up with wads of paper all around This aroused his anxiety It began to look as if there was intention in sealing up that carriage He felt over and felt around the sash of the opposite door and found the paper wads there also There certainly was intention Not to alarm Celia he straightened back and went to work again at his own window sash cautiously pulling out the paper until at last he could let down the glass

A rush of dank air rewarded his efforts and the girl drew a breath of relief Gordon never knew how near she had been to fainting at that moment She was sitting perfectly quiet in her corner watching him, her fears kept to herself, though her heart was beating wildly She was convinced that the horse was running away

Gordon laid his hand out of the window but immediately he caught the gleam of a revolver in a hand that hung at the side of the driver's box, pointed downward straight toward his face as if with intention to be ready in case of need The owner of the hand was not looking toward him, but was talking in muffled tones to the driver They evidently had not heard the window let down but were ready for the first sign of an attempt on the part of their victims to escape

Quietly Gordon drew in his head speculating rapidly on the possibility of wrenching that revolver out of its owner's hand He could do it from where he sat, but would it be wise? They were probably locked in a trap, and the driver was very likely armed also What chance would he have to save Celia if he brought on a desperate fight at this point" If he were alone he might knock that revolver out of the man's hand and spring from the window taking his chance of getting away but now he had Celia to think of and the case was different Not for a universe of governments could he leave a woman in such desperate straits She must be considered first even ahead of the message This was life and death

He wondered at his own coolness as he sat back in the carriage and quietly lifted the glass frame back into place Then he laid a steady hand on Celia's again and stooping close whispered into her ear

"I am afraid there's something wrong with our driver Can you be a little brave dear" He did not know he had used the last word this time but it thrilled into the girl's heart with a sudden accession of trust

"Oh yes, she breathed close to his face 'You don't think he has been drinking, do you'"

"Well, perhaps,' said Gordon relieved at the explanation "But keep calm I think we can get out of this all right Suppose you change seats with me and let me try if that door will open easily We might want to get out in a hurry In case he slows up somewhere pretty soon"

Celia quietly and swiftly slipped into Gordon's seat and he applied himself with all his strength and ingenuity gently manipulating the latch and pressing his shoulder against the door, until at last to his joy it gave way reluctantly and he found that it would swing open

He had worked carefully, else the sudden giving of the latch would have thrown him out of the carriage and given instant alarm to his driver He was so thoroughly convinced by this time that he was being kidnaped, perhaps to be murdered, that every sense was on the alert. It was his characteristic to be exceedingly cool during a crisis It was the quality that the keen eyed chief had valued most in him and the final reason why he had been selected for this difficult task in place of an older and more experienced man who at times lost his head

The door to the outside world being open Gordon cautiously took a survey of the enemy from that side There was no gleaming weapon here The man sat grimly enough, laying on the whip and muttering curses to his bony horse, who galloped recklessly on as if partaking of the desperate desires of his master In the distance Gordon could hear the rumbling of an on coming train. The street was still dark and scarcely a vehicle or person to be seen There seemed no help at hand, and no opportunity to get out, for they were still rushing at a tremendous pace An attempt to jump now would very likely result in broken limbs which would only leave them in a worse plight than they were. He slipped back to his own seat and put Celia next to the free door again She must be where she could get out first if the opportunity presented itself Also, he must manage to throw out the suit cases if possible on account of the letters and valuables they contained.

Instinctively his hand sought Celia's in the darkness again, and hers nestled into it in a frightened way as if his strength gave her comfort

Then, before they could speak or realize, there came the rushing sound of a train almost upon them and the cab came to a halt with a jerk, the driver pulling the horse back on his haunches to stop him The shock almost threw Celia to the floor but Gordon's arm about her steadied her, and instantly he was on the alert

CHAPTER XIII.

Glancing through the window he saw that they were in front of a railroad track upon which a long freight train was rushing madly along at a giddy pace for a mere freight The driver had evidently hoped to pass this point before the train got there, but had failed. The train had an exultant sound as if it knew it had outwitted the driver.

On one side of the street were high buildings and on the other a great lumber yard, between which and their carriage there stood a team of horses hitched to a covered wagon, from the back of which some boards protruded, and this on the side next to Celia where the door would open' Gordon's heart leaped up with hope and wonder over the miracle of their opportunity. The best thing about their situation was that their driver had stopped just a little back of the covered wagon, so that their door would open to the street directly behind the covered wagon It made it possible for the carriage door to swing wide and for them to slip across behind the wagon without getting too near the driver Nothing could have been better arranged for their escape and the clatter of the empty freight cars drowned all sounds

Without delay Gordon softly unlatched the door and swung it open, whispering to Celia

"Go' Quick' Over there by the fence in the shadow Don't look around nor stop' Quick' I'll come!"

Trembling in every limb, yet with brave starry eyes, Celia slipped like a wraith from the carriage, stole behind the boards and melted into the shadow of the great fence of the lumber yard, her purple plumes mere depths of shadows against the smoky planks. Gordon, grasping the suit cases moved instantly after her deftly and silently closing the carriage door and dropping into the shadows behind the big wagon scarcely able to believe as yet that they had really escaped

Ten feet back along the sidewalk was a gateway, the posts being tall and thick The gate itself was closed, but it hung a few inches inside the line of the fence, and into this depression the two stepped softly and stood, flattening themselves back against the gate as closely as possible, scarcely daring to breathe, while the long freight clattered and rambled its way by like a lot of jolly washerwomen running and laughing in a line and spatting their tired, noisy feet as they went then the vehicles impatiently took up their onward course. Gordon saw the driver look down at the window below him and glance back hastily over his shoulder, and the man on the other side of the box looked down on his side. The glitter of something in his hand shone for an instant in the glare of the signal light over the track Then the horse lurched forward and the cab began its crazy gait over the track and up the cobbled street. They had started onward without getting down to look in the carriage and see if all were safe with their prisoners, and they had not even looked to see if they had escaped. They evidently trusted in the means they had used to lock the carriage doors, and had heard no sounds of their escaping It was incredible, but it was true. Gordon drew a long breath of relief and relaxed from his strained position The next thing was to get out of that neighborhood as swiftly as possible before those men had time to discover that their birds had flown. They would of course know at once where their departure had taken place and come back swiftly to search for them, with perhaps more men to help; and a second time escape would be impossible.

Gordon snatched up the suit cases with one hand, and with the other drew Celia's arm within his.

"Now, we must hurry with all our might," he said softly. "Are you all right?"

"Yes." Her breath was coming in a sob, but her eyes were shining bravely.

"Poor child!" his voice was very tender. "Were you much frightened?"

"A little," she answered more bravely now.

"I shall have hard work to forgive myself for all this," he said tenderly. "But we mustn't talk. We have to get out of this quickly or they may come back after us. Lean on me and walk as fast as you can."

Celia bent her efforts to take long springing strides, and together they fairly skimmed the pavements, turning first this corner, then that, in the general direction from which Gordon thought they had come, until at last, three blocks away they caught the welcome whirr of a trolley, and breathless, flew onward, just catching a car. They cared not where it went so that they were safe in a bright light with other people. No diamonds on any gentleman's neck scarf ever shone to Celia's eyes with so friendly a welcome as the dull brass buttons on that trolley conductor's coat as he rang up their fares and answered Gordon's questions about how to get to East Liberty station; and their pleasant homely gleam almost were her undoing, for now that they were safe at last the tears would come to her eyes.

Gordon watched her lovingly, tenderly, glad that she did not know how terrible had been her danger His heart was still beating wildly with the thought of their marvelous escape, and his own present responsibility. He must run no further risks They would keep to crowded trolleys, and trust to hiding in the open The main thing was to get out of the city on the first train they could manage to board

When they reached East Liberty station a long train was just coming in all sleepers, and they could hear the echo of a stentorian voice

"Special for Harrisburg, Baltimore and Washington' All aboard'" and up at the further end of the platform Gordon saw the lank form of the detective whom he had tried to avoid an hour before at the other station

Without taking time for thought he hurried Celia forward and they sprang breathlessly aboard Not until they were fairly in the car and the wheels moving under them did it occur to him that his companion had nothing to eat since about 12 o'clock She must be famished and in a fair way to be ill again What a fool he was not to have thought' They could have stopped in some obscure restaurant along the way as well as not and taken a later train and yet it was safer to get away at once Without doubt there were watchers at East Liberty too, and he was lucky to have got on the train without a challenge He was sure that detective's face lighted strangely as he looked his way Perhaps there was a buffet attached to the train At least he would investigate. If there wasn't they must get off at the next stop – there must be another stop surely somewhere near the city he could not remember, but there surely must be

They had to wait some time to get the attention of the conductor He was having much trouble with some disgruntled passengers who each claimed to have the same berth Gordon finally got his ear and showing his stateroom tickets inquired if they could be used on this train

"No," growled the worried conductor "You're on the wrong train This is a special, and every berth in the train is taken now but one upper'

"Then, we'll have to get off at the next stop, I suppose and take the other train," said Gordon dismally

"There isn't any other stop till somewhere in the middle of the night I tell you this is a special, and we're scheduled to go straight through East Liberty's the last stop'

"Then what shall we do" asked Gordon inanely

"I'm sure I don't know" snapped the conductor. "I have enough to do without mending other people's mistakes Stay aboard, I suppose, unless you want to jump off and commit suicide."

"But I have a lady with me who isn't at all well," said Gordon, with dignity

"So much the worse for the lady, replied the conductor inhumanly There's one upper berth, I told you

"An upper berth wouldn't do for her," said Gordon decidedly "She isn't well, I tell you

"Suit yourself," snapped the harassed official "I reckon it's better than nothing You may not have it long I'm likely to be asked for it the next half minute

"Is that so" And is there absolutely nothing else"

Young man, I can't waste words on you I haven't time Take it or let it alone It's all one to me There's some standing room left in the day coach, perhaps"

"I'll take it," said Gordon meekly, wishing he could go back and undo the last half-hour How in the world was he to go and tell Celia that he could provide her nothing better than an upper berth"

She was sitting with her back to him, her face resting wearily on her hand against the window Two men with largely checked suits, big seal rings, and diamond scarf pins sat in the opposite seat He knew it was most unpleasant for her A nondescript woman with a very large hat and thick powder on her face shared Celia's seat He reflected that 'specials" did not always bear a select company

"Is there nothing you can do" he pleaded with the conductor, as he took the bit of pasteboard entitling him to the last vacant berth "Don't you suppose you could get some man to change and give her a lower berth" It'll be very hard for her She isn't used to upper berths'

His eyes rested wistfully on the bowed head Celia had taken off her plumed hat, and the fitful light of the car played with the gold of her hair The conductor's grim eye softened as he looked

"That the lady" I'll see what I can do," he said briefly, and stumped off to the next car The miracle of her presence had worked its change upon him

Gordon went over to Celia and told her in a low tone that he hoped to have arrangements made for her soon, so that she could be comfortable She must be fearfully tired with the excitement and fright and hurry He added that he had made a great blunder in getting on this train and now there was no chance to get off for several hours, perhaps, and probably no supper to be had

"Oh, it doesn't matter in the least said Celia wearily I'm not at all hungry" She almost smiled when she said it He knew that what she wanted was to have her mind relieved about the letters But she really saw that there was no opportunity now

She even seemed sorry at his troubled look and tried to smile again through the settled sadness in her eyes. He could see she was very weary and he felt like a great brute in care of a child, and mentally berated himself for his own thoughtlessness.

Gordon started off to search for something to eat for her, and was more successful than he had dared hope The newsboy had two chicken sandwiches left, and these, with the addition of a fine orange, a box of chocolates, and a glass of ice water, he presently brought to her, and was rewarded by a smile this time, almost as warm and intimate as those she had given him during their beautiful day

But he could not sit beside her, for the places were all taken, and he could not stand in the aisle and talk, for the porter was constantly running back and forth making up the berths. There seemed to be a congested state of things in the whole train, every seat being full and men standing in the aisles He noticed now that they all wore badges of some fraternal order It was doubtless a delegation to some great convention, upon which they had intruded They were a good-natured, noisy, happy crowd, but not anywhere among them was to be found a quiet spot where he and Celia could go on with their suddenly interrupted conversation. Presently the conductor came to him and said he had found a gentleman who would give the lady his lower berth and take her upper one. It was already made up, and the lady might take possession at once.

Gordon made the exchange of tickets, and immediately escorted Celia to it He found her most glad to go for she was now unutterably weary, and was longing to get away from the light and noise about her

He led the way with the suit cases, hoping that in the other car there would be some spot where they could talk for a few minutes. But he was disappointe. It was even fuller than in the first car. He arranged everything for her comfort as far as possible, disposed of her hat and fixed her suitcase so that she could open it, but even while he was doing it there were people crowding by, and no private conversation could be had He stepped back when all was arranged and held the curtain aside that she might sit on the edge of her berth. Then stooping over he whispered;

"Try to trust me until morning. I'll explain it all to you then, so that you will understand how I have had nothing to do with these letters. Forget it, and try to rest. Will you'"

His tone was wistful He had never wanted to do anything so much in all his life as to stoop and kiss those sweet lips and the lovely eyes that looked up at him out of the dusky shadows of the berth, filled with fear and longing They looked more than ever like the blue tinted flowers that drooped from her gown wearily But he held himself with a firm hand She was not his to kiss When she knew how he had deceived her, she would probably never give him the right to kiss her

"I will try," she murmured in answer to his question, and then added "But where will you be" Is your berth near by'"

"Not far away – that is, I had to take a place in another car, they are so crowded"

"Oh'" she said a little anxiously. "Are you sure you have a good comfortable place'

"Oh, yes, I shall be all right," he answered joyously It was so wonderful to have her care whether he was comfortable or not

The porter was making up the opposite berth, and there was no room to stand longer, so he bade her good night, she putting out her hand for a farewell For an instant he held it close, with gentle pressure, as if to reassure her, then he went away to the day-coach, and settled down into a hard corner at the very back of the car, drawing his travelling cap over his eyes, and letting his heart beat out wild joy over that little touch of her dear hand Wave after wave of sweetness went over him, thrilling his very soul with a joy he had never known before

And this was love' And what kind of a wretch was he, presuming to love like this a woman who was the promised bride of another man' Ah, but such a man' A villain' A brute, who had used his power over her to make her suffer tortures' Had a man like that a right to claim her" His whole being answered no."

Then the memory of the look in her eyes, the turn of her head, the soft touch of her fingers as they lay for that instant in his, the inflection of her voice, would send that wave of sweetness over his senses, his heart would thrill anew, and he would forget the wretch who stood between him and this lovely girl whom he knew now he loved as he had never dreamed a man could love.

Gradually his mind steadied itself under the sweet intoxication, and he began to wonder just what he should say to her in the morning. It was a good thing he had not had further opportunity to talk with her that night, for he could not have told her everything and now if all went well they would be in Washington in the morning and he might make some excuse till after he had delivered his message Then he would be free to tell the whole story, and lay his case before her for decision His heart throbbed with ecstasy as he thought of the possibility of her forgiving him, and yet it seemed most unlikely Sometimes he would let his wild longings sway for just an instant what joy it would be if she could be induced to let the marriage stand But he told himself at the same time that that could never be. It was very likely that there was someone else in New York to whom her heart would turn if she were free from the scoundrel who had threatened her into a compulsory marriage. He would promise to help her, protect her, defend her from the man who was evidently using blackmail to get her into his power for some purpose most likely for the sake of having control of her property At least it would be some comfort to be able to help her out of her trouble. And yet, would she ever trust a man who had even unwittingly allowed her to be bound by the sacred tie of marriage to an utter stranger"

And thus, amid hope and fear, the night whirled itself away Forward in the sleeper the girl lay wide awake for a long time In the middle of the night a thought suddenly evolved itself out of the blackness of her curtained couch She sat upright alertly and stared into the darkness, as if it were a thing that she could catch and handle and examine The thought was born out of dreamy vision of the crisp brown waves almost curls if they had not been so short and thick, that covered the head of the man who had lain sleeping outside her curtains in the early morning It came to her with sudden force that not so had been the hair of the boy George Hayne, who used to trouble her girlish days. His was thin and black and oily, collecting naturally into little isolated strings with the least warmth, and giving him the appearance of a kitten who had been out in the rain One lock, now well she remembered that lock!—one lock on the very crown of his head had always refused to lie down, no matter how much persuasion was brought to bear upon it It had been the one point on which the self satisfied George had been pregnable, his hair, that scalp lock that would always arise stiffly, oilily, from the top of his head. The hair she had looked at admiringly that morning in the dawning crimson of the rising sun had not been that way It had curved clingingly to the shape of the fine head as if it loved to go that way It was beautiful and fine and burnished with a sense of life and vigor in its every wave. Could hair change in 10 years? Could it grow brown where it had been black? Could it become glossy instead of dull and oily' Could it take on the signs of natural wave where it had been as straight as a die? Could it grow like fur where it had been so thin?

TO SWEETEN THE GIFT.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

A suitable message to send with a Christmas present often worries the sender. The timeworn phrases, "Wishing you a Merry Christmas from," etc., lack individuality and effectiveness. Yet a clever quotation enhances a gift. An appropriate card to send with books might contain this from Stevenson:

This little paper traveler goes forth to your door charged with tender greetings. Pray you, take him in. He comes from a house where you are well beloved.

Or one may fancy these lines from Tennyson.

I thought to myself I would offer this book to you This and my love together.

Those who make their own gifts could use the following:

Alone I did it.—Shakespeare.

That sanguine inexperience loves to make.—Cowper

With a gift to a husband and wife might go:

The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received, and is enough for both.—Shakespeare.

With jewelry

Dumb jewels often in their silent kind
More quick than words do move a woman's mind. —Shakespeare.

This ring, O my beloved fair,
For me on your slim finger wear,
As a perpetual caress,
To tell you of my tenderness.
—Adapted, from Stevenson.

With any kind of gift:

Consider not the gift of the lover, but the lover of the gift.—Thomas a Kempis.

Wear this for me—one out of suits with fortune,
That could give more, but that her hand lacks means. —Shakespeare.

I send with deep regards of heart and head,
Sweet maid, for friendship formed, this gift to thee, —Shakespeare.
Good wishes go with this,
And love, packed in a kiss
—Baldwin.

I send thee here a remembrance of all,
That my heart to thy heart doth recall.
—Frere.

Two Weeks Christmas.

From the World Outlook.

Filipino children do not think that they are over supplied with Christmases, although they have two, December 25 and January 6, the latter day having been retained from the old Spanish calendar when the United States took over the islands. Practically, Christmas now lasts through from one date to the other, 14 days. If to these days the Filipino children could somehow add the St. Nicholas day of early December, which the Dutch children celebrate, they certainly would be well fixed. However, two weeks of Christmas is as much as any well mannered child can reasonably ask for, and certainly as much as parents can stand.

Filipino children usually have no stockings to hang up, but they place their shoes on the window sill for the same purpose. On Christmas eve a boy and a girl, costumed to represent Joseph and Mary, respectively, go about the streets of each town or village, seeking shelter. Following the touching drama, reminiscent of Joseph and Mary's entrance into Bethlehem, the scenes of the Christmas story are reenacted in all the churches. Every one attends these pageants. Frequently the crippled and ailing come crowding into the churches on their hands and knees. The remainder of the night is given up to feasting.

On Christmas day, small bands of boys and girls, representing the shepherds of Bethlehem, travel as troubadours about the towns, searching for the Christ Child and singing Christmas songs. They are gayly attired in bright colored clothing, bespangled and glittering with ornaments. They sing before the doors of residences and business houses to the accompaniment of tambourines and stringed instruments, and do not hesitate to hold out their hands for a Christmas gift when they shout "Buenas Pascues!" (Merry Christmas.) Their performance is worthy of a gift for it represents weeks of training with the music master before the holidays.

Leave the Lights Burning.

From the Washington Herald.

"When you leave your apartment or house unoccupied at night, always keep the electric lights burning, because the hardened criminal becomes a coward when caught under the electric light."

This is the message Inspector Joseph A. Faurot, chief of detectives of New York's police department, sends to the women of the country.

Continuing the inspector said: "A flat worker seldom, if ever, enters an apartment in which he sees an electric light burning, so it will prove a profitable investment for the housewife to follow this suggestion.

"The rapid development of electricity has proved to be the burglar's nemesis. It holds more terrors for him than the householders' guns. He will take a chance for his liberty by engaging in a struggle in the dark, but he will avoid being discovered in a light flooded room where his features are exposed to view. Through the aid of identification bureaus being seen means almost certain conviction."

Before going on the stage and always after the performance, Mme. Guilbert, the actress, drinks a cup of tea. She is said to drink as high as 10 cups of tea every day.

His Mammy heerd him holler, an' his Daddy heerd him bawl,
An' when they turn't the kivvers down he wuzn't there at all!
An' they seeked him in the rafter-room an' cubbyhole, an' press,
An' seeked him up the chimney-flue an' ever'wheres, I guess;
But all they ever found was this pair of pants an roundabout:—

An' one time a little girl 'ud allus laugh an' grin,
An' make fun of ever'one, an' all her blood-an'-kin;
An' wunst, when they was "company," an' ole folks wuz there,
She mocked 'em an' shocked 'em, an' said she didn't care!
An' thist as she kicked her heels, an' turn't to run an' hide,
They wuz two great big Black Hands a-standin' by her side,
An' they snatched her through the ceilin' 'fore she knowed what she's about!
An' the Gobble-uns 'll git you
Ef you

An' little Orphant Annie says, when the blaze is blue,
An' the lamp-wick sputters, an' the wind goes woo-oo,
An' you hear the crickets quit, an' the moon is gray,
An' the 'lightnin' bugs in dew is squenched away,—
You better mind yer parunts, an' yer teachers fond an' dear,
An' churish them 'at loves you, an' wash the orphant's tear,

The First Christmas

...ke, Chapter II

AND IT CAME TO PASS, in those days that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David which is called Bethlehem; to be taxed with Mary.

And so it was that while they were there the days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger: because there was no room for them in the inn.

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them; and the glory of the Lord shown round about them and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them:

"Fear not! For behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is the Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger."

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying:

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men!"

CANADA AGAIN A PRIZE WINNER

Highest Premiums Awarded at Many Exhibitions.

The Fall fair season is past and a retrospect of them shows that Western Canada is stronger than ever in the matter of exhibits, and has taken more than her usual share of the prize money. From Western Canada to Texas is a long look, from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to the southwestern corner of Texas is several days' journey, but the enterprising farmers from this new country to the northwest were wide awake to the possibilities that waited them at the International Dry Farming Congress held at El Paso, Texas, a few weeks ago, to bring to the attention of those in that far-off corner what the land of Western Canada could do in the production of grains and roots from its soil. And what did these farmers do? The first thing was to carry off the first prize and sweepstakes for wheat. That was a foregone conclusion, for it has now become an established fact that nowhere else in the world is there grown wheat of the high character and market value of Western Canadian wheat. The same may be said of oats, of barley and of rye. But when it came to notice that Western Canada took first prize for alfalfa, it was then that more special attention was given to the products from Western Canada. It showed that in that country there lies the opportunity for supplementing the wonderful native grasses, so full of nutrition that with the tamed varieties, among them being alfalfa, the cattle with no other food were fattened and fitted for the shambles. Western Canada's worth was proved as probably the greatest mixed farming portion of the continent. When the steers from the Western Canadian prairies reach the Chicago stockyards they bring the top price and outweigh those from other places where grass fattening is the process. But it was not only in grains that Western Canada carried off the highest honors at the El Paso exhibition. Potatoes, parsnips, beets, carrots and rutabagas also took the highest honors. In root production this country is becoming favorably known.

The question often arises as to markets. There is always the highest price awaiting the producer, and as soon as the Hudson Bay Railway, now about completed, reaches the Bay, there will be an additional outlet for the product of the farm. The Pacific coast route, via the Panama canal, will give another outlet of which full advantage may be taken. With virgin land selling at from $15 to $20 per acre, and improved farms at reasonable prices and on easy terms, there is no better opportunity for the man with limited means and a desire to secure a home at the least cost in a country where he can soon become wealthy, as thousands of others have done, than in Western Canada. To the man with less means and who is prepared to accept a farm of 160 acres free, the Dominion Government offers him his choice in districts that have land of the highest type, but at present being from ten to twenty miles from a railway.

The Peace River Country, now being opened for settlement and reached by railway affords excellent opportunity to the homesteader. To secure information as to Western Canadian lands write the Canadian Government agent, whose name appears elsewhere in this paper.—Advertisement.

WHISKERS UNDER THE BAN

Prejudice Against Facial Adornment Was Very Strong Some Centuries Ago.

Nowhere was there more prejudice against beards than at the Inns of Court centuries ago. The "Black Books" of Lincoln's inn of the sixteenth century are full of references to offenders who were "fyned double comens durynge such tyme as they shal have any berde." This proving ineffective, a whole batch of bearded barristers was in 1554 "banysshed from ye howse," and shortly afterward a judge's order was obtained for the compulsory shaving of some of the members. The Inner temple benches were not quite so severe, for a fine of 20s was the sole penalty imposed in 1555 for "wearyng beardes of more than three weekes growthe." The war against bearded barristers continued at the Inns of Court until the seventeenth century.

Long after this, however, the prejudice against the unshaved barristers remained. . . . Vice Chancellor Bacon carried his dislike so far that he always refused to listen to bearded or mustached counsel, pretending that he could not hear them. Even now, although there are plenty of bearded barristers and K. C.'s, few have attained eminence. The most brilliant exception was perhaps the late Judah Philip Benjamin, "silver-tongued Benjamin," who despite his mustache and American "goatee" earned the princely income of £35,000 a year.—London Chronicle.

Dumb Animals.

The manager of a great menagerie had induced all the crowd to become patrons except one individual who stood gazing at him with mouth agape.

"Right in this way, sir, if you wish to see some deers talking," shouted the animal king.

"No fear, lad," came the reply. "I was in yesterday and none of 'em said a word."—New York Morning Telegraph.

His Choice.

"Old man, you are too close in money matters. Your friends are beginning to classify you as a tightwad."

"What does it matter? I'd rather be classified as a tightwad than as a good thing."

Who Santa Claus Wuz.

Jes' a little bit o feller—I remember still Ust to almost cry for Christmas like a youngster will Fourth o' July nothin to it—New Year's ain't a smell
Easter Sunday—Circus day—jes' all dead in the shell
Lawsy, though' at night, you know to set around an' hear
The old folks work the story off about the sledge an' deer
An' "Santy" skootin' round the roof, all wrapt in fur an' fuzz—
Long afore I knowed who "Santy Claus' wuz'

Ust to wait' an' set up late a week or two ahead
Couldn't hardly keep awake, ner wouldn't go to bed,
Kittle stewin' on the fire an' mother settin here
Darnin' socks, an rockin' in the skreeky rockin' cheer,
Pap gap', an' wonder where it wuz the money went
An quar'l with his frosted heels, an' spill his liniment,
An' me a-dreamin' sleigh-bells when the clock 'ud whir an buzz.
Long afore I knowed who "Santy Claus" wuz'

Size the fire-place up, an' figger how "Ole Santy" could Manage to come down the chimbly, like they said he would Wish: 'at I could hide an see him—wundered what he'd say
Ef he ketched a feller layin' fer him that away
But I bet on him, an' liked him, same as ef he had Turned to pat me on the back an' say,
"Look here, my lad.
Here's my pack—jes' help yourself, like all good boys does"
Long afore I knowed who "Santy Claus' wuz'

Wisht tha yarn was true about him, as it 'peared to be—
Truth made out o' lies like that un's good enough fer me
Wisht I still wuz so confidin' I could jes' go wild
Over hangin' up my stockin's like the little child
Climbin' in my lap tonight, an' beggin' me to tell
'Bout them reindeers, and "Ole Santy" that she loves so well,
I'm half sorry fer this little girl sweet-heart of his—
Long afore I knowed who "Santy Claus' wuz'

"When a Feller Needs a Friend."

From the Kansas City Star.

You fathers and mothers of boys, did you read in the Star of what Judge Ralph S. Latshaw said about boys who go wrong?

"Four-fifths of the criminals are boys who have just passed the age of 16," he said. And then he told why they went wrong.

"It is because they have not been properly watched, because their fathers and mothers have neglected them, and because they have frequented low pool halls. God pity the father and the mother who do not set an upright example for the boy just on the threshold of manhood. And I'll tell you 'when a feller needs a friend.' He needs one every day and every night, in the home and in his daily life, in the school and everywhere."

This is good, sound doctrine. Many a boy has gone wrong because his father seemed to take no interest in his goings and comings at night. He was allowed to join the gang on the corner and gradually he grew away from parental influence.

Just at the critical age when a boy is growing into manhood he is apt to be attracted by the glamor of the reckless tough, the fellow without reverence, without honor, without ideals, without real manhood. At this time particularly he needs wholesome companionship and guidance. The father who makes it his business to keep interested in his son's affairs can make himself his boy's chum and can direct his growing activities into good business.

A man once was jolted into recognition of the fact that he knew nothing about what his children were thinking or doing. When he came to himself he exclaimed: "In heaven's name, what am I on earth for if I can't give an hour a day to getting acquainted with my children?"

Christmas—A Prayer.

Be born anew, dear Lord, be born again
Into the hunger of the sons of men
Whose famine is too bitter to be fed
By any lower food than sacred bread
We thirst for hope and tasting drink it not
We choke for joy denied a barren lot
We starve for love and, starving, throw the dice
That may, or may not pay love's precious price
Our trembling hands, infirm, have lost the wit
To grasp Thy holy cup. Lord, give us it

Fill it with strength despaired of by the weak
Fill it with brimming rest the weary seek.
Out of the chalice let the lonely drink
Restrain the wild soul crouching on the brink
Of shameful purposes, that no man knows.
Watch, Thou, the desert where the desperate goes.
Into white hearts give purity anew;
And to the false the power to be true
Grant to the mourning all uncomforted,
The conscious coming of their dearest dead
Give to the friendless, shrinking and apart
The happy throbbing of the Christmas heart

Is there a flying thing
Fluttering, with broken wing?
Lord show us where it hides
Lead us where'er abides
Beneath palms sharpest fang,
The most forgotten pang
Within Thy world today
For that, for that, we pray

For the bird shot in the bog
For the tortured, writhing dog,
The patient, laboring beast
That gives us most for least,
For the soul within the dumb,
And for that it may become,
For the smitten by the way,
O listen, Lord, we pray

Be born again, dear Christ! Be born again,
Unto the knowledge of the sons of men
Be born into the gentle heart that brings
Its best, its strongest to the weakest things.
Be born into the finest tenderness
That will not burden, where it can not bless,
Be born in the divinest power to feel,
Be born in the nerve it can not heal
That never hurts the nerve it can not heal
—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

Custom That Should Be Revived.

"Old, very old in England," we read in the Woman's Home Companion, "is the custom of setting lighted candles in the windows on Christmas eve to give holiday greeting to the passerby, but little use has been made of this charming idea in our country. Baltimore, however, has had a city-wide lighting of candles, which was so successful that it is repeated every year.

"Weeks before Christmas, when plans were being made for the community tree, it was suggested that each household set lighted candles in the parlor windows to wish "Merry Christmas" to their fellow townspeople, not even the most enthusiastic supporter of the candle greeting expected to see half the number of windows that were so lighted when Christmas eve came."

Holiday Dinners Too Big.

From the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

A good many jibes are uttered about the meals that follow a holiday feast. The purport of them is that these later meals are composed mostly of the remains which are served up from time to time in various forms less and less palatable. But the fact is quite different—at least for some of us. The fact is that the holiday meal generally is too elaborate and is surrounded by so many anxieties on the part of the hostess that it is not thoroughly enjoyed. There are so many dishes that, if one eats only a little of each, he is surfeited and leaves the table feeling more like an inflated balloon than like a rational human being. It has been a great meal, but there is generally more left than has been eaten, and the waste from the bountifully filled plates and small dishes is enough to feed a hungry family. Everybody has made extraordinary effort—the hostess to please her guests and the result is too often an extraordinary failure, simply because the good things were too numerous.

There is a picture of the first Thanksgiving eve, showing the housewife with a pumpkin in her hands and her husband returning from the hunt with a turkey. Both are happy, and so, too, the boy and the cat, the other figures in the picture. But in these days, the two articles of diet would be only a beginning. In the prodigal present, we have so much that we do not enjoy anything to the full. It is only on the days following a holiday, when the dishes are fewer and we can eat more rationally, that we find the most pleasure in the eating.

"Christ Is Not Come."

No trumpet-blast profaned
The hour in which the Prince of Peace was born.
No bloody streamlet stained
Earth's silver rivers on that sacred morn.
But o'er the peaceful plain,
The war-horse drew the peasant's loaded wain

The soldier had laid by
The sword and stripped the corselet from his breast,
And hung his helm on high—
The sparrow's winter home and summer nest,
And, with the same strong hand
That flung the barbed spear, he tilled the land.

Oh, time for which we yearn;
Oh, Sabbath of the nations long foretold!
Season of peace, return,
Like a late summer when the year grows old,
When the sweet sunny days
Steeped mead and mountain-side in golden haze.

. . . . . .

Christ is not come, while yet
O'er half the earth the threat of battle lowers,
And our own fields are wet,
Beneath the battle cloud, with crimson showers—
The life-blood of the slain,
Poured out where thousands die that one may reign.

Soon, over half the earth,
In every temple crowds shall kneel again
To celebrate His birth
Who brought the message of good will to men,
And bursts of joyous song
Shall shake the roof above the prostrate thong.

Christ is not come, while there
The men of blood whose crimes affront the skies
Kneel down in act of prayer,
Amid the joyous strains, and when they rise,
Go forth, with sword and flame,
To waste the land in His most holy name.

Oh, when the day shall break
O'er realms unlearned in warfare's cruel arts,
And all their millions wake
To peaceful tasks performed with loving hearts,
On such a blessed morn,
Well may the nations say that Christ is born.

—William Cullen Bryant.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world-knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

BURNED OUT

We were sorry to learn yesterday morning that Bro. Anderson of Ringsted has suffered a disastrous loss through fire, which broke out in the printing and postoffice building after the had opened up for business. Just how the fire started is not known positively, but it is believed that it got too hot back of the stove. Mr. Anderson succeeded in saving all his machinery and also most of the other office fixtures The post office valuables and stamped paper were also saved. The dispatch will not be issued this week Practically the entire building burned down.—Fenton Reporter

We are indeed very sorry to learn of Mr. Anderson's misfortune. We sold the Ringsted Dispatch to him 4 years ago January 1st and he has enjoyed a very good business as Ringsted is an exceptionally good newspaper town.

A PECULIAR ACCIDENT

Speaking about peculiar accidents, here is one that has them all cheated, says the Anthon Herald. Milton Lamb, a young farmer west of town had finished milking a heifer and as he released her from the stanchion kicked at her. When he did so she switched her tail, wrapping the bushy part of it adout his ankle with a half hitch. She started out of the barn on a run dragging him behind her. As he went out of the door he grabbed a ring in a post to which he held with a death grip yelling at the top of his voice for the hired man to come to his relief. The cow had him stretched at full length and was trying hard as she could to get loose. When the hired man cut the tail off the animal was pulling so hard that she went end over end. Mr Lamb got out of the ordeal without injury and the chances are he will confine his kicking to bob tailed cows.

Latest Drink is "Near Whiskey"

The latest drink out is "near whiskey." It is said that the stuff has the tang and bitterness and cutting qualities of the ancient forty-rod, squirrel whiskey, but it hasn't any such effect. The old, big-punch that would make a man fight a buzz saw, spend a million dollars a night or climb a telegraph pole is tabooed in Iowa. All a man can do with this new stuff is to feel the tang as it goes down, then rub his stomach, go out and kick his horse in the ribs, give a yelp and start for home at 10 p. m. Once home, he can jaw his wife, pat the dog on the head, stick his shoes in the refrigator, leave the butter on the floor and go to bed. By doing all this he can imagine he has had a few drinks of the "rare ould quill" and has a jag on. Otherwise, near whiskey is a poorer excuse than near beer.—ex.

A number of parcels also go by mail and express from relatives and friends. The address of the boys is Donna, Texas, Troop C, Iowa First Cavalry.—Kanawha Record.

THE SONG THEY SING

A Glenwood, Wisconsin, paper says this is the song New Haven township is singing today:

Seven fatted cattle
Ate dynamite in sticks;
One tried to butt a post,
Then there were but six.

And all New Haven is awaiting in fear and trembling for the gradual completion of the new version of the old nursery rhyme. Seven steers on the farm of Kavanaugh brothers dined on dynamite when they found the sticks in a box. One, stimulated, then charged on a post and met both death and disintegration. The whole neighborhood was shaken. It rained everything from porterhoure to tripe all over the township. Now the remaining six cattle are being handled with gloves.

CELEBRATES ONE HUNDRETH BIRTHDAY

Last Thursday afternoon a host of friends and relatives gathered at the Martin Cosgrove home near Kanawha to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Mrs, Cosgrove's father, Mr. Gilligan.

It was a very happy occasion and one in which but a few people have an opportunity to participate, that of celebrating the 100th birthday of a friend and neighbor.

Mr. Gilligan was active and hearty and enjoyed the occasion immensely, as he greeted his friends in his most cordial good old Irish way.

People from all over the county called to greet him and wish him well. May he live to pass a great many more of the milestones on life's thoroughfare.—Britt Tribune.

BOARD HIRES PRINCIPAL FOR THREE YEAR TERM

We feel certain it will be good news to Kanawha people to learn that we will have Mr. and Mrs. Case with us for several years more.—Kanawha Record.

CHAPTER XIII.—(Continued).

The girl could not solve the problem, but the thought was most startling and brought with it many suggestive possibilities that were most disturbing. Yet gradually out of the darkness she drew a sort of comfort in her dawning enlightenment. Two things she had to go on in her strange premises, he had said he did not write the letters, and his hair was not the same. Who then, was he? Her husband now undoubtedly, but who? And if deeds and hair could change so materially, why not spirits? At least he was not the same as she had feared and dreaded. There was so much comfort.

And at last she lay down and slept.

CHAPTER XIV.

They were late coming into Washington, for the special had been sidetracked in the night for several express trains, and the noisy crowd who had kept one another awake till after midnight made up by sleeping far into the morning.

Three times did Gordon make the journey three cars front to see if his companion of yesterday were awake and needed anything, but each time found the curtains drawn and still, and each time he went slowly back again to his seat in the crowded daycoach.

It was not until the white dome of the capital, and the tall needle of the monument, were painted soft and vision-like against the sky, reminding one of the pictures of the heavenly city in the story of Pilgrim's Progress, and faintly suggesting a new and visionary world, that he sought her again, and found her fully ready, standing in the aisle while the porter put up the berth out of the way. Beneath the great brim of her purple hat, where the soft fronds of her plumes trembled with the motion of the train, she lifted sweet eyes to him, as if she were both glad and frightened to see him. And then that ecstasy shot through him again, as he realized, suddenly what it would be to have her for his life-companion, to feel her looks of gladness were all for him, and have the right to take all fright away from her.

They could only smile at each other for good morning, for everybody was standing up and being brushed, and pushing here and there for suit cases and lost umbrellas, and everybody talked loudly and laughed a great deal, and told how late the train was. Then at last they were there, and could get out and walk silently side by side in the noisy procession through the station to the sidewalk.

What little things sometimes change a lifetime, and make for our safety or our destruction! That very morning three keen watchers were set to guard that station at Washington to hunt out the government spy who had stolen the stolen message, and take him, message and all, dead or alive, back to New York; for the man who could testify against the Holman Combination was not to be let live if there was such a thing as getting him one of the way. But they never thought to watch the Special which was supposed to carry only delegates to the great convention. He could not possibly be on that! They knew he was coming from Pittsburgh for they had been so advised by telegram the evening before by one of their company who had seen him buying a sleeper ticket for Washington. But they felt safe about the Special for they had made inquiries and been told no one but delegates could possibly come on it. They had done their work thoroughly and were on hand with every possible plan perfected for bagging their game, but they took the time when the Pittsburgh Special was expected to arrive for eating a hearty breakfast in the restaurant across the street from the station. Two of them emerged from the restaurant in plenty of time to meet the next Pittsburgh train, just as Gordon, having placed the lady in a closed carriage, was getting in himself.

If the carriage had stood in any other spot along the pavement in front of the station, they never would have seen him, but, as it was, they had a full view of him, and because they were Washington men, and experts in their line they recognized him at once, and knew their plans had failed, and that only by extreme measures could they hope to prevent the delivery of the message which would mean downfall and disaster to them and their schemes.

As Gordon slammed shut the door of the carriage he caught a vision of his two enemies pointing excitedly toward him, and he knew that the bloodhounds were on the scent. His heart beat wildly. His anxiety was divided between the message and the lady. What should he do? Drive at once to the home of his chief and deliver the message, or leave the girl at his rooms, phone for a faster conveyance and trust to getting to his chief ahead of his pursuers?

"Don't let anything hinder you! Don't let anything hinder you! Make it a matter of life and death!" rang the little ditty in his ears, and now it seemed as if he must go straight ahead with the message. And yet—"a matter of life and death!" He could not, must not, might not, take the lady with him into danger. If he must be in danger of death he did not want to die having exposed an innocent stranger to the same.

Then there was another point to be thought of.

He had already told the driver to take him to his apartments, and to drive as rapidly as possible. It would not do to stop him now and change the directions, for a pistol-shot could easily reach him yet, and, coming from a crowd who would be suspected? His enemies were standing on the threshold of a place where there were many of their kind to protect them, and none of his friends knew of his coming. It would be a race for life from now on to the finish.

Celia was looking out with interest at the streets, recognizing landmarks with wonder, and did not notice Gordon's white, set face and burning eyes as he strained his vision to note how fast the horse was going. Oh, if the driver would only turn off at the next corner into the side street they could not watch the carriage so far, but it was not likely, for this was the most direct road, and yet—yes, he had turned! Joy! The street here was so crowded that he had sought the narrower, less crowded way that he might go the faster.

It seemed an age to him before they stopped at his apartments. To Celia, it had been but a short ride, in which familiar scenes had brought her pleasure, for she recognized that she was not in strange Chicago, but in Washington, a city often visited. Somehow she felt it was an omen of a better future than she had feared.

"Oh, why didn't you tell me?" she smiled to Gordon. "It is Washington, dear old Washington."

Somehow he controlled the tumult in his heart and smiled back, saying in a voice quite natural:

"I am so glad you like it."

She seemed to understand that they could not talk until they reached a quiet place somewhere, and she did not trouble him with questions. Instead—she looked from the window, or watched him furtively, comparing him with her memory of George Hayne, and wondering in her own thoughts. She was glad to have them to herself for just this little bit, for now that the morning had come she was almost afraid of revelation, what it might bring forth. And so it came about that they took the swift ride in more or less silence, and neither thought it strange.

As the carriage stopped, he spoke with low, hurried voice, tense with excitement, but her own nerves were on a strain also, and she did not notice.

"We get out here."

He had the fare ready for the driver, and, stepping out, hurried Celia into the shelter of the hallway. It happened that an elevator had just come down, so it was but a second more before they were up safe in the hall before his own apartment.

Taking a latch key from his picket, he applied it to the door, flung it open, and ushered Celia to a large leather chair in the middle of the room. Then, stepping quickly to the side of the room, he touched a bell, and from it went to the telephone, with an "Excuse me, please, this is necessary," to the girl, who sat astonished, wondering at the homelikeness of the room and at the "at-homeness" of the man. She had expected to be taken to a hotel. This seemed to be a private apartment with which he was perfectly acquainted. Perhaps it belonge to some friend. But how, after an absence of years, could he remember just where to go, which door and which elevator to take, and how to fit the key with so accustomed a hand? Then her attention was arrested by his voice.

"Give me 254 L please, he said. . . "Is this 254 L? Is Mr Osborne in" . . You say he has not gone to the office yet" May I speak with him" Is this Mr Osborne" . . I did not expect you to know my voice . Yes, sir, just arrived, and all safe so far Shall I bring it to the house or the office" . The house" . All right, sir Immediately By the way I am sure Hale and Burke are on my track They saw me at the station . To your house . . You will wit until I come" . All right, sir Yes, immediately . . Sure, I'll take precaution . . . Good-by

With the closing words came a tap at the door.

"Come, Henry" Even in a tone as the astonished girl turned toward the door "Henry you will go down, please, to the restaurant and bring up a menu card This lady will select what she would like to have, and you will serve breakfast for her in this room as soon as possible I shall be out for perhaps an hour, and, meantime, you will obey any orders she may give you

He did not introduce her as his wife, but she did not notice the omission. She had suddenly become aware of a strange, distraught haste in his manner, and when he said he was going out alarm seized her, she could not tell why.

The man bowed deferentially to his master, looked his admiration and devotion to the lady, waited long enough to say

"I'se mighty glad to see you safe back, sah -" and disappeared to obey orders.

Celia turned toward Gordon for an explanation, but he was already at the telephone again:

"46" * * * Is this the Garage" * * * This the the Harris apartments. * * * Can you send Thomas with a closed car to the rear door immediately? * * * Yes. * * * No, I want Thomas, and a car that can speed * * * Yes, the rear door, rear, and at once. * * * What? * * * What's that? * * * But I must. * * * It's official business. * * * Well I thought so Hurry them up. Goodby"

He turned and saw her troubled gaze following him with growing fear in her eyes.

"What is the matter?" she asked anxiously "Has something happened""

Just one moment he paused, and, coming toward her, laid his hands on hers tenderly.

"Nothing the matter at all," he said soothingly. "At least nothing that need worry you. It is just a matter of pressing business. I'm sorry to have to go from you for a little while, but it is necessary. I cannot explain to you until I return. You will trust me" You will not worry?"

"I will try!"

Her lips were quivering, and her eyes were filled with tears. Again he felt that intense longing to lay his lips upon hers and comfort her, but he put it from him.

"There is nothing to feel sad about," he said, smiling gently "It is nothing tragic only there is need for haste, for if I wait, I may fail yet — It is something that means a great deal to me. When I come back I will explain all."

"Go" she said, putting out her hands in a gesture of resignation, as if she would hurry him from her. And though she was burning to know what it all meant there was that about him that compelled her to trust him and to wait.

Then his control almost went from him. He nearly took those hands in his and kissed them, but he did not. Instead, he went with swift steps to his bedroom door, threw open a chiffonier drawer, and took therefrom something small and sinister. She could see the gleam of its polished metal, and she sensed a strange little menace in the click as he did something to it, she could not see what, because his back was to her. He came out with his hand in his pocket, as if he had just hidden something there.

She was not familiar with firearms. Her mother had been afraid of them and her brother had never flourished any around the house, yet she knew by instinct that some weapon of defense was in Gordon's possession; and a nameless horror rose in her heart and shone from her blue eyes, but she would not speak a word to let him know it. If he had not been in such haste, he would have seen. Her horror would have been still greater if she had known that he already carried one loaded revolver and was taking a second in case of an emergency.

"Don't worry," he called as he hurried out the door. "Henry will get anything you need, and I shall soon be back."

The door closed and he was gone. She heard his quick step down the hall, heard the elevator door slide and slam again, and then she knew he was gone down. Outside an automobile sounded and she seemed to hear again his words at the phone. "The rear door." Why had he gone to the rear door? Was he in hiding? Was he flying from someone? What, oh what, did it mean?

Without stopping to reason it out, she flew across the room and opened the door of the bedroom he had just left, then through it passed swiftly to a bathroom beyond. Yes, there was a window. Would it be the one? Could she see him" And what good would it do her if she could?

She crowded close to the window. There was a heavy sash with stained glass, but she selected a clear bit of yellow and put her eye close. Yes, there was a closed automobile just below her, and it had started away from the building. He had gone, then. Where?

Her mind was a blank for a few minutes. She went slowly, mechanically back to the other room without noticing anything about her, sat down in the chair, putting her hands to her temples, and tried to think. Back to the moment in the church where he had appeared at her side and the service had begun. Something had told her than that he was different, and yet there had been those letters, and how could it possibly be that he had not written them? He was gone on some dangerous business. Of that she felt sure. There had been some caution given him by the man to whom he first 'phoned. He had promised to take precaution—that meant the little, wicked, gleaming thing in his pocket. Perhaps some harm would come to him, and she would never know. And then she stared at the opposite wall with wonder filled eyes. Well, and suppose it did? Why did she care? Was he not the man whose power over her but two short days ago would have made her welcome death as her deliverer? Why was all changed now? Just because he had smiled upon her and been kind? Had given her a few wild flowers and said her eyes were like them? Had hair that waved instead of being straight and thin? And where was all her loyalty to her dear dead father's memory? How could she mind that danger should come to one who had threatened to tell terrible lies that should blacken him in the thoughts of people who had loved him? Had she forgotten the letters? Was she willing to forgive all just because he had declared that he did not write them? How foolish! He said he could prove that he did not, but of course that was all nonsense. He must have written them. And yet there was the wave in his hair, and the kindness in his eyes. And he had looked oh, he had looked terrible things when he had read that letter, as if he would like to wreak vengeance on the man who had written it. Could a man masquerade that way?

And then a new solution to the problem came to her. Suppose this—whoever he was—this man who had married her, had gone out to find and punish George Hayne" Suppose— But then she covered her eyes with her hands and shuddered. Yet why should she care? But she did. Suppose he should be killed himself! Who was he if not George Hayne and how did he come to take his place. Was it just another of George's terrible tricks upon her?

A quick vision came of their meeting him back in Dr. Hemming's parlors, perhaps, on that great crimson lounge over there just as he had been in the dawning of the morning in the stateroom of the train with his head hanging limp and one perhaps across his breast; as if he were guarding something and his bright waves of brown hair lying heavy about his forehead—only his forehead would be white so white and cold, with a little blue mark in his temple, perhaps.

The footsteps of the man Henry brought her back to the present again. She smiled at him pleasantly as he entered, and answered his questions about what she would have for breakfast; but it was he who selected the menu, not she, and after he had gone she could not have told what she had ordered. She could not get away from the vision on the couch. She closed her eyes and pressed her cold fingers against her eyeballs to drive it away, but still her bridegroom seemed to be there before her.

The colored man came back presently with a loaded tray and set it down on a little table which he wheeled before her, as though he had done it many times before. She thanked him and said there was nothing else she needed, so he went away.

She toyed with the cup of delicious coffee which he had poured for her, and the few swallows she took gave her new heart. She broke a bit from a hot roll, and ate a little of the delicious steak, but still her mind was at work at the problem, and her heart was full of nameless anxiety.

He had gone away without any breakfast himself and he had had no supper the night before, she was sure. He probably had given to her everything he could get on the train. She was haunted with regret because she had not shared them with him. She got up and walked about the room trying to shake off the horror that was upon her and the dread of what the morning might bring forth. Ordinarily she would have thought of sending a message to her mother and brother, but her mind was so troubled now that it never occurred to her.

The walls of the room were tinted soft greenish gray, and above the picture molding they blended into a woodsy landscape with a hint of water greensward, and blue sky through interlacing branches. It reminded her of the little village they had seen as they started from the train in the early morning light. What a beautiful day they had spent together and how it had changed her whole attitude of heart toward the man she had married!

Two or three fine pictures were hung in good lights. She studied them, and knew that the one who had selected and hung them was a judge of true art; but they did not hold her attention long, for as yet she had not connected the room with the man for whom she waited.

A handsome mahogany desk stood open in a broad space by the window. She was attracted by a little painted miniature of a woman. She took it up and studied the face. It was fine and sweet, with brown hair dressed low, and eyes that reminded her of the man who had just gone from her. Was this, then, the home of some relative with whom he had come to stop for a day or two and if so where was the relative? The dress in the miniature was of a quarter of a century past, yet the face was young and sweet, as young, perhaps as herself. She wondered who it was. She put the miniature back in place with caressing hand. She felt that she would like to know this woman with the tender eyes. She wished her here now that she might tell her all her anxiety.

Her eye wandered to the pile of letters, some of them official looking, some one or two in square, perfumed envelopes with high, angular writing. They were all addressed to Mr Cyril Gordon. That was strange! Who was Mr Cyril Gordon" What had they—what had she—to do with him" Was he a friend whom George whom they were visiting for a few days" It was all bewildering.

Then the telephone rang.

Her heart beat wildly and she looked toward it as if it had been a human voice speaking and she had no power to answer. What should she do now" Should she answer" Or should she wait for the man to come" Could the man hear the telephone bell or was she perhaps expected to answer" And yet if Mr Cyril Gordon were somebody ought to get well. The phone rang insistently, once more and still a third time. What could it be ringing her" Perhaps [illegible] This [illegible] should not be [illegible] to the phone. She took down the receiver and said faintly:

"Hello?" and her voice sounded far away to be hers.

"Is this Mr Gordon's apartment"

"Yes" she answered for her eyes were resting on the pile of letters close at hand.

"Mr Gordon there"

No he is not she answered, growing more confident now and almost wishing she had not presumed to answer a stranger's phone.

"Why I just 'phoned to the office and they told me he had returned" said a voice that had an imperious note in it.

"Are you sure he isn't there"

"Quite sure" she replied.

"Who is this, please"

"I beg your pardon, said Celia trying to make time and knowing not how to reply. She was not any longer Miss Gorham to "Who was she" Mrs. Hayne" She shrank from the name. It was filled with horror for her. "Who is this I said," snapped the other voice now. "Is this the chambermaid" Because if it is I'd like you to look around and inquire and be quite sure that Mr Gordon isn't there. I wish to speak with him about something very important."

Celia smiled.

"No, this is not the chambermaid she said sweetly and I am quite sure Mr Gordon is not here."

"How long before he will be there"

"I don't know really for I have but just come myself."

"Who is this to whom I am talking"

"Why just a friend she answered, wondering if that were the best thing to say.

"Oh" there was a long contemptuous pause at the other end.

"Well could you give Mr Gordon a message when he comes in"

"Why certainly, I think so. Who is this"

"Miss Bentley Julia Bentley He'll know" replied the imperious one eagerly now. "And tell him please that he is expected here to dinner tonight. THE GREATEST KINDNESS.

Mrs. Pryor Gives Some Practical Suggestions for Seasonable Charities.

I consider the highest and most charitable of acts that kindness which restates and places in a position of usefulness the man of genius and refinement, who may have, through sudden and unforeseen misfortune, been reduced of means and opportunity to serve his fellow man. My reasons for this are these. The capabilities of such persons to be eminently useful is great. The ignorant and vulgar demand and should receive our help when they suffer, but their possibilities of usefulness are small by comparison with those of educated and refined men and women. To educate them and raise the lower to the higher plane is a grand charity, but its results must be more or less doubtful. The torch put by charity into their hands may become a beacon of light and may become an engine of destruction. But the great soul that has been scorched by undeserved misfortune will reinstated never fail of its highest duty. The charity that inspires anew such a spirit has an additional claim to be considered the highest, because the help must be attained, with infinite delicacy and secrecy. There can be no counsel between the left and right hand, no reward can come from the applause of the world. It requires greatness of soul to perform a grand act of charity in secret, and great souls of soul for a mean man or woman [illegible]

An Unexpected Salute.

A curious incident of the closing scenes of the American Civil War is related by a correspondent of a St. Louis newspaper. After General Grant had received General Lee's terms of surrender at Appomattox and accepted them some one—not General Grant—ordered the firing of a salute of one hundred guns in token of victory. The salute General Grant quickly stopped as he wished that every means should be taken to spare the sensibilities of the brave men who had surrendered. The proceedings went on quietly and the surrender was completed. All was over and peace had succeeded war when a strange and irregular fusillade of musketry was heard from the field of battle. More than that the air about the field was filled with whistling bullets. What had caused a reopening of hostilities? Simply this: the muskets of the Confederate soldiers had been allowed to remain stacked on the field. So suddenly had the fighting ceased on the morning of the 9th of April that thousands of pieces were left loaded. In some way the dry spring grass on the field caught fire and the blaze ran amongst the stacked guns. They were heated to the point of explosion, and soon the fusillade began. Most of the pieces were pointed upwards, and the bullets rose until their force was spent, and then fell upon the ground. Others were pointed at an angle, and sent their bullets far. On that spot the ground is to this day strewn with bullets, and any one may pick them up who will. This was the only salute which celebrated the surrender of Lee.

HIS SECOND WIFE.

A NEW YEAR STORY.

"There don't seem any way for me and Jake to get along,' continued the complaining voice of Mary Ann Burton. "You know when we got married father 'lowed to give me something to start on, but crops was bad that year, and Jake never liked my saying anything about it since. I've done just as Jake said these ten years, and now things are geting so bad that he had to give in and consent. So I came over to see father!"

"Well, what did he say?" her companion asked brusquely.

"Just what he said when we was married. Crops is bad and he can't see his way to helping us this year; that lawsuit mighty nigh broke him up, he says. He 'lows to give me my share next spring if he ain't in the poorhouse himself by that time. I suppose father does have a powerful hard time, like the rest of us. But next spring won't do Jake any good, he'll have fretted himself into the grave by then." The weak, uncertain voice sank into a sob of distress. The woman opposite her sat bolt upright in an uncompromising chair. There was a look on her face of genuine sympathy, mingled with indignation.

"Mary Anu," she said, "don't you know that your father is the stingiest man in seven states?" She brought this out as if from forced conviction. She was angry for having to say plainly what she had reluctantly admitted to herself not long ago

Mary Ann stopped sobbing from pure astonishment "You don't mean to say he was lying to me?" she asked

"No, he didn't think he was lying to you. He thinks he's getting poorer You've heard of misers? Well, John Anderson is on the way to become a miser. I believe he lays awake at night tormenting himself about the poorhouse. He's laying up money in the bank all the time."

"But what's he going to do with it?" Mary Ann asked in bewilderment

"Do with it? Why, give it to you and the children, and to them he cares for, to be sure. He can't bear to part with a cent until it comes his time to die and sometimes folks get mighty tired waiting. I'll tell you what, Mary Ann, I'd hate to see anything of that kind happen to your father, as good as he is."

"But it won't," protested Mary Ann, "Me and Jake wouldn't want him to die for all the money in the world."

Mary Ann sobbed again. "Things are getting mighty hard Little Susie ain't got no shoes to wear to school and frosty mornings are coming on. Jake don't sleep at night for thinking about it. We've had sickness, as you know. I told father all that and he said it was hard."

"Yes, and that's all he'll do. Here," she said, untying a knot in the corner of her handkerchief. "Take this money and get Susie some shoes, and I'll find a way into your father's conscience and bank account or my name ain't Mirandy Bowen. About tomorrow I'll be coming over." She went to the door with her visitor and added: "If I was you, Mary Ann, I would'nt tell Jake what your father said, but I'd kind o' get round it some way till I come."

She had come to the home of John Anderson before his wife died, had stayed with that good woman through her long illness, and seen Mary Ann married. Then she had remained to keep house. Now, ten years later, she was still there, and was regarded as the hostess by the visiting country neighbors, to whom the fact of her being "hired help" was no detriment.

She stood with her elbow on the mantel, the firelight from the hearth lending an additional glow of color to the bright dress. The dark wood behind brought her out in stronger relief, and she was far from unlovely. It looked like one of Rubens' bright interiors, only Mirandy was unconscious of that, and she grew momentarily uncertain. The color shot into her face as she heard a stop outside. John Anderson came in and looked at her—the central figure in his especial Rubens—surprised and pleased.

"Why, Mirandy," he said, "I reckon you've fixed up to be kissed." He rubbed his hands and chuckled over his own gallantry. He was a fine looking man, hale and hearty, with a strong tendency to humor. Mirandy looked at him, finding it hard to resist him.

"No," she answered, with a touch of coquetry, "no man kisses me until the preacher makes us better acquainted."

"I say, Mirandy, what's to hinder our going over to the preacher to-morrow and getting married?. We can tell Mary Ann the next time she comes, and it ain't anybody else's business."

She gave a hysterical laugh and blush, then shut her teeth together and drew a hard breath. "There ain't anything to hinder that I know of excepting the settlements. They always take a lot of arguing among the lawyers; so I reckon you'd better say next week, and I'll go and stay with Mary Ann till it's all fixed."

"Settlements?" he stammered. "What's them?" All his sordidness came out. Mirandy felt no hesitation now; her coquetry fell away from her like an outdoor garment by the house fire. Afterward he would have time to think of her charms; now he needed hard facts, without embellishments.

"Why, haven't you never read anything?" she asked. She got her idea from the only novel she had ever read, one of English life, in which a long-delayed marriage hung through a whole year of a weekly paper on this one question. She remembered thinking at the time that it was a queer thing to talk to young people about—children that might come but here the case was different There was Mary Ann She went on to explain Settlements is money and property a man gives his wife, so if he gets to speculating that much is safe for her and the children."

She did not propose to be more explicit, but stood tall straight and defiant by the mantel He could only protest "Why, Mirandy you'll be provided for when I die"

"Yes, and every time I want five cents, and don't care about asking you for it, I may wish you were dead so I wouldn't have to I don't suppose you intend to pay me wages, same as now, and let me take the most of it out of the privileges of being Mrs. Anderson"

He shook his head doubtfully "I don't know, Mirandy about the settlements."

"Oh, yes," she said, confidently, "you'll fix that all right I'll tell the folks we're engaged, and John Anderson, do you know if a man goes back on a promise of this sort a woman never raises her head again?"

He sat long by the fire in utter bewilderment, and at last, because the idea was so new to him that he could see nothing deeper in it concluded that it was nothing more than caprice "When a woman gets a fool notion in her head you might just as well wait until it wears itself out or give in at once," he thought He resolved to wait

When Mirandy came down to get breakfast the next morning she sang a little hymn But it was pathetic to see under her assumed cheerfulness the tender way in which she regarded the familiar breakfast cups Some late fall morning glories blew in at the open window across the table and the odor of ripening apples came in from the orchard When would she come back to it all? Perhaps never She recognized the impossibility of going back to live there in the old order of things after what had happened It made her still more uncertain to see John Anderson's cheerful confident manner as he brought the wagon around to the door

"You'll be back in a day or so I reckon Mirandy and will be ready to go and get married by-ventured

It'll take longer than you think to get the papers fixed I'll tell you better stop and get your things and go over and keep house Have you ready for me" she answered

"Oh I'll know now Mirandy you won't want any need of that I'll just go to work at my farm and come for you You can just tell folks you are need to come home He'll be glad to hear pigs in the south orchard for quite a spell

Thus they talked for two long hours each ignoring the other's position until he set her down at the front house gate Then he gave her a pocket book, saying "That's for your wedding fixin's. Spend as much as you like"

The blood rushed to her face at the offer of the bribe but after a moment she said quietly "Thank you I reckon it'll be used He drove away, leaving her much astonished by his fit of generosity

"Wedding fixin's for me" she said, contemptuously "I need them about as much as a wagon does five wheels But I reckon Mary Ann can find use for it. I'll make her believe her father sent it and me too I wonder which will prove the greatest blessing?" With that she walked into the house and asked where she should hang her hat and shawl, to the great delight of Mary Ann, who looked upon her intention to pay a visit of indefinite length as nothing less than a miracle.

While affairs at the farmhouse were at their worst, work became scarce at Mary Ann's, and Mirandy at last faced a day when there was nothing to do. What would become of her? Everything would go smoothly for a while now, until the need of money was felt again She had no doubt she could tide over such places with them always. But that was not right not just, and bitter words might pass and remorse.

She would go to John Anderson and tell him plainly what her thought had been; then, though he might not forgive her, still she would have done right. She walked over to the house in the bleak afternoon. A snowstorm was brewing in the sky. It was still early, and she could sit by the fire until supper time. As she entered the house she saw that Granny was gone, and evidently intended staying to tea, because a cold supper for one was set out on the table. The fire was out and the kitchen cold.

Mirandy pulled the table cloth straight mechanically, picked up a rusty knife and eyed the feast critically. The hand towel over the wash stand was like the typical one in a printing office, only Mirandy had never heard of that one. Well, here was work for one afternoon at least. No wonder he sent no word. She felt much more lenient toward the wretch who had gone through all that and lived.

Before 5 o'clock everything was in order. The fire sparkled in a clean stove, and the light danced among the bright dishes and cutlery on the table. Mirandy sat down to think what she should say. She looked around the cheerful room with a feeling of longing for her home. The copper kettle purred like a cat. Worn out with her contending thoughts, she would fain have rested there and let things take their course. But no. She would go away until it was all clearer in her mind.

Looking again to see if everything was in order, she saw one of Granny Simpson's dresses hanging by the chimney. It was a dingy dress, and smelled of tobacco. She took it away to a closet, and then an inspiration came to her. She brought out one of her own in bright pink calico to hang in its place after which she tied on her veil and went back to Mary Ann's

Presently John Anderson came in to his lonely supper, stamping the wet snow from his boots, his head down as usual, but the warmth and glow struck his dulled senses, and he looked up in dazed wonder. "Mirandy!" he gasped The clock ticked loud through the silent house, the golden sides of the copper kettle winked in the firelight and kept up a contented singing to itself The truth dawned on him slowly She had been there and gone.

He crawled over to his accustomed chair that Granny usually monopolized Mirandy's stood opposite with a fresh red-striped towel on the back. He leaned his head against the wall, and brushed with his grizzled cheek the crisp folds of a pink calico dress. Then he broke down and sobbed out all the misery of six unhappy weeks.

Two days later, and the day before New Year's, he drove up to Mary Ann's gate in a new cutter. He did not get down, but waited for Mirandy to come out

"Mirandy," he said, "the settlements are made ready for you to sign

Yes" she answered, "but you'll have to take me as I am. Mary Ann got that money. She needed it worse than I did wedding clothes." He meekly assented.

Going back to the house she observed

"Mary Ann, me and your father are going to town, and I reckon as tomorrow is New Year's you and Jake and the children had better pile into the bobsled and come over to dinner I guess you'll hear some good news" These two undemonstrative women kissed each other and Mirandy went away without telling anything more

At 11 o'clock the next morning Mary Ann and the children appeared at the big farmhouse The women busied themselves in the kitchen and exchanged confidences.

I never saw such a house in all my born days I had to get new milk crocks yesterday Granny Simpson spoiled all the old ones a-letting milk sour in them And the table knives all rusted by rust Your father said to us we had to get new ones, we might as well have them silver plated The others were lots of trouble to keep bright Ain't they pretty?"

Mary Ann looked sympathetic and admired the silver I reckon we'll have to trade peaches and cherries, since you didn't get to preserve any this season."

Don't you We got pretty tired of apple sass last year but if you want to it's all right I reckon your father could for doin Anderson's cheerfulness When they sat down to the table the host bowed his head and said "For these and all other blessings the Lord make us truly thankful"

He looked around upon the little family and said in a gently explanatory way "And the other blessings are that I've got some dear children and a dear woman, who don't stick at anything to show me how mean I've been Amen."

Mary Ann was bewildered Mirandy was blushing brighter than her pink dress, but she managed to say: "Me and your father have been getting married, and he's got something for you and Jake."

John Anderson handed some papers to Jake, who was slow about some things, and Mary Ann, leaning over his shoulder, could make out nothing for the blur before her eyes. At last Jake sprang to his feet and waved the papers over his head

"Mary Ann," he cried excitedly, "It's a deed for the forty acres, with stock and $1 000 for machinery and stock sheds. Its given to us for good and all by -why- it's from Mirandy. I don't understand."

Yes, it's from Mirandy," said his father-in law. "Them's her settlements, for her and the children, and she 'lowed that meant Mary Ann" He smiled benevolently and proceeded to help the children to drumsticks and gravy There is no knowing what explanations might have followed, but the women were busy with the children and after dinner Jake and his father-in-law talked about a hired hand, who must be secured to take Jake's place, now that he had a farm of his own to manage. As they were going home in the evening the children in the new cutter with grandpa, Jake said "Mary Ann, what's settlements?"

Mary Ann shook her head. "I never heard of them before, but Mirandy knows, and she's learned father. It went kind o' hard with him, but he seems relieved like, now it's over, and thankful. We've all got reason to be thankful for Mirandy."

ARE WE LOSING OUR ENERGY?

If prices of provisions keep on climbing as they have been doing during the past year the effect should be a great stimulus to the "back to the farm" movement of which we have heard so much the past decade.

Common sense and observation should teach any man that one of the main causes of the high price of food stuffs is the growing scarcity of farm labor, and the consequent curtailment of acreage cultivated. Thousands of farmers all over this country, unable to secure adequate help, are gradually curtailing their operations until it is no uncommon sight to see a farm that formerly sold four or five thousand bushels of corn now hardly producing enough to feed the stock and fatten the pork.

Of course we all know that a gang of unprincipled blood suckers have seized upon the war as an excuse for boosting the price of everything that we consume, but if a scarcity of production did not exist the foreign demand for foodstuffs would be met and there would still remain in this country a sufficient quanity to supply all home demands at reasonable prices.

Just why young men, and older ones, too, should wish to leave the farm and rush off to the overcrowded cities is not easy to understand. True, they work hard on the farm. And equally true they work even harder in the city and save less In a majority of cases, unless they are intellectually far above the average of mankind, they live in penury and die in want.

With the present demand for farm products it would appear the height of folly to abondon the certainty of plenty on the farm for the precarious life of the average city dweller.

A New York writer gives as a reason for men leaving the farm, that they dread being known as "country jakes." That writer is a jackass and his statement a joke. With the present easy means of communication between town and country it is difficult in these days to distiguish the town man from the countryman. If anything, the countryman approaches nearer to masculine perfection than the city consin

Looked at from whatever angle we may view it, the question of the future of the farm is serious. That young men are leaving it it by the thousands is a fact. That there are none to replace them is a lamentable fact.

And in endeavoring to locate the cause one is almost forced to the conclusion that the men of this nation are gradually losing that love of honest toil for which their forefathers were noted.

LOOKING A YEAR AHEAD

What will the year 1917 mean to this town, to this community, to this people?

What will be your personal attitude toward the making of a better town, a more prosperous community, a more open hearted people?

The efforts of the individual citizen may accomplish something. The co-operation of a collective people will produce notable results.

Collective co-operation is only possible where confidence and good will exist, and where there is a determination to utilize this combination to the ultimate good of all.

The man who holds a grouch against his neighbor can not successfully pull in harness with that neighbor so long as that grouch exists. Lose the grouch.

The man who disparages and undermines the reputation of another can not expect the community in general to think well of the assinator of character. Speak gently and use the soft pedal.

The man who says "go ahead" can not expect to keep pace with the hustler who says "come on." Step lively and get there. Any one man who says 'I WILL" is worth a hundred of those who says "I Can't."

This is the time of year when the hopper of time is filled with new resolutions. But it is more profitable to act than to resolute.

Let us make this a year of action, of deeds, and of results,

Let us make this more than a collection of individuals. Let us make it a community of people with one aim, one ambition, and one great purpose in life, and let us make that purpose the good of man and womankind in general and of this community in particular. If we work collectively and earnestly and energetically we will achieve success, but if we labor individually we will accomplish but little.

The road of life is long, and stormy, and barriers bar our way. But many hands make light work of the heaviest burdens, and collective might may roll the heaviest barriers away.

We may each pursue our own chosen vocations, and yet all labor in the common cause of a better and more prosperous town and countryside. Two horses pulling in one direction will get the load there. But when one pulls and the other balks the load stands still. Will 1917 find us a community of loyal pullers, or a divided aggregation of pullers and balkers who accomplish nothing but to stand still?

Nineteen seventeen will tell the story, and you will put the words in the mouth of the teller.

What are those words going to be?

Will they be loyalty, cohesion, aggressiveness, success? Or will they be disloyalty, suspicion, disintegration disaster?

Chronic Cough in Pigs

In many cases does not seem to effect the health of the animal, and yet it is quite a common ailment

Causes—Cough in pigs may arise from several causes; worms, indigestion, disordered liver, and irration of the membrane of the throat. If possible, find the cause and remove it. Often a dusty road near-by, or dusty pens may be the cause. If you can not find the cause, give a physic and keep the hogs in a warm, comfortable place.

If you suspect worms, give a physic treatment of Santonin or Standard Hog Regulator or Farmers' Reliable Worm Treatment for hogs. In stubborn cases Standard Extract of Pine Tar, given in teaspoonful doses in the feed three times a day, is beneficial.

Come in and get a copy of the Standard Farmer, which gives many valuable hints on stock raising.

BRYAN AGAINST OWNERSHIP BY THE GOVERNMENT

Gives Newlands Committee His Views on Railroad Control.

COMPETITION PREFERABLE.

Federal Regulation Should Not Be Allowed to Exclude Exercise of State Authority, He Contends—Thinks Railroad Stocks Should Represent Actual Value and Be Stable as Government Bonds.

Washington, Dec. 11.—William J. Bryan, who startled the country ten years ago by advocating government ownership of railroads, appeared before the Newlands Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce last week in support of the claim that the states should be allowed to retain authority over the regulation of all transportation lines within their borders. Mr. Bryan explained that he had long regarded government ownership as inevitable, but only because of railroad opposition to effective regulation.

Against Government Ownership.

"Personally I cannot say that I desire government ownership," he explained, "because I lean to the individual idea rather than to the collective idea; that is, I believe that government ownership is desirable only where competition is impossible."

Alfred P. Thom, counsel to the Railway Executives' Advisory Committee, previously had presented before the members of the Newlands Committee as one of his reasons for urging a better balanced and more systematic regulation of railroads the argument that this is the only alternative to government ownership. Calling attention to the restrictions imposed upon the transportation lines by conflicting state laws and regulations, to the practical cessation of new construction and to the impossibility under existing conditions of securing the new capital needed for extensions and betterments of railway facilities, he warned the Congressmen that unless they provided a fair and reasonable system of regulation that would enable the railroads to meet the growing needs of the country's business the national government would be compelled to take over the ownership of the lines with all the evils attendant upon such a system.

Preservation of Competition.

Mr. Bryan, on the other hand, holds that the further extension of federal authority over the railroads would be a step in the direction of government ownership. He advanced the view that the centralization of control in the hands of the national government would impose too great a burden upon the regulating body, would offer strong temptation to railroads to interfere in politics and would encourage the general movement toward centralization of power in the federal government at the expense of the states. He said that he did not object to consolidations of railroad lines so long as they did not destroy competition, that he knew of no complaint against great railway systems because of their size and that he believed that the preservation of competition was the test to be applied to all consolidations.

Regulation of Securities.

Mr. Bryan declared himself in favor of national regulation of railway stock and bond issues, but added that he saw no reason why that should exclude the states from acting on the same subject as to state corporations. "I would like to see the stock of a railroad, as long as it is in private hands, made as substantial and as unvarying as the value of a government bond," he asserted.

He suggested that railroad capitalization be readjusted to equalize it with actual valuation of the property represented, making due allowance for equities, and that when this was done the roads should be allowed to earn sufficient income to keep their stock at par and to create a surplus. The latter, he tentatively proposed, might be allowed to amount to 25 per cent of the capital.

Railway Earnings Low.

This subject of railroad capitalization and the amount of railroad earnings received further attention from the committee during its recent sessions. In answer to questions by Senator Cummins, Mr. Thom submitted figures showing the net earnings of the roads in recent years. These figures show that during the five years from 1905 to 1910 the average net earnings were 5.25 per cent of the net capitalization, while for the five years from 1910 to 1915 the average was only 4.56 per cent. The total earnings on the stock, computed by adding to the net operating income the income from the securities owned and deducting bond interest, were for 1910, 7.09 per cent; for 1911, 6.17 per cent; for 1912, 4.97 per cent; for 1913, 5.94 per cent; for 1914, 4.06 per cent; for 1915, 3.44 per cent, thus showing an almost continuous decrease throughout this six year period. It was announced that Halford Erickson, formerly chairman of the Wisconsin Railroad Commission, would submit more complete information on this subject to the Committee at a later date.

THE KLEMME TIMES

M. M. MAGNER, Publisher.

KLEMME, IOWA

The first president of the American Colonization society, which founded the Republic of Liberia, on the west coast of Africa was Bushrod Washington, who was born in Virginia 167 years ago, in 1759, and who was a nephew of George Washington. He served as a private soldier in the revolution, and afterward was elevated to the United States supreme court. While himself an owner of many slaves, he was deeply interested in the movement for restoring the Africans in America to their native continent. He was one of the pioneers in the organization of the American Colonization society, which was launched just a century ago, in the latter part of 1816. Henry Clay, John Randolph and other men of prominence were also prominent in the movement. In 1820 the society sent 38 negroes back to Africa in a government vessel, and that year a constitution for the colony, which was named Liberia, was adopted. The colony continued to be in the charge of agents and governors appointed by the society until 1847, when its rights were voluntarily surrendered and the independence of Liberia was proclaimed and was recognized by the United States, Great Britain and France.

Maryland has reason to be proud of the two artists, Charles and Rembrandt Peale. The former was born at Chestertown, Md., in 1741. Like Robert Fulton, he was both artist and inventor. Charles Peale started life as a saddler, then silversmith, watchmaker and carver. He went to Boston and studied under the celebrated Copley, and later in London under Benjamin West. Then came the honor of painting the first portrait of Washington as a Virginia colonel in 1772. During the revolution he commanded a company at the battles of Trenton and Germantown and was a member of the Pennsylvania convention in 1777. He, however, rendered a greater service to posterity by painting the portraits of the leading officers of the revolution, and was one of the promoters of the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. This most versatile man, besides inventing a great variety of machines, was the first American manufacturer of enamel teeth. He died in Philadelphia in 1827, but his art lived in the person of his famous son, Rembrandt Peale.

In addition to Sen. Robert L. Owen, a Cherokee Indian, the Cherokees have added to their prestige by sending two of their nation to the lower house of congress. T. A. Chandler was chosen in the First, and William Hastings reelected in the Fourth district of Oklahoma. Charles Carter, representative from the Third Oklahoma district, is a Chickasha Indian, but connected with the Cherokees by ties of marriage.

Ten children of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Miller, of Ardmore, Pa., and one grandchild were christened at one time at the Miller home by the Rev. H. C. Geckle, of Gladwyne. The grandchild, Helen, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Miller. The Miller children christened were Ross, Blanche, Clyde, Joseph, jr., Foster, Horace, Walter, Ruth and the twins, Beatrice and Bertha.

A log from a tree known to be at least 220 years old, and cut on an estate in Olney, Pa., was hauled to the site of the new Swedenborgian church being erected at Bryn Athyn. The piece of timber—white oak—is so massive that no saw mill in the east could finish it for use, so a force of workmen are hewing by hand the timber to be used as the tie beam in the roof of the church.

On the Pennsylvania railroad lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie there is a car that feels its way along with the aid of automatic templets. It is being run over every division as quickly as possible in order to get accurate measurements of the distances from the track to projecting portions of station buildings, tunnels, bridges and other objects.

A 3-year-old child of a South Denver, Colo., man turned the hose on an elderly woman next door. The woman sidestepped to avoid the water, slipped and fell, and is now suing the father of the child for $10,500 damages. The complaint states that the father is responsible because he allowed the youngster to get hold of the hose.

Uncle Sam still has considerable land to give to the enterprising citizen who wishes to establish a home. Secretary of the Interior Lane has announced that more than 250,000,000 acres of land remains in the public domain, according to official figures just compiled by the general land office. These acres are in 25 different states.

MORE MONEY ASKED FOR STATE SCHOOLS

Board of Education Files Report Asking $500,000 Additional For 1917.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 23.—The state board of education has filed its annual report with Governor Clarke. It contains the recommendations for appropriations which the general assembly will be asked for the state educational institutions for the coming biennial period.

As the institutions are growing more revenue is needed to carry on the work and to provide for the instruction of the increasing number of students. The appropriations asked for are about $500,000 greater than the appropriations made by the last general assembly.

The board has a building program mapped out for the educational institutions. The legislature will be asked to sanction the construction of a number of new structures at the university and the state colleges. The building fund will not be increased, it is said.

The report calls to the attention of the legislature the recommendations for the improvement of the Iowa educational system made in the report filed by the educational survey commission. Many of the suggestions deal only with administrative matters and can be put into effect by the board without legislative action. However, there are a few which need special acts to bring about the changes desired.

IOWA COLONEL SEES END OF THE MILITIA

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 23.—Colonel Bennett, commander of the Third Iowa regiment, who reached here today on furlough, says he sees the finish of the national guard system.

He says that when the returning troopers are mustered out of federal service they are automatically mustered out of all service. To remain as guardsmen they must take new oath of federal defense act which became effective last summer, and this he says they will not do. "A great majority of them have had their fill," said Colonel Bennett, "and they will not tie themselves up for six years more."

MAN ATTEMPTS TO GIVE BABY AWAY

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 23.—William J. Klass, of Haverhill, attempted to give a week-old baby to the matron at the union station last night. Instead of taking the baby she had Klass arrested. He explained that his sister had been betrayed by a book agent and that he had brought the child to Des Moines to find it a home. He was released and police are looking for a home for the baby.

WOMAN MEETS LOVER: IS SHOT FOUR TIMES

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 23.—Dorothy Rader, 25 years old, kept a tryst here last night with her lover, F. W. Fuller, 45 years old, of Lexington, Neb., and was shot four times with a large caliber automatic revolver and killed. Fuller is held by the police. A street car conductor who witnessed the shooting said:

"In alighting from the car Fuller stepped on my toes and I called him down. He just smiled. I watched him approach a girl in white furs and he pulled a revolver and shot her four times without saying a word. I ran to the girl and asked her to say something. Fuller stood with the revolver in his hand and smiled."

An attempt was made to take Fuller from police officers and there were cries of "Lynch him!" which caused him to smile.

Fuller made no statement except to say the girl was once his wife.

DISTRICT JUDGES ASK SALARY BOOST

Judiciary, Like Common People, Is Not Immune From High Cost of Living.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 20.—The district judges of Iowa will ask the Thirty-seventh general assembly to raise their salaries from $3,500 to $5,000.

There are 59 district judges in Iowa. On the present pay basis they receive $206,500 annually. The proposed increase would call for an appropriation of $295,000 for salaries for judges. The judges at the last session of the legislature were granted an allowance for expenses, not to exceed $200 a year.

In asking for salary raises, the judges declare that the high cost of living has affected the bench as well as all other lines. They assert that a salary of $3,500 a year is not sufficient for the work performed by the judges.

The active support of all the district judges and attorneys of the state will be enlisted by the judges' committee in the movement.

Many of the attorneys say that the salaries of the judges of the supreme court should be advanced from $6,000 to $10,000 a year, if the salaries of the district judges are increased. There are seven members of the supreme court. The last raise in salary granted the district judges was in 1902.

Politicians have discussed the need of one more member of the supreme court. If conditions are favorable, a bill may be introduced in the next legislature providing for enlarging the court. Attorneys say that, by adding one more judge, the work of the court will be speeded up.

In ordering the docket made up for the January 1917 term, the supreme court found it was as much behind in hearing cases as it was a year ago. The court found that it made no progress in the year in the way of catching up with the work.

The Skating Party.

Once upon a time Tip, the little country squirrel crept into the pocket of a big policeman and went with him into the park. Baby John was not very well and so Tip had not gone on his usual outing for several days. He decided he would call on his city cousin and see how he was getting along. When he reached the new squirrel house he found it empty but the squirrel next door told him his cousin had just gone out towards the pond.

Tip hopped along and at last came to the edge of the pond, but as he didn't see his cousin he started to run back. Just then a boy who had often given him nuts came along with some skates over his arm. "Hello Tip," said the boy and picked the squirrel up and held him tight under his arm.

Now Tip did not like to be picked up unless he wished to be, so he wriggled and squirmed and when the boy put him down to fasten on his skates Tip thought he would try to skate too. He started out on to the ice but as he did so one of his feet slipped out from under him, the other went in the other direction and Tip sprawled all over the ice. Up he got and started out again but he couldn't seem to get along and besides the ice was cold and he was getting his little fur very wet.

Just then the boy skated up grabbed Tip and put him in his pocket. Tip didn't mind it this time and snuggled down with just his head peeping out to see what was going up. Tip thought this was great fun as he could skate without the discomfort of cold feet and unsteady legs.

Tip got back just in time to see the friendly policeman turn the corner so he had to spend the night with his city cousin, but he had a chance to tell him all about the grand skating party.

The refugees said Villa was at Jimenez, when they left Torreon three days ago. A large force of Villa forces was expected to approach Torreon from the south at the same time Villa moved on Torreon from the north.

The Americans also confirmed the death of Howard Gray, or Weeks, at Parral. He was the only American killed, they said.

The Americans in the party included Dr. Thomas Flannaghan, Jacob Myers, Adam Schaeffer, W. C. Palmer, Julius Sinner, a Swiss citizen, also came to the border with the party. They left Parral 10 days ago. They said every one in Torreon was expecting an attack by Villa forces yesterday or today and many refugees were leaving for the border. All of the Americans who were in Parral at the time Villa occupied the town on November 5, have now been accounted for, four having come to the border by way of Culiacan, Sinaloa.

Edgar Koch, acting German vice consul at Parral, also accompanied the Americans to the border. He was robbed of $50 worth of silver bullion by Santa Rosalia by Villa's followers in October. He said:

Troops in Flight.

Carranza troops were preparing to evacuate Parral when the refugees left there for the border on December 9. The Americans in the party said the Villa forces under Jacinto Hernandez had left the town about December 8, but was expected to reenter the town soon after the refugees left for the border.

At Jimenez the Carranza troops were at the railroad station preparing to leave for the south and evacuate the town to the Villa forces, which were to pass the refugees said.

Government agents received a report today that Villa was at Jimenez yesterday in person and was preparing to move on Torreon at once with his northern command, cooperating with rebels operating in the Laguna district near Torreon.

Text of Note Sent to Warring Powers by American President

Lansing Forwards Document to Various Ministers For Presentation to Foreign Offices of the Respective Belligerent Governments.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The notes addressed to belligerents by President Wilson are prefaced with this instruction by Secretary Lansing to the American ambassadors presenting them:

"The president directs me to send you the following communication to be presented immediately to the minister of foreign affairs of the government to which you are accredited."

Text of the Notes.

The text of the notes themselves then is identically as follows

"The president of the United States is instructed me to suggest to the (here is inserted the designation of the government addressed) a course of action with regard to the present war which he hopes that the government will take under consideration as suggested in the most friendly spirit and as coming not only from a friend, but also coming from the representative of a neutral nation whose interests have been most seriously affected by the war and whose concern for its early conclusion arises out of a manifest necessity to demonstrate how best to safeguard those interests if the war is to continue."

At this point the texts vary In the note to the central powers this paragraph follows next

"The suggestion which I am instructed to make the president has long had in mind to offer He is somewhat embarrassed to offer it at this particular time because it may now seem to have been prompted by a desire to play a part in connection with the recent overtures of the central powers. It has in fact been in no way suggested by them in its origin and the president would have delayed offering it until those overtures had been independently answered but for the fact that it also concerns the question of peace and may best be considered in connection with other proposals which have the same end in view The president can only beg that his suggestion be considered entirely on its merits, as if it had been made in other circumstances."

In the note to the entente allies the following paragraphs take the place of the one just quoted

"The suggestion which I am instructed to make the president has long had in mind to offer He is somewhat embarrassed to offer it at this particular time because it may now seem to have been prompted by the recent overtures of the central powers It is in fact in no way associated with them in its origin and the president would have delayed offering it until those overtures had been answered but for the fact that it also concerns the question of peace and may best be considered in connection with other proposals which have the same end in view The president can only beg that his suggestion be considered entirely on its own merits and as if it had been made in other circumstances"

Then all the notes proceed identically as follows

"The president suggests that an early occasion be sought to call out from all the nations now at war such an avowal of their respective views as to the terms upon which the war might be concluded and the arrangements which would be deemed satisfactory as a guaranty against its renewal or the kindling of any similar conflict in the future as would make it possible frankly to compare them He is indifferent as to the means taken to accomplish this. He would be happy himself to be of service, or even to take the initiative in its accomplishment in any way that might prove acceptable but he has no desire to determine the method or the instrumentality. One way will be as acceptable to him as another if only the great object he has in mind be attained

"He takes the liberty of calling attention to the fact that the objects which the statesmen of the belligerents on both sides have in mind in this war are virtually the same as stated in general terms to their own people and to the world. Each side desires to make the rights and privileges of weak peoples and small states as secure against aggression or denial in the future as the rights and privileges of the great and powerful states now at war Each wishes itself to be made secure in the future, along with all other nations and peoples against the recurrence of wars like this and against aggression or selfish interference of any kind. Each would be jealous of the formation of any more rival governments to preserve an uncertain balance of power and multiplying suspicions, but each is ready to consider the formation of a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world. Before that final step can be taken, however each deems it necessary first to settle the issues of the present war upon terms which will certainly safeguard the independence the territorial integrity and the political and commercial freedom of the nations involved.

Interest of Neutrals.

"In the measures to be taken to secure the future peace of the world the people and government of the United States are as vitally and directly interested as the governments now at war. Their interest, moreover, in the means to be adopted to relieve the smaller and weaker peoples of the world of the peril of wrong and violence is as quick and ardent as that of any other people or government. They stand ready and even eager to cooperate in the accomplishment of these ends when the war is over with every influence and resource at their command. But the war must first be concluded The terms upon which it is to be concluded they are not at liberty to suggest, but the president does feel that it is his right and his duty to point out their intimate interest in its conclusion lest it should presently be too late to accomplish the greater things which lie beyond its conclusion, lest the situation of neutral nations, now exceedingly hard to endure, be rendered altogether intolerable, and lest, more than all, an injury be done civilization itself which can never be atoned for or repaired

"The president therefore feels altogether justified in suggesting an immediate opportunity for a comparison of views as to the terms which must precede those ultimate arrangements for the peace of the world which all desire and in which the neutral nations as well as those at war are ready to play their full responsible part If the contest must continue to proceed towards undefined ends by slow attrition until the one group of belligerents or the other is exhausted if million after million of human lives must continue to be offered until on the one side or the other there are no more to offer, if resentments must be kindled that can never cool and despairs engendered from which there can be no recovery, hopes of peace and of the willing concert of free peoples will be rendered vain and idle.

Wars Burden Worldwide.

"The life of the entire world has been profoundly affected. Every part of the great family of mankind has felt the burden and terror of this unprecedented contest of arms. No nations in the civilized world can be said in truth to stand out of its influence or to be safe against its disturbing effects. And yet the concrete objects for which it is being waged have never been definitely stated.

"The leaders of the several belligerents have, as has been said, led those objects in general terms. But, stated in general terms, they seem the same on both sides. Never yet have the authoritative spokesmen of either side avowed the precise objects which would, if attained, satisfy them and their people that the war had been fought out. The world has been left to conjecture what definite results, what actual exchange of guarantees, what political or territorial changes or readjustments, what stage of military success even would bring the war to an end.

"It may be that peace is nearer than we know, that the terms which the belligerents on the one side and on the other would deem it necessary to insist upon are not so irreconcilable as some have feared, that an interchange of views would clear the way at least for conference and make the permanent concern of the nations a hope of the immediate future, a concert of nations immediately practicable

"The president is not proposing peace, he is not even offering mediation He is merely proposing that soundings be taken in order that we may learn, the neutral nations with the belligerents, how near the haven of peace may be for which all mankind longs with an intense and increasing longing. He believes that the spirit in which he speaks and the objects which he seeks will be understood by all concerned and he confidently hopes for a response which will bring a new light into the affairs of the world"

The note to the entente group will be delivered to Great Britain, France Italy, Japan, Russia, Belgium Montenegro Portugal, Rumania and Serbia. That to the central powers will be delivered to Germany Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria

PEACE,—BUT AT A PRICE!

STOCKS SLUMP ON BIG LIQUIDATION

Enormous Volume of Shares Dumped Upon Market Following Peace Move By U. S. Government.

New York, Dec 21 —President Wilson's communication to the warring powers and the subsequent comment upon it by Secretary Lansing was made the occasion of another tremendous liquidating movement in the stock market today, which far exceeded in scope and activity any session of the past 10 days

Special stocks, notably those regarded as war issues broke 4 to 13 points during the wild opening with declines of 1 to 3 points between sales There was a quick rally, but this gave way to alternate declines and advances during the forenoon, culminating after the noon hour in another sweeping downward movement which followed soon upon the publication of Secretary Lansing's statement The latter break was marked for the first time since the recent period of liquidation began, by heavy weakness in rails Despite the declaration of an extra 2 per cent dividend by Union Pacific, that stock showed an extra loss of 5½ points and Reading and other leaders in the dry division also fell abruptly

United States Steel was the center during the trading of the forenoon of convulsive movements. In one lot at the opening 50,000 shares were quoted at 104¼ to 105¼, an extreme loss of 3½ points. This was the largest single transaction in the history of the exchange. During the noon break steel dropped to 102½

Total sales of all stocks during the first two hours reached the almost unprecedented total of 1,300,000 shores

The trading with its quick nervous rallies and declines caused many brokers to discourage the buying of the more volatile specialties except for cash and others refused to accept less than 50 per cent margins, even for standard stocks

Another wave of selling swept the market during the last hour, prices tumbling to the lowest level of the day Active stocks sold 10 and 15 points under yesterday's final quotations Total transactions just before the close were estimated at about 2,700,000 shares, the largest with one or two exceptions, in the history of the New York stock exchange

Trading in the closing moments was fast and furious The ticker was almost uselessly behind in recording the transactions. Steel dropped to 100⅞, 5⅝ points down from the high price today An Anaconda sold down to 77⅝. Reading to 99 Union Pacific to 142½. Marine preferred to 84¼ No one knew in the brokers' offices, however what the quotations actually were at any given moment on the floor of the exchange.

Later estimates placed the total sales as 3,000,000 shores, not exceeded since the Northern Pacific corner of 1901 when there were two 3,000,000 share days.

SECRETARY LANSING SAYS AMERICA IS BEING DRAWN CLOSER TO VERGE OF WAR

As Greatest of Neutrals, He Declares, Impositions of Belligerents Is Gradually Rendering Position of This Country Intolerable and It Is Sought to Bring Catastrophe to Close Before Final Action Is Deemed Necessary to Vindicate Government's Attitude.

WOULD LEARN AIMS OF THE WARRING NATIONS

This Country Is Entitled to Know What Hostile Powers Expect to Accomplish By Continued Strife, Head of State Department Declares—Wilson's Note Not Directly Intended to Bring Peace, But to Clear Up Aims and Aspirations of Nations Now In Arms.

Washington, D C, Dec 21 - The danger of the United States itself being drawn into the war by reason of its increasingly critical position as a neutral was one of the moving considerations in President Wilson's dispatch of notes to all the belligerents urging them to discuss peace terms

Secretary Lansing today authorized the statement that the material rights of the United States had not been the paramount consideration America's rights, he said, were being more and more involved by the belligerents and as the United States was "drawing nearer the verge of war, it was entitled to know exactly what each belligerent seeks, in order that we may regulate our conduct in the future"

Secretary Lansing's statement upon which the White House refused to comment, was as follows

The president's notes had been practically 48 hours on their way today, and officials believed they had reached all the foreign capitals All official Washington is listening with the keenest expectations to any indications of how the notes will be received

Wilson Knew Ground.

Diplomatists think it is incredible that President Wilson should have taken his action without some belief that it would not be flatly rejected without consideration by the entente allies The wish and hope of the German allies that he take some such step had long been well known and there is no doubt of the manner of its reception among them

U. S. Affected by War.

Secretary Lansing today authorized the following statement

"The reasons for the sending of the note were as follows:

"It is not our material interest we had in mind when the note was sent, but more and more our own rights are becoming involved by the belligerents on both sides, so that the situation is becoming increasingly critical

"I mean by that, that we are drawing nearer the verge of war ourselves, and, therefore, we are entitled to know exactly what each belligerent seeks in order that we may regulate our conduct in the future.

"No nation has been sounded. No consideration of the German overtures or of the speech of Lloyd-George was taken into account in the formulation of the document The only thing the overtures did was to delay it a few days. It was not decided to send it until Monday Of course, the difficulties that face the president were that it might be construed as a movement toward peace and in aid of the German overtures. He specifically denies that that was the fact in the document itself"

Secretary Lansing said further·

"The sending of this note will indicate the possibility of our being forced into the war That possibility ought to serve as a restraining and sobering force safeguarding American rights It may also serve to force an earlier conclusion of the war Neither the president nor myself regard this note as a peace note. it is merely an effort to get the belligerents to define the end for which they are fighting."

At the White House no effort was made to lessen the importance of Secretary Lansing's statement President Wilson would make no comment

President Wilson himself on several occasions has noted that the danger of the United States becoming involved in the war because of violations of American rights he has felt that the United States has a difficult role to fill

Washington Dec 21 Secretary Lansing late today issued a statement amplifying and qualifying the one he made this morning regarding the president's notes to the belligerents because he said he feared some incorrect inferences were being drawn from his first utterance

Secretary Lansing said his purpose in making the second statement was to make it clear beyond question that there was no change in the policy of neutrality of the United States

Officials and diplomatists here analyzing the president's note even before Lansing's statement saw something deeper than an appeal for consideration of peace terms They see that the president in acting was also considering what would have to be the course of the United States to conserve its interests as a neutral if the war is to continue

U. S. Policy Involved.

Coupled with the president's recent declaration that the position of neutrals was becoming intolerable, they attach much significance to his statement in the note that his suggestion comes from a neutral whose interests have been most seriously affected by the war, and whose concern for its early conclusion arises out of a manifest necessity to determine how best to safeguard those interests if the war is to continue"

In German quarters the conviction that the president's action would surely lead to some sort of a consideration of peace terms was expressed in the following authorized statement by Count Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador.

"Now, I am perfectly convinced that there will be a conference"

Despite the fact that President Wilson's notes state specifically and unreservedly that he is not proposing peace, he is not even offering mediation, they are regarded here as of such a nature as will compel all belligerents to make more of a reply than a mere acknowledgement of receipt

Diplomats Surprised.

British embassy officials made no attempt to conceal their surprise at the president's action They are not alone, however, for all official Washington had been led by officials to believe that the president in transmitting the German peace proposals without comment had taken all the action that was to be expected from the United States for some time to come unless there was some unforeseen development in world affairs The secrecy with which the preparation of the notes and their dispatch was surrounded was complete and nothing was known about them until they were well on their way to the belligerent capitals

League of Nations.

The definite proposal of the United States for 'a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world' is interpreted as a step which, if carried through would mean the abandonment of the theory of "splendid isolation," which Washington bequeathed to the country Significance is attached to the fact that the president uses the word 'insure' rather than "enforce' as indicating that he has not committed himself to any one program to accomplish that end, but that he is open to what ever suggestions may seem best to the other world nations

Repeated efforts have been made to enlist the American government in some sort of international agreement involving responsibility, but always the answer has been the United States would stand alone Several months ago President Wilson spoke most earnestly before the League to Enforce Peace of his hope that the United States would join in some new international arrangements but not until now is he known to have made the proposal officially to the nations of the world It is thought here that along those lines President Wilson's note will find its most ready reception abroad for all parties have indicated their belief that the war will have been in vain unless from it come guarantees against its repetition Former Foreign Minister Sir Edward Grey for England, Premier Briand for France and Chancellor Von Bethmann Hollweg for Germany have all committed their nations to some sort of international reorganization to secure the ends laid down in the president's note and the effect of the central powers together with Lloyd-George's speech in reply have accentuated that purpose

Procedure in Doubt.

As yet however the actual procedure that may be adopted appears uncertain Germany apparently has given up her earlier opposition to disarmament which nearly split the second Hague conference No official statement has come from either England or France on this subject in the present circumstances It was England however, at The Hague conference, seconded by France and the United States, that insisted on stating its view in favor of disarmament

Deepest interest centered today in the probable time and form of the belligerents replies

It is assumed that the members of each group of allies will consult one another and agree on a uniform statement of views but whether that statement will be joint identical or different in each case is not known The solidarity which has been so strikingly shown both by the central powers' identical proposals and the allies practically simultaneous responses is expected to be continued here It is thought also that some time may elapse before the different groups can settle down to an actual agreement on terms to be presented in case it is decided to heed the president's request by going into them fully

Meanwhile the allied entente's response to the central powers proposals are expected almost any time for transmission through this country to their various destinations

Mr. Wilson's Views

In a speech at Pittsburgh last January he said

When you know that there are combustible materials in the life of the world and in your own national life, and that the sky is full of floating sparks from a great conflagration, are you going to sit down and say it will be time when the fire begins to do something about it I do not believe the fire is going to begin but I would be sure of it if we were ready for the fire

I want to come as your responsible servant and tell you this that we do not control the fire We are under the influences of it, but we are not at the sources of it We are where it at any time may affect us and yet we cannot govern its spread and progress'

Again at Cleveland, Ohio, the president declared

"Two-thirds of the world are at war. It is not merely an European struggle nations in the Orient have become involved as well as nations in the west, and every where there seems to be creeping upon the nations disengaged the spirit and the threat of war All the world outside of America is on fire

In Scotland 2½ per cent of illuminating gas is made in municipal works to 51 4 per cent in Ireland and 30 6 per cent in England
